Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire on behalf of the committee to offer a number of amendments to House bill No. 11045. The great majority of them are intended to correct printer's errors. With one exception they are all formal and verbal. There is but one that changes the import of a section, and that one I will point out when it is reached. I offer these amendments now so as to get them out of the way as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman will perfect his bill.

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend the first section according to the amendments I send to the desk.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether it is necessary to amend this bill as it is read by sections, or whether we can offer amendments to any portion of it?

The SPEAKER. An amendment can be offered to any portion of it.

The first amendment offered by Mr. LODGE was read, as follows:

Section 1: Strike out all after the enacting clause as far as and including the word "naturalization," in line 19, and insert to read as follows: "That the chief supervisors of elections now in office, their successors, and such supervisors of elections as may hereafter be appointed under any law of the United States, are charged in their respective judicial districts and in such Congressional districts the majority of the counties of which are within their judicial districts, both in person and by and through the supervisors of election who may from time to time be appointed, with the supervision of elections at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are voted for, with the enforcement of the national election laws, and with the prevention of frauds and irregularities in naturalization. In such Congressional districts where the counties are equally divided in number between two judicial districts or where they are within more than two judicial districts, that chief supervisor of elections is charged with duty hereunder in whose judicial district there shall be the counties which, by the last national census, contained the greatest number of inhabitants."

Mr. LODGE. This amendment simply recasts the first section, making the language more explicit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "mentioned," in line 5, section 2, insert "places."

Mr. LODGE. This amendment simply supplies a word omitted by a typographical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "parishes," in line 26, section 2, down to and including the word "residence," in line 30, and insert the following: "Petitioning him to take such action as may be requisite to secure such supervision therein as is provided by the laws of the United States. Every person making application for such supervision shall subscribe the same and state his place of residence."

Mr. LODGE. This is simply a verbal change.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to move an amendment to this amendment?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The understanding, I believe, is that the gentleman in charge of the bill shall offer these amendments and that afterwards we shall offer our amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can that be done?

The SPEAKER. No doubt that can be done if such is the arrangement.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to permitting the gentleman from Illinois to offer an amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If it is agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I think it better that he should first offer the amendments to perfect the bill and then allow us to offer ours.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "appointed," in line 14, section 5, strike out "such number," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for the city or town, for the county or parish, or for the entire Congressional district, such number of supervisors of election."

Mr. LODGE. That merely makes the language more exact.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "officers," in line 13 of section 8, strike out all down to and including the word "duties," in line 17, and insert the following: "under sections 2017 to 2020, both inclusive, and section 2022 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and shall also perform and discharge the following duties, save where the performance of the same is herein confined to supervisors serving in cities or towns containing a designated population."

Mr. LODGE. This merely makes the provision specific by reference to the sections of the Revised States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Before the word "thousand," in line 74, section 8, strike out the word "five," and insert the word "twenty."

Mr. LODGE. This is to rectify a printer's error.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "registration," in line 121, section 8, strike out as far as and including the word "voted," and insert the following: "And shall show by proper marks who has voted and each kind of ballot each voter cast."

Mr. TRACEY. What is the meaning of that?

Mr. LODGE. This amendment simply defines more fully than is now expressed in the bill what the marks shall show.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How will it be possible for the supervisor to know what kind of ballot a man casts if he casts a secret ballot?

Mr. LODGE. He can not possibly know except in the case of an open ballot.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But this requires that he shall keep a register of the ballot and the kind of ballots.

Mr. LODGE. Of course he can not keep such a register if the ballot is secret.

Mr. HEMPHILL. You had better put in a qualifying provision, because otherwise the officer may be liable to the heavy penalties provided in another part of the bill. Under the language proposed he might feel called upon to look at every one of the ballots to determine what kind of a ballot it was.

Mr. LODGE. Of course this can not apply to a secret ballot and is not intended to do so. It has reference only to the open ballot.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, it is certainly essential that the provision be made clear, because this law is intended to take the place of the State laws.

Mr. LODGE. What suggestion would the gentleman make?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would suggest the insertion of the words, "where not in violation of the State laws."

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to accede to that.

Mr. FRANK. I think the gentleman had better leave the clause as it is.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the amendment may be read again.

Mr. LODGE. As there seems to be objection to this amendment, I will withdraw it and submit it to the minority of the committee before presenting it again to the House.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. I will also withdraw the two following amendments which are in the hands of the Clerk, because they all relate to the same subject and should be made to conform.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose," in line 135, section 8, insert "and forwarded to the chief supervisor of elections."

Mr. LODGE. That simply provides for forwarding the returns.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 8, after the word "having," in line 142, strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Section 9, line 26, strike out the words "third inspector" and insert the words "second supervisor."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. LODGE. The rest of the lines do not conform. The first correction which has been made was a misprint. The purpose is to have the ballot counted alternately by the officers, and it is necessary therefore in the twenty-eighth line to make it consistent to strike out "supervisor" and insert "inspector," and in the twenty-ninth line strike out "fourth inspector" and insert "third supervisor." That makes the alternation accurate.

I move this amendment, therefore, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, on page 19, strike out the word "supervisor" and insert the word "inspector." Also, in line 29, strike out "fourth inspector" and insert "third supervisor."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Section 10, line 19, strike out all after the word "elections," down to and including "taken," in line 22, and insert:

"The supervisors of election shall then count and canvass all such ballots, and shall make in duplicate a separate statement of the same, which shall be numbered, enveloped, and forwarded as provided in section 12 of this act for the statements therein contemplated; the ballots themselves shall upon being counted and canvassed be forthwith placed in envelopes, together with a statement showing the number of ballots in each envelope and the box in which they were found; the envelopes shall then be sealed and forwarded to the chief supervisor, who shall file them and tabulate the results of the same for the board of canvassers of that Congressional vote."

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it intended that the original ballots shall be taken possession of by the Government supervisor in all cases?

Mr. LODGE. These ballots provided for in this section are only those found in the wrong boxes, not in boxes where the Congressional vote is properly cast. They are now provided for in the law to be taken in that way. The only purpose of this amendment is to consolidate all that portion of it which relates to the returns under this head in making provision for dealing with such ballots. These lines are taken from that provision of the bill in section 12, found in the marginal notes and where provision is made for separate returns. It makes no change in the law in that respect.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how would it be where a ticket which is voted for a member of Congress is the same ticket printed on the same paper with all of the other officers?

Mr. LODGE. If they are printed on one ticket and all voted on one ticket, they do not pass into the hands of the supervisor.

Mr. MUTCHLER. But suppose they did get into the other box?

Mr. LODGE. But necessarily if they vote all the names on one ballot that vote must be in one box.

Mr. MUTCHLER. But let me illustrate: In Pennsylvania we vote in this way: We have the State, judicial, and county tickets separate. Now, at the head of a county ticket we vote for a member of Congress. Following his name on the ticket are the names of all of the county officers voted for in that election. There may be fifteen or twenty of these—

Mr. BUCKALEW. Including members of the Legislature?

Mr. MUTCHLER. Also including members of the Legislature.

Now, do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts if one of these tickets be found in the wrong box that the names of all of the other candidates for the other offices are to be put into this envelope and go through the course provided in this amendment?

Mr. LODGE. This provision does not change the law on that subject.

Mr. MUTCHLER. But suppose this ticket got into the wrong box?

Mr. LODGE. In that event I understand they are kept as evidence and testimony.

Mr. MUTCHLER. But the amendment does not so provide.

Mr. LODGE. They are kept simply as evidence and a separate return is made of them.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But they would be counted for the other officers, would they not?

Mr. LODGE. Of course. It does not interfere with the State count at all.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This amendment provides that these State tickets may be taken possession of by Federal officials?

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. This is simply a provision that, where there is more than one box and the tickets are found in the wrong box, certain of these tickets shall be forwarded as the amendment proposes; and in the event suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania a few moments ago that they shall be kept as evidence.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Although they may contain returns as to a dozen State officers?

Mr. LODGE. This does not interfere with the State count.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Let me ask the gentleman whether under this provision of the bill it would not remove from the custody of the courts in Pennsylvania the tickets that are found upon which a member of Congress has been voted for?

Mr. LODGE. If they are cast in the wrong box, then after they have been counted by the State's officers they are removed and preserved as evidence.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I do not see how it makes any difference whether they are in the wrong box or in the right box.

Mr. LODGE. If they are not in the wrong box the supervisors do not take them.

Mr. MUTCHLER. The voters who voted for the county officers are disfranchised to that extent.

Mr. VAUX. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. HERBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this question: Suppose there are ten boxes for ten different officers, and that some enthusiastic friend of a candidate for Congress should put a ticket for the same candidate for Congress in each one of those ten boxes. Under this bill would you count all those 10 votes cast by the same person as votes for the same candidate?

Mr. LODGE. They would not be counted; they would simply be preserved—

Mr. HERBERT. How would you prevent it under this bill?

Mr. LODGE. If the gentleman will allow me to finish my sentence. They would not be counted by the supervisor. What the State officers would do with them would be governed by the State law. The supervisors would make a separate return of those votes cast in other boxes and file those ballots as part of the evidence of that return.

Mr. HERBERT. Then the board of canvassers, finding them returned separately, would count them? They would be counted by the United States canvassers.

Mr. LODGE. They would be returned in a separate return as so many votes in other boxes than the Congressional box.

Mr. HERBERT. But would they not get counted as so many votes cast by mistake for the candidate for Congress, which ought to be counted?

Mr. LODGE. They would return them as so many votes cast for the candidate for Congress in other than the Congressional box.

Mr. HERBERT. How would they ascertain whether they ought to be counted or not?

Mr. LODGE. That would be a question for the board of canvassers to pass upon, if it was an entire Congressional district. It is simply a question of preserving the evidence in regard to such matters that this law undertakes to cover.

Mr. HERBERT. But you preserve the evidence in order that you may count the votes, and it seems to me in a case of that kind you would count all 10 of those votes which might have been cast by the same man for the same candidate.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Exactly.

Mr. HERBERT. And there is nothing in your bill to prevent it.

Mr. CHEADLE. I understand that where ballots are found in the wrong box the supervisor shall take the custody of them.

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

Mr. CHEADLE. The question I wish to propound is, how will this bill meet the emergency which exists in the State of Indiana? Heretofore in Indiana we have voted for our State and county officers upon one ticket, but by the provisions of the new law we vote upon two tickets and in two boxes.

One of the tickets is a State ticket, and upon that are the names of all the State officers. Upon the other ticket, known as the county ticket, at the head of it is the name of the candidate for member of Congress, and on that are the judicial officers, the legislative officers, and the county officers. I would like to know by what authority we can enact a law here to take away the evidence, on a recount, of the election of county officers in the State of Indiana, under the election law of the State of Indiana, in conformity to the State law.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is just one of the iniquities of this law. You will get a great many more of them as you go along.

Mr. MUTCHLER. As I said before, in the State of Pennsylvania we vote but three tickets, the State ticket, the judicial ticket, and the county ticket. Those three tickets are separate. They are all voted for in the same box, but in different compartments. Now do I understand by this bill that if a county ticket which is headed by the name of a candidate for member of Congress should be found in the wrong compartment of that box the ticket can be taken out and removed from the custody of the court?

Mr. LODGE. If the whole box is a Congressional box, legally, to receive the Congressional votes, of course not.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Why do you not answer the question?

Mr. MUTCHLER. That is not an answer to the question.

Mr. LODGE. If you call each compartment a separate box, then those ballots in the wrong box would be taken as evidence. I will say to my friend that they would not be destroyed, but simply filed in a different place.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Under your bill, then, not only the ticket for member of Congress, but the ticket containing the names of all the county officers would be taken out of the box and removed from the county.

Mr. LODGE. If placed in the wrong box—

Mr. MUTCHLER. If placed in the wrong box.

Mr. LODGE. If placed in the wrong box and printed on the same ticket with the names of the county and State officers, they would be filed in the supervisor's office as part of the evidence.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Where is the authority to authorize the United States to do that, to take away from the State its own tickets for its own officials and carry them out of the jurisdiction of the State?

Mr. LODGE. If the gentleman wishes to open up a constitutional argument, I shall be glad to go into it, but I would like to have more time than five minutes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would be glad for the gentleman to have an opportunity to answer that question.

Mr. HERBERT. Why is it proposed to preserve those votes as evidence unless it is intended to use that evidence by counting those votes?

Mr. LODGE. The purpose is simply to make it entirely public, to show that those votes were cast. The supervisors do not count those votes. All the supervisors undertake to count are the Congressional votes cast in the proper box.

Mr. HERBERT. If you do not propose to count the votes, why do you preserve them?

Mr. LODGE. They are returned to show the exact state of facts. Then they are to be counted or not, as they should be.

Mr. TARSNEY. Who has to decide whether they are to be counted or not?

Mr. MUTCHLER. Does not the provision of that bill render it impossible to ascertain whether there was any fraud in the voting of the county ticket by taking the tickets away?

Mr. LODGE. Why not? These are filed and are a matter of public evidence.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Filed where?

Mr. LODGE. Preserved in the circuit court or in the office of the chief supervisor.

Mr. MUTCHLER. How are we to get them?

Mr. LODGE. Just as you do in any other matter of getting papers.

Mr. MUTCHLER. How is a court at another place to get them from the circuit court?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Especially in view of the fact that the circuit court of the United States may be in another State?

Mr. LODGE. They are matters of public record, open to inspection at all times.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Well, but we must have the ticket.

Mr. LODGE. The original ticket?

Mr. MUTCHLER. The original ticket. The name of the voter is written on opposite that number on the tally-sheet.

Mr. LODGE. You can get a copy of the record.

Mr. MUTCHLER. A copy! A copy will not do.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like the gentleman to have time to answer a question. By what authority does the Federal Government take away from the State government the evidence of an election held under the State laws for county officers?

Mr. LODGE. It takes them into its custody. It does not destroy them. They are kept on file. I can see no reason why you can not require the supervisor to bring in his record as you can in any other case.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am asking for any constitutional authority for your supervisor to do that.

Mr. LODGE. There is absolute power in the United States to do precisely what it likes about elections.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Of my county?

Mr. LODGE. No; but in elections of members of Congress.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But not as to county officers.

Mr. LODGE. Then detach your county elections from Congressional elections. The remedy is easy.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have not gotten the gentleman from Maine to cite a constitutional authority for the United States to take these elections away from under our State laws.

Mr. TARSNEY. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts would not that destroy your Australian system you have in Massachusetts where there is only one box?

Mr. LODGE. There is only one box. You have got one ticket and one box—a Congressional box—there, and the ballot is deposited in that box.

Mr. TARSNEY. Your suggestion to detach these elections destroys your Australian ballot system.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. Not at all.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I endeavored to point out to the House the other day, Mr. Speaker, when I had the honor to submit some remarks, that this proposed law constantly comes in conflict with the laws of various States of the Union. The States of Indiana, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania require that the State tickets shall be preserved in the box in which they were cast.

Mr. MANSUR. And Missouri.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And Missouri, and other States of the Union. They are to be preserved as evidence to be used in any contest or for any purpose that the State may see fit, and it lays heavy penalties upon the State officers for not doing it. This bill requires that these tickets, if they contain the name of a candidate for Congress, shall be taken off and disposed of in a particular way, and lays a very heavy penalty on the supervisor who refuses or neglects to do so.

Now, I submit to the gentlemen who live in States of that kind how will it be possible to do one thing with a ticket in conflict with the State law in order to avoid a penalty of the State law? It is impossible to carry out the provisions of this bill in conformity with both the State laws and the laws of the United States, and it subjects the State officers and the United States officers to heavy punishment in case they do not do two things, when those two things are absolutely opposed to each other. I do not think it is worth while to consume a great deal of time on this amendment. It is one of the many collisions that must necessarily be between this bill and the laws of the various States of this Union. There is one section of the bill which says that every ticket on which there is the name of a candidate for Congress, no matter where it is found—and that does not exactly conform with the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts—shall be counted, whereas the State law says that they shall not be counted unless they conform to certain regulations provided in the State law.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me also call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the fact that he is mistaken when he says these ballots are simply to be preserved as evidence. His own amendment, which he has just now sent up, and which I have this moment read, provides that all those ballots, found in all these boxes, shall be canvassed, counted, and tabulated, and the returns made to the State canvassers.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. Then how can you tell how many votes have been cast by one man for one candidate? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the constitutional right of Congress to enact a law governing and controlling the election of Representatives of this body; but, standing here in my place as a Representative of the Ninth district of Indiana, I do deny the authority of this Congress to enact a law that will authorize the supervisors or any other officers of this Government to go into our district and take possession of the tickets that are cast by the electors of that district for the various judicial county and legislative officers of the district at an election held in conformity to the laws of the State of Indiana.

I deny the right of this body to authorize these Federal officers to take those tickets, which are the highest and the only evidence by which we can have a recount under our State law, or conduct contests. I deny, I say, the authority of this Congress to come in by its agents and take possession of those tickets which are the only evidence of the fact that the electors in the various counties composing the district have selected certain persons to represent them or to serve them in the various local offices of that State. I want to vote for this bill because I believe in honest elections. I believe that all the Congressional elections ought to be under the authority of Congress itself, but this point suggests to my mind the view that we ought so to amend this bill as to provide that the votes for members of Congress shall be kept separate and apart from the votes cast for the State, judicial, and county officers.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I suppose the gentleman will concede that either the Federal law or the State law must be supreme. The Constitution of the United States, Article VI, provides:

That this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.

Now, I submit that if we enact this law and it comes into conflict with any State law, then the law made by Congress, if it be a constitutional law (and I understand the gentleman to concede that point), must be the supreme and effective law of the land.

Mr. CHEADLE. I deny the conclusion which the gentleman reaches. The Government of the United States recognizes the autonomy of the States, but it knows nothing at all about the subdivisions of those States into counties and townships. The Government does not seek to interfere in the least with the administration of the various local governments, and I appeal to this side of the Chamber to see to it, in the preparation of a bill of such importance as this, that no unnecessary conflict is raised between the authorities of the General Government and the authorities of the States. It is not necessary. We can amend this law so that it shall be applicable to elections for Congressmen and to those alone.

But, standing as I do in the presence of so many able and distinguished lawyers upon both sides of this Chamber, I venture to say there is not a man upon this floor who will contend for a moment that we have a right to go into the State of Indiana, or the State of Kentucky, or the State of New York, or the State of Tennessee, and take possession of the tickets cast by the voters of those States for the various county, judicial, and State officers. It can not be done without trampling under foot the fundamental principles of our system of local government. It can not be done without an unwarranted interference by the National Government with those rights which belong under the Constitution to the States.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] may have thirty minutes, if he wants them, to explain the authority by which the Federal Government can take possession of county and State tickets.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. LODGE; and the Speaker declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. LODGE. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I think gentlemen do not understand that by voting down my amendment they do not alter the provision of the bill in this respect. That is all in the bill now.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us vote down the bill then.

Mr. LODGE. Well, try it and see how you get on. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we are going to deal with this question at all the better way is to put the provision in the best possible shape and then come to a square vote on the question of the preservation of these ballots by the supervisors. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment, but if it is voted down that will be equally satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the declaration of the result was interrupted solely under the idea that the gentleman from Massachusetts desired to demand a further count.

Mr. LODGE. I did intend to ask for a division. I ask for it now.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. LODGE; and there were—ayes 104, yeas 113.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. LODGE and Mr. HEMPHILL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 117, yeas 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, section 12, line 4, strike out all after the word "Congress" down to and including the word "canvass" in line 5, and insert the following words: "as are found in the Congressional box."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, the amendment/s in this section, this one and those that follow it between line 1 and line 23, are intended to make the section conform to the amendment which has been just voted down. I therefore withdraw all these amendments because they would have no point or object, the preceding one having been voted down.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether any of these amendments which have been suggested affect in any way the provision of the bill which requires that certain ballots shall be attached to the return of the supervisors as sent up, because that provision conflicts with the State law which requires the preservation of the ballots at home.

Mr. LODGE. The bill simply requires specimen ballots.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I know, but it requires one ballot of each kind to be taken from the ballot-box.

Mr. LODGE. These amendments do not touch that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then you have no amendment upon that point?

Mr. LODGE. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 56, section 12, after the word "mail," insert "in cities or towns in which is located the office of the chief supervisor of elections, all such envelopes shall, if the chief supervisor shall so direct, be personally delivered at such office by such supervisor or other officer as the chief supervisor shall designate."

Mr. LODGE. This simply allows the envelopes containing the statements and certificates to be delivered in cities by messengers instead of by mail, if the chief supervisor shall so determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, section 13, after the word "presentation," in line 13, insert the word "to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, section 15, after the word "day" in line 33, insert the following words: "and to give public notice of the place and the hour of their meeting."

Mr. LODGE. This simply provides that the board of canvassers shall give notice of their meeting.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, section 15, after the word "furnished," in line 64, insert "as herein provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 65, after the word "supervisors," strike out the words "as provided in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 85, after the word "thereat," insert the following: "who shall be paid $5 a day for his attendance."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, section 16, line 12, after the word "of," strike out the word "the" and insert the word "said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 33, line 14, strike out the word "rolls" and insert the word "roll."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 33, line 15, strike out the word "erected" and insert the word "elected."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, section 19, line 7, strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof "five."

Several MEMBERS. What is that?

Mr. LODGE. It confines this provision to cities of 500,000 inhabitants, instead of 100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 24, after the word "served," insert the following: "shall make a similar comparison with the records of his office and make similar certificate as to the period of service of the several special deputies."

Mr. LODGE. This is simply a means of getting at the service more accurately, requiring a certificate to be filed of the number of days that the officers have served.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 26, after the word "district," insert "for the days they are certified to have served."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 26, before the word "service," strike out "their" and insert in lieu thereof "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 39, section 20, line 33, after the word "place," insert "in his judicial district."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 33, after the word "resides," insert the words "or does business."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 40, section 27, line 49, strike out "therefore."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 56, strike out the words "at once" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forthwith."

The amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to, there being, ayes 116, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 68, before the word "certification," strike out "their" and insert the words "the form of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 50, line 68, strike out the words "and their" and insert "or to."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 53, section 32, line 9, strike out the word "purport" and insert "substance."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 54, line 14, strike out the word "purport" and insert the word "substance."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 54, line 21, strike out the following words: "The same" and insert the word "like."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 54, line 22, strike out the word "it" and insert "this act."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 54, line 23, strike out the words "the same shall be" and insert "such sections are in terms."

Mr. HEARD. I do not understand the purport of that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment is merely verbal. It proposes to strike out the words "the same shall be" and uses words descriptive of the sections; so that the provision shall read:

Save as such sections are in terms changed or modified, etc.

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 54, line 24, strike out the word "terms," and insert "provisions."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 56, section 34, line 9, strike out the word "such" and insert "all."

Mr. ADAMS. I suppose that these amendments are merely formal and that the various sections may be recurred to to-morrow; but I desire now to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to what I think ought to be changed in this section. It provides in substance that a label shall be affixed to the second ballot-box in order to inform the voter whether he is depositing his ballot in the Congressional, or in the judicial, or other local box. Of course, such a provision is unnecessary where only one box is held. Where I live only one box is held; and under our new law in Illinois a provision like this might tend to defeat the purpose of the law; because our ballot-box, adopted, I think, from New York, has a glass front, to enable the voter to see his ballot as it descends into the interior of the box. Of course a label on the box would tend to defeat the object of that law; and if in any place in this country more than one box is used at an election, while at the same time this particular kind of ballot-box is used, some such change ought to be made in the language of this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is nothing, I believe, pending, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be disposed of so that the minority of the committee may submit their amendments.

The amendment of Mr. LODGE was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 56, line 19, after the word "officers," insert the following words: "National, State, Territorial, or local."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not understand the purpose of that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Simply to define what is meant by election officers. Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does this require a duty on the part of the State officers?

Mr. LODGE. Of any election officer where a Congressional election is held.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Any officers, State or general?

Mr. LODGE. If the election is conducted under national laws. It has been held by the Supreme Court that these parties are United States officers so far as that election is concerned.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I only wanted to observe that that feature of the law, even if it passes, will not be observed in Ohio.

Mr. KELLEY. In all parts of Ohio?

Mr. TRACEY. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that that conflicts directly with the present law in New York.

Mr. LODGE. These words are simply to define what is meant by the term "election officers," and impose on them the duties of this section.

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 67, section 47, line 1, after the word "election," insert the words "supervisor of election."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Same page and section, in line 6, after the word "of," insert the words "the United States or of."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. LODGE. The Clerk has now read the various amendments that I have sent up. I have one more, and the last which I submit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 25, section 15, page 31, by substituting for the words "so long as faithful and capable," the following words: "For two years or until their successors are appointed and qualified."

Mr. LODGE. This makes it definite instead of indefinite.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. LODGE. That is the last of the amendments.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is it in order now to offer an amendment to any section of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is in order, but the Chair purposes to recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] who desires to offer amendments to the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then I offer this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 by striking out all after the fifth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "The chief supervisor of election for each judicial district of the United States shall take such action as is requisite to secure such supervision in every Congressional district as is provided by the laws of the United States."

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the meaning of this?

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand the purport of that amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, the purport of this amendment is merely to strike out the first, second, and third paragraphs of section 2 and to make the law apply uniformly throughout this whole country. If it is desirable that the power of the National Government be invoked in Congressional elections, let the law be made so that it can be applied in every district of the country. Let its execution not depend on the petition of fifty to one hundred men living or claiming to live in a district.

I believe that if this amendment is adopted it will not be considered so obnoxious in those sections of our country where the people now feel that, if this bill is passed, it is meant to operate especially against them. If it is applied uniformly the charge that is made by some that it is intended as sectional legislation falls to the ground, and I hope that every Democrat and every Republican on this floor will see his way clear to vote for this amendment. If adopted it will at least remove that tinge of unfairness which many claim now taints this measure.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, for eighteen years or more we have had the supervision by petition, as is provided for in this bill. We get supervision by petition in this bill as we have been in the habit of getting it, and the purpose of the bill is to supervise elections where people believe that frauds are committed, and it is not the purpose of the bill to supervise elections where people do not believe that frauds are committed. The proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey is simply to change entirely the supervision system which is working so well now in this country, and which is not, except for political purposes, exciting any hostility. That is all I desire to say, Mr. Speaker. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman states but half the truth when he says that for a number of years we have had such supervision as is provided for in this bill. The supervision that we have had has applied only in the cases of cities with 20,000 inhabitants or more. This bill provides that the supervision shall be throughout this whole country.

Mr. ROWELL. Will my friend permit me? Supervision under the present law is had in any town, in any county, or in any voting precinct in the United States under petition.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But not with the obnoxious provisions of innumerable deputy marshals, not with the provisions that this bill contains. Now, do gentlemen upon that side of the floor assume that they and their people are all so virtuous that they should not be subjected to any form of law?

Do gentlemen assume that it is fair or proper that the law shall be applied in some parts of this country and that it shall not be applicable to every district of this country alike? This bill, in its provision of application by petition, is one which places in the hands of fifty or one hundred of the very worst citizens of the district the opportunity to overturn the State law, the opportunity to place the whole district under the supervision of themselves to some degree, and I speak from knowledge when I say that the men who were appointed under the Federal supervision heretofore in the State of Ohio were not the best citizens. Men were appointed that were ex-convicts, murderers, foot-pads, burglars, and other criminals were selected to administer the Federal law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That was the occasion of the Randall bill which restricted the number of marshals.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I want to know if one of them was Mike Mullin, who was convicted of election frauds and pardoned out by President Cleveland.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That does not alter the case. Perhaps he ought not to have been pardoned. Your President has pardoned criminals and so has the Democratic President; but I do not know of any occasion for putting that in here as an objection to the proposition that I make, that it places the district in the hands of fifty or one hundred of the worst citizens that there may be in the district, for the purpose of filling their own pockets with the money that is provided for in this bill. Let us have a general election law. Let us all go upon the same plane and upon the same footing. If there is no fraud in our districts there will be no harm done; but let the people all have the opportunity to see how your election law works.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My colleague [Mr. OUTHWAITE] did not hear the question of my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] or he would see that it was very pertinent to the subject-matter. The question asked by my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] was whether Mike Mullen was one of the gentlemen he spoke about as having committed frauds in Ohio.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am not acquainted with Mike Mullen. The gentleman, perhaps, is better acquainted with Mike Mullen than I am. I do not know who he is, except that he was convicted and sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will tell the gentleman who Mike Mullen is. And within a year the gentleman, if he attended the convention of his party, sat in a Democratic convention in Ohio when Mike Mullen was chairman of a great delegation of that convention, Mike Mullen the convict.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I deny the correctness of that statement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman may not have been at the Dayton convention. Mike Mullen was convicted in the United States court at Cincinnati for frauds upon the election in that State, for having captured and taken prisoners one hundred and fifty-seven colored men and shut them up in a cellar of a station-house forty-eight hours without bread or water. He was a police officer and he took advantage of his position. He did it criminally and viciously.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. How many of those colored men had been brought over from Kentucky to vote in the State of Ohio and how many of them ought to have been arrested for that reason?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The record of the United States court shows that every one of them was a legal voter, and no one denies it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I deny it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will you keep still?

Mr. SPRINGER. I deny it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I want no opportunity for any Mike Mullens to interfere with the elections of the people.

Mr. HEMPHILL addressed the Chair.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Wait a moment. I have not gotten through with Mike Mullen. I have not surrendered the floor to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not mean to take him off the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I have not surrendered the floor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not desire to take the gentleman off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. After having been convicted and sentenced to a year's confinement in jail and after having gone into jail, upon the recommendation of Governor Hoadley of Ohio and of the leading Democrats of that section of the State Mike Mullen was pardoned by Grover Cleveland and was at once reassigned upon the police force of Cincinnati and made a lieutenant of police. To-day he is one of the leading and most influential Democrats of Hamilton County [applause on the Republican side] and a member of the State central committee, as I am told.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is he any better or any worse than some of those deputy marshals I have spoken of?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will give me the names I will inform him. Perhaps there were convicts appointed by the court of Cincinnati, but I do not believe it.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Is that the general condition of society in Ohio? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the difference between the state of society in Ohio and the bulldozers of Mississippi is that we convict ours and you do not convict yours. [Applause on the Republican side.] You elect them to be the sheriff in the counties in which they have committed the crime, as in the case of the murderer of Chisholm.

Mr. STOCKDALE. We do not. Whenever the White Caps of your State commit crimes your governor pardons them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know of no such case, nor does the gentleman from Mississippi know of any such case, and I assert no White Cap was ever pardoned by any Ohio governor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill to the whole country, and if we undertake to air all the rascality of all the bad men of this country, we will spend all our time in discussing that and keep away from the consideration of the measure that is before us. Now, if the people in Ohio, and it is certainly a civilized State, are all that is said about them by gentlemen on both sides, it shows the necessity of the universal application of this matter. If we are to have it settled, if it is universally conceded that one set of people in the United States are to be put under the operation of this law, all should bear the same burden or enjoy the same benefit. I call for the previous question on the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 185) to provide temporarily for the expenses of the Government.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments numbered 2, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the request for a further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. GORMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which concurrence was requested, the bill (H. R. 10716) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the agricultural appropriation bill and that it ask for a conference.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do hope that, in view of the fact that we have passed a resolution continuing the appropriations, these other matters will not be taken up here that will consume time.

Mr. FUNSTON. It will not take up as much time as the gentleman is occupying in speaking.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 10716) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, be taken up, and that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FUNSTON. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask that a committee of conference be appointed. The motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL ELECTION BILL.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. HEMPHILL (to Mr. LODGE). Does the gentleman from Massachusetts want any time?

Mr. LODGE. I will take twenty minutes after the previous question is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. There has already been debate, and if the previous question is ordered that cuts off further debate.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question and on division there were—ayes 113, noes 120.

So the House refused to order the previous question.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, this amendment, as will be readily seen by all, is a vital amendment, changing the entire principle of the bill. I personally believe in an election law which would have taken Congressional elections entirely into the hands of the United States, and made it uniform and compulsory in every district, establishing the secret official ballot, and have made it in fact what this bill is wrongfully called, a Federal election law. If you are going to have a supervisory law like this, if you are going to content yourselves with the supervision of elections, there is no need of making supervision compulsory.

The argument that this bill is sectional is obviously fallacious. Every district can have it by asking for it. Therefore it is perfectly uniform. It does not apply to any specific district. No district can have it unless one hundred of its citizens desire it; but any district can have it where one hundred of its citizens desire it. It is perfectly fair. It gives every district an opportunity to have the law applied, and in that it is uniform throughout the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are districts where there is a sufficient body of citizens who believe elections are not fair, there is no reason in the world why that district should not be supervised; and the one next to it, where no man of either party thinks there is fraud, should be left unsupervised.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman permit a question.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. Is it not the provision of the bill that if one hundred voters, citizens of one county, petition for this supervision it will extend all through the Congressional district?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; if one hundred citizens of the district petition for it. Of course it makes no matter where they live in the district.

Mr. OATES. They may all live in one county, and there may be a dozen or more counties in the district, in several of which there is no suspicion or allegation of anything improper in the election; yet if one hundred voters, citizens of one county, petition for it, the supervision extends all through the district.

Mr. LODGE. That does not affect the fact that the petition is signed by one hundred citizens of the district who believe there is need of supervision. It can be asked for in every district; if need be, asked for in none. It is only where it is believed that supervision is necessary that it will be asked for. If you change the bill as proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] you convert this into a stringent national election law or nearly that. The change would do much to make it a stringent election law, and yet you would not get the advantages that you would have if you had a pure national election law. Because there is a plague spot in one place there is no reason why you should not deal with that alone or why you should be required to apply your remedies to other places where there is no disease.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not true that under this bill, if it should become a law, if there were forty thousand citizens in a district and thirty-nine thousand nine hundred of them were opposed to the interposition of this supervision, and only the other one hundred favored it, the one hundred could force it upon the thirty-nine thousand nine hundred?

Mr. LODGE. There is no question about that. That is plain on the face of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman think that honest elections can be secured by the interposition of persons who may constitute the very worst elements of society? If you must invoke this law by petition, why not submit the petition to some sort of judicial authority to determine whether the facts or alleged facts exist or not?

Mr. LODGE. You can not undertake to discriminate between citizens.

Mr. SPRINGER. One hundred of the worst citizens of a Congressional district can secure the application of this law to the whole district. I can not see the necessity of submitting this beautiful machinery to the decision of a mob.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I have refrained from having anything to say on this bill thus far, because I am satisfied it is intended to be an intensely partisan, sectional measure, and I have felt that whatever I might say would be looked upon as coming from a Southern source, and therefore would have but little weight with our friends on the other side. But when we come to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] I think we have reached a point at which it is proper to say, in the language of the old adage, that "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." Now, gentlemen, if you have framed this bill to supervise Southern elections—and God knows and you know that that is the whole intent of it—I say let it be made a national bill, so that it will apply from one end of the country to the other. Let it not apply at the behest of one hundred of the worst citizens in my district or any other Congressional district.

I represent a district that I am proud to represent, a district which holds as free and fair elections as are held in Illinois, in Massachusetts, or anywhere else in this Union, a district where every man, white or black, goes to the polls and casts an untrammelled ballot, and yet under the existing law I have seen the usurpation and the villainy that have been practiced by supervisors and deputy marshals selected from the thugs and the cut-throats of my district who have fomented discord and brought on strife. This bill proposes to carry that system into every district south of Mason and Dixon's line. Now, I say, let this law, if it is to pass, be made of general application. Let it apply to every district in Massachusetts and in Illinois; let it apply in Chicago, and let the people there feel the conflict that arises between the Federal authority and the local authorities and local laws under this system.

Let this law be made obnoxious by its enforcement, and, gentlemen, although you may push it through now under the gag of the party lash and caucus dictation, I tell you the time will come when it will be wiped from the statute-book. We can live under it if you can, but for God's sake do not stir up strife in this country with a partisan measure like this. If you pass such a law at all, make it national, as you so loudly proclaim on every public occasion all Republican measures are and must be. Make it a fair law, one which will apply to all alike. We will take our part of the medicine with you; we can stand it if you can. But do not leave it in the power of one hundred designing men in any one county out of the seven that I represent to go before a Federal judge to carry the matter to the city of Nashville—

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Speaker announced as House conferees on the agricultural appropriation bill Mr. FUNSTON, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. HATCH.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, the speech of my friend [Mr. WASHINGTON] reminds me of the fact that it is the wicked who flee when no man pursueth. Now, this bill applies to every part of the country alike—

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. If my friend will wait until I complete one sentence, I will thank him. [Laughter.] This law will apply, as I have said, to every portion of the country alike. I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAUX] said the other day that if this bill became a law the first thing they would do would be to have it applied in Maine, that they were going to have one hundred Democrats in Maine petition to have it applied there. Let me say to my friend that we shall be only too glad to have it applied in Maine whenever they get ready to apply it, because in that State we have a pure ballot and an honest count. [Derisive cries on the Democratic side.] That has been the history of our State, except in one instance, when a Democratic governor and council, who constituted the "returning board" there, sat down in the darkness of their chamber and counted out thirty-seven Republican representatives and not one Democrat, and turned the State over to the Democracy. They committed perjury, they committed forgery, they committed every crime in the catalogue—

Mr. ENLOE rose.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And I want to say to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], for his relief, that I have nothing to say especially against the South for crimes committed against the ballot-box, because the old Bourbon Democracy is the same wherever you find it; and not in his State, nor in South Carolina, nor in Mississippi, nor anywhere else where frauds are alleged to exist, have any meaner or more dishonest or more wicked frauds been committed than those committed by the old Bourbon Democracy in the State of Maine.

And it was only the hardy virtue of the people of Maine that prevented the wickedness from being consummated.

Mr. VAUX. Then why do you not make this bill universal, so as to apply to this terrible State that you talk about?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say to my friend that long ago the party of righteousness came into power there, and the matter has been amended. We have now no wounds to heal; and, if we had, there is no Democratic salve that would possibly apply to them.

Mr. VAUX. No, because it is a curative, and you are past cure. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. It may be a curative in your party to some extent; I am sorry it has not cured generally.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Unless there is some urgency on the part of gentlemen to speak further on this proposition I think we might as well come to a vote on it. The question is simply whether this bill shall be of universal application. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment, so far as the gentleman from New Jersey is concerned, is, I believe, a sincere and honorable one. But the debate thus far on the other side has demonstrated that it is proposed to be carried, if at all, by those gentlemen for the purpose, in the first place, of emasculating the bill and, secondly, in order to make it unpopular and odious because of the power it will give unscrupulous men to entail additional expense in carrying on the elections. I do not suppose gentlemen will dispute for a moment the fact that there are Congressional districts in this country that need no such law as this compelling an honest count and liberty to all who have the right to vote. But to say that because they do not need it therefore we shall make no law to apply to those districts where it is not only needed, but where it is impossible to have a fair election without it, is to say that we shall have no fair elections at all.

In my own district—not largely Republican or Democratic—there never was a dishonest vote cast for a member of Congress. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] I repeat it, sir, no man of set of men in that district was ever charged with casting dishonest votes at national elections. Some townships in that district give 300 Democratic votes with not more than a score of Republican votes; but those Republican votes are always counted—counted by Democratic officials and counted fairly; they are not counted out. And in other townships there are three or four hundred Republican votes, with an insignificant number of Democratic votes; but no one ever finds the votes counted out. True, errors have been committed there as elsewhere, no doubt, but any attempt to defraud the voters would meet with effective disapproval regardless of politics; therefore no such law is needed there, and the effect of the amendment of my friend from New Jersey would compel the enforcement of the law where not needed, adding millions to the expense of such enforcement.

Gentlemen, if you will have fair elections and count the votes as cast, you will then do as scores and hundreds of other districts in this country are doing, and you will have no need to undertake to make this law unpopular by giving it into the power of unscrupulous men to add to the cost of its enforcement. That is your only, your sole object. When in any district of the North public sentiment becomes satisfied that there is corruption at the polls, the people will ask for the application of this law, and if it is not stringent enough they will ask for one more so. They will not wink at corruption, and fraud, and forgery, and bulldozing; they never have done so. What we want and demand is that in every part of the country there shall be fair elections. That is all we ask of you, and this it is our duty to demand and enforce by legislation.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] whether, if the bill be amended as he proposes, he will be satisfied with it and will vote for it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR], I will say that when I discussed this bill in my brief way the other day I gave two of the main reasons for my opposition to it. The fact that the bill does not apply uniformly throughout the Union was one of them. I shall exercise my right as a member on this floor to attempt to secure a correction of the unwise features of the bill wherever I see them and to offer such amendments as I deem necessary, leaving the question for the House to decide.

My own idea is that if this amendment be adopted it will take away the power of the Democratic party throughout the land to assail this bill as an unjust and sectional measure. As a Republican I desire to prevent that, and have therefore offered this amendment in good faith. I have already stated my reasons in support of such a proposition, and I do not care to go further into the discussion of the matter now. I believe that this bill, if passed, should be made universal in its application. At the same time I believe it is unnecessary to have this election law; and I have already so stated.

Mr. ENLOE. I suggest that the gentleman from New Jersey ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] whether there is any amendment that can be adopted to this bill that will prevent him from voting for it.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] I will say that if anything in this country stands in the way of fair elections and it is in our power to prevent it by the action of Congress I shall seek to have that power exercised in every instance.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that any law which may be enacted with reference to the election of members of Congress ought, if possible, to be made a national law, not sectional. I want to say to my Democratic colleagues from the South that, if it is true as charged on this side of the Chamber that by reason of preventing colored men from voting it is impossible for the public sentiment of the South to find proper expression on this floor, that charge of suppressing a fair expression of the voice of the people does not rest alone upon your shoulders, gentlemen of the South.

Standing here as a Representative of the State of Indiana I want to say to this House and to the country, and let it go upon record, that with one or two exceptions there can be found in no State in this Union a Republican constituency that is as nearly suppressed, in the expression of their opinions and sentiments on this floor, as the great Commonwealth of Indiana. In 1888 there were cast for members of Congress by the Republican electors of the State of Indiana 266,000 votes, and they were enabled to send to the Fifty-first Congress three members only. At the same election there were cast 261,100 Democratic votes, and upon the face of the returns they sent ten members here to speak for a minority of the voters of the State of Indiana.

I am in favor of the amendment offered by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] and hope it will prevail. I want to say here and now for the common people of the North that we want all these sectional prejudices and passions buried out of sight forever. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to say to my colleagues that the living issues which are presented for consideration to this Congress, if properly presented before the people of America, will win to us the Fifty-second Congress under existing laws. The Republican party stands in favor of a great national industrial policy that is bringing prosperity and blessings to the people of the South, the East, and the West; and if I vote for this measure, and if it is amended I shall vote for it, I want to provide for a national election law—I believe in it; I believe the language of the Constitution authorizes it—but if the law is enacted I want it to be applicable to the district I represent as well as to the district represented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill does that.

Mr. CHEADLE. I do not want to vote for any law that, in order to be made operative, must be petitioned for by a handful of citizens of any district in the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Standing here, I say if we enact a law, a national election law, let us enact a measure which will be applicable alike from Maine to Texas.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why is not this applicable from Maine to Texas, throughout the country?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is.

Mr. CHEADLE. It is not, unless it is petitioned for by one hundred or by fifty persons.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is applicable wherever it is needed, wherever they ask for it.

Mr. CHEADLE. Of course, I understand that; but if we enact a national election law let it be like the laws enacted by the States for the control of their elections. In the States we do not have to petition for the law.

Mr. BROSIUS. Why, in Pennsylvania any five men, by making application, can have supervisors selected.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And that is this law.

Mr. CHEADLE. That may be true, but in my State a law which is applicable to one portion of it is applicable to all parts alike and to every election precinct in the State, and does not require a petition to make it operative.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But suppose that nobody in either or any Congressional district of the State wants the law applied, why would you force it upon them?

Mr. CHEADLE. Simply because, if we enact a national election law, it should be applicable by its own provisions to every district alike, and every Representative who comes here should come under exactly the same title. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. This is applicable to all. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHEADLE. No; it is not applicable. It is not enforced unless petitioned for. It does not enforce itself. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOOTHMAN was recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has been recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I was on the floor demanding the right—

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Ohio has been recognized; and, besides, the House has voted down the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that does not mean we are going to talk forever.

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts not.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the purpose of those on either side of the floor who will vote in favor of this amendment is very clearly shadowed forth in the calm and, I may say, dispassionate utterance of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON]. [Laughter.] His desire is to make this law as obnoxious as possible. His purpose in voting for the amendment is to incorporate into the law that which in the end will work its repeal. Now, if it be true that there are districts in this country where there are frauds practiced at elections it ought to be within the mind of every patriotic citizen to endeavor to put down, to destroy, and suppress such frauds. The elective franchise is a part of the common heritage of our country, and if it be that there are districts where there is intimidation of the black people—or of any people—and no man can doubt that such exist or districts where votes are not counted as cast, it is the part of patriotism to endeavor to prevent such practices. But it not the part of patriotism to endeavor to destroy a measure calculated to reach that result.

Now, why make it applicable to every district more than it is? At present it is permissive. If the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is adopted it becomes mandatory and compulsory on districts throughout the country where these matters of fraud are not alleged or found to exist. In other words, the desire is on the part of gentlemen on the other side to destroy the law that is calculated to make elections pure, and not to uphold or seek to enforce the purity of the ballot-box.

It seems to me that this is no part of a patriotic duty. I will not impugn the motives of gentlemen who may be opposed to the law on the ground that they believe it unpatriotic. But, if their purpose is to load down the law, it seems to me that gentlemen on this side of the House ought to know when that purpose is developed in their presence, and vote down this amendment that has that effect whether so intended by its author or not.

MILEAGE DEFICIENCY.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to have considered in the Committee of the Whole a matter which I think every gentleman here will give his consent to. It is an appropriation bill for the deficiency in the pay of mileage of members. We have got to get it through to-night.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11223) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for compensation of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories.

Be it enacted, etc. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for compensation and mileage of members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, the sum of $4,721.14.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I only desire to say in explanation that this deficiency comes from the fact that some new members have come in who have drawn pay for which the outgoing members have drawn pay also, and also the item of mileage expense and one month's salary of the successor to Mr. CARLISLE.

The bill (H. R. 11223) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to so modify the order taking a recess at 5.30 that at any time during the evening session there may be conference reports from appropriation committees.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not object. I think that it is wrong to take up the time that has been set apart for debate upon this bill, but I will defer to the gentleman if he really wishes it.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

Mr. McCORMICK addressed the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the previous question on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McCORMICK].

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair has recognized three gentlemen in succession since I endeavored to get the floor to make this motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize any gentleman who desires to debate this matter, on either side of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is very kind of the Chair now, when the debate is taking up the time set apart for the offering of amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] must understand the parliamentary situation perfectly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], in charge of the amendment, moved the previous question upon the amendment and that was defeated. That transferred the control to the other side. The gentleman from Illinois understands that. Now if any gentleman upon the other side desires to be recognized for the discussion of the question, the Chair will be happy to recognize him.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does this mean that we are to have unlimited debate?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. It means that you can not be recognized all the time.

The SPEAKER. It means that the gentleman now in charge of the amendment is entitled to the customary parliamentary treatment.

Mr. SPRINGER. If debate is in order, then I would like to be recognized for the purpose of debating this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for the purpose of debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had been recognized.

The SPEAKER. I suppose strictly, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania demands his right, he is entitled to it and the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized later.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so anxious to recognize the gentleman from Illinois that he sometimes oversteps the bounds of strict parliamentary usage. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take any part in the discussion of the merits of this bill, and I rise now only for the purpose of making a single observation in opposition to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. If I have apprehended the force of the amendment correctly and if I have understood the discussion in its behalf, it is that this bill is not general legislation, because it requires a certain number of electors to put the machinery of the law into operation, and therefore is obnoxious to the objection that it is special, local, and sectional legislation.

To correct this the amendment is offered, by the terms of which it is made obligatory upon all districts to have their elections supervised. It occurred to me, Mr. Speaker, during the progress of this discussion, that in my own State during the past sixteen years we have had not only a statutory but a constitutional provision very similar to that incorporated in the bill now before this House. And I desire to say that this constitutional provision and the statute passed in pursuance thereof give to our people entire satisfaction. The constitutional provision as found in section 10 of Article VIII of the Pennsylvania constitution of 1874 is as follows:

The courts of common pleas of the several counties of the Commonwealth shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to appoint overseers of election, to supervise the proceedings of election officers, and to make report to the court as may be required, such appointments to be made for any district in a city or county upon petition of five citizens, lawful voters of such election district, setting forth that such appointment is a reasonable precaution to secure the purity and fairness of elections; overseers shall be two in number for an election district * * * and in each case members of different political parties.

And in order that this constitutional provision may make a proper impression upon our friends upon the other side, I desire to advise them that its author is popularly understood to be the distinguished gentleman who submits the minority report to this bill—I refer to my friend and colleague, Mr. BUCKALEW, of Pennsylvania.

Pursuant to that constitutional provision the following statute was enacted the 30th of January, 1874:

On the petition of five or more citizens of any election district, setting forth that the appointment of overseers is a reasonable precaution to secure the purity and fairness of the election in said district, it shall be the duty of the court of common pleas of the proper county, all the law judges of the said court able to act at the time concurring, to appoint two judicious, sober, and intelligent citizens of the said district, belonging to different political parties, overseers of election to supervise the proceedings of election officers thereof, and to make report of the same as they may be required by such court. Said overseers * * * shall have the right to be present with the officers of such election during the whole time the same is held, the votes counted, and the returns made out and signed by the election officers, to keep a list of voters if they see proper, to challenge any person offering to vote and interrogate him and his witnesses under oath in regard to his right of suffrage at said election, and to examine his papers produced, etc.

Now, with reference to this bill I desire to make this point: That this sort of legislation has been practically tried in my own State with marked success, and further that, under the constitution of Pennsylvania, which provides that all laws shall be general in their character, such a law as this being general and so determined by the courts, I can not for the life of me see how any one can make objection to the bill now before this House on constitutional grounds, when the Constitution of the United States contains no such provision.

The Pennsylvania law applies to the whole State, but its operation is limited to those election precincts where five electors petition for it. The bill now under consideration, if enacted into law, will apply to the whole United States, but will be operative only in those Congressional districts where the requisite number of electors petition for the appointment of supervisors. Where it is needed it will be used and where it is unnecessary the Government will be saved the expense. The amendment should not prevail.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of our friends on the other side of this question is enough to provoke a great deal of mirthfulness. They have been for a good while fixing up this very offensive measure for all parts of the Union. They have been commending it with a great deal of vigor and force. Now, when we propose, in the spirit of the institutions of this country, to have this law made uniform and equal in its operation in every part of the country, our friends on the other side take to fighting as if they were killing snakes. Their districts, they say, all have fair elections; they do not need the provisions of this bill to insure fair elections there, and we reply that our districts, too, are fair.

They remind me of an instance that occurred to myself a few years ago. It is known perhaps to many of you that we had a prohibition contest in my State. I was one of the "antis." There was a warm personal friend of mine who said to me during the discussion, "I am astonished to see you advocating such a question as this. I am a zealous friend of prohibition, and want to stop the importation, manufacture, sale, and drinking of ardent spirits in this State." I said, "My friend, what has produced this great change that has come over the spirit of your dreams? because you know both you and I have been very great friends, and I know you like a good drink, and that you will have it and do have it whenever you want it." He said, "Certainly I do, and I know where to get the best whisky in the United States, and I have got some of it. The whisky is made in Robertson County, Tennessee." Then he said, "You can not make this law so as to prevent me from getting whisky; if you adopt the amendment I will still get Robertson County whisky." [Laughter.] I said to him, "Well, now, what good do you suppose can come to the people of this State from the adoption of prohibition, if its friends, like you, are going ahead getting whisky." "Oh, well," he said, "the law does not apply to me and my sort. I am still going to get whisky whether the amendment is adopted or not. I want it to apply to the Irish and the damned negroes." [Laughter.] Now, I say to our friends on the other side, they want this law to apply also to the "Irish and the damned negroes." They do not want it to come home to themselves at all. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this proposition may have evoked mirthfulness upon the other side, but it is a plain, simple proposition of fact, notwithstanding. This law in this respect is not new. We have it to-day, and in my State at the last Congressional election, and at preceding Congressional elections, it was put in force in some of the districts and not put in force in others. It is no novelty to the country, but has been in operation for a number of years. I presume there are other States in which the same thing has occurred.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It has been applied in two districts in Ohio only. Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I am told by my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that it never was used except in two districts in Ohio; and in the others it was not used. Now, I can not understand the quality of mind that says there is sectionalism in this part of the bill at least, because it is applicable, as the present law is, to every district in the United States. It can be applied to the district of my friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHER] or to the district represented by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE]. It may not be applied to either. That is the present law, and this law in that respect is precisely similar.

Mr. ENLOE. I will state that they did apply the present law at the last election in my district, and it increased the Democratic majority 700 votes.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I am not speaking of the effect of it. I am speaking of the character of it; and the very fact that it was applied in your State—

Mr. EVANS. Were not the judges of election indicted by the Federal court?

Mr. ENLOE. Two indictments were found in the Federal court, and the Federal judge, who is a Republican, charged the cases out of court, because there was no ground for the indictment.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I hope my friends will settle their family matters between themselves and that this will not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that two dialogues ought not to go on at the same time. The gentleman from Tennessee is out of order.

Mr. ENLOE. I know it; and the other gentleman from Tennessee was also out of order and you rapped me down.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees that both gentlemen from Tennessee were out of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I was simply illustrating the application of the present law when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] said that the provisions of that law were applied at the last Congressional election in a portion of Tennessee as it was put in operation in a portion of my State, and that it was not put into operation in a portion of Tennessee as it was not put in operation in a portion of my State; and if that be the case I can not understand the quality of mind which calls that kind of law sectional.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERS). The hour of 5 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived, the House is declared in recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. PETERS in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

[Mr. LANE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. CLARKE, of Alabama, addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the national Republican party in 1888, in establishing the lines of the impending political battle, among other propositions pledged itself to the following:

We reaffirm our unwavering devotion to . . . the supreme and sovereign right of every lawful citizen, rich or poor, native or foreign-born, white or black, to cast one free ballot in public elections and to have that ballot duly counted. We hold the free and honest popular ballot and the just and equal representation of all the people to be the foundation of our republican Government, and demand effective legislation to secure the integrity and purity of elections, which are the fountains of public authority.

Upon that proposition it appealed to the people and was sustained by the voters of this country. It is now in power in all the departments of the Government, and it is for that party to carry out its pledges. If those pledges are unconstitutional they ought not to be enacted into laws. If they are constitutional there is no excuse except cowardice for not keeping faith with the people. Article XV of the Constitution of the United States declares that—

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

It also provides, in Article I, section 4, that—

The times, place and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

This is our warrant for the law which the Republican party gave the country notice it would put upon the statute-book if the country should indorse its position by electing its candidates. We are now standing face to face with our declared intention, and the only question is whether we shall keep the faith or for any reason abandon our position. For one, as an honest man, I must insist that my party stand by its promises. In so doing, the injustice of enacting a law that shall be partial or unjust to a single voter or work wrong to any section of the country is so manifest that it needs no argument. But no honest man, nor honest section of the country, can controvert the proposition that an elector, no matter what may be his color, race, or condition, can not be defrauded of his vote without violating the Constitution of the United States. Whether that voter be in the city of New York, or in the city of Detroit, or in the State of South Carolina makes no earthly difference with the question at issue. It is neither a sectional question nor a race question; it goes deeper than that. It is a question of the preservation of republican institutions, which depend for their existence upon the popular will as expressed in our elections being honestly carried out.

It is settled in this country that the negro is a citizen, that the Irishman who comes here and becomes naturalized is a citizen, that the German who casts his lot with us and becomes naturalized is a citizen. That the people of nearly every nation on earth can come here and, by virtue of law, become naturalized citizens of this country, all of us understand and know. While there are exceptions, these naturalized foreigners have brought to the nation power, yielded willing obedience to law, and largely contributed to the material welfare that has placed us among the foremost Governments of the world. If this is true, it follows that he who raises his hand to prevent their exercise of the right of citizenship, which we deliberately give to these men by law, is an enemy to his country, no matter how he may undertake to disguise it; for, if one can, many may, and where in sufficient numbers, thus band themselves together and determine that any class of men who are entitled to vote shall be deprived of that right, it will be but a little while before revolution is inaugurated. The success and the maintenance of republican institutions will be at stake, and whenever men make that assault in any considerable numbers they will be sure to meet with resistance.

Mr. Speaker, it is clearly constitutional to undertake to protect citizens in their right to vote, and if it is constitutional there comes next the question of necessity. Why, sir, the necessity exists if there is a single voter in the United States deprived of his right to vote. Whenever such a wrong exists, the majesty of the law should be invoked to right it. I care not how high or how low down may be the victim, if he has the right to vote he should have it secured to him at any cost. Not that he individually is of so much consequence, but because if you can thus deprive one man of his right you can deprive others of their votes, and in that manner you can overturn our entire system of government. It is into that yawning abyss that men who are undertaking to stifle the votes of citizens in this country are inviting us to look.

In the North the necessity for this law has been apparent for twenty years, and it has been applied locally and has worked most beneficial results. In parts of the South—and to the credit of gentlemen who represent that section of the country here they have ceased to deny a palpable truth—in the South it is not disputed that the votes of citizens are suppressed or that, if allowed to vote, their votes are not counted. If this is true of South Carolina or elsewhere in local elections Congress may or may not interfere. This bill does not. If men prefer to sit quietly upon the safety-valve and throw pitch, tar, and turpentine upon the fires underneath the boiler, they may do so if they choose. But when gentlemen undertake to suppress the vote of a man who is casting that vote for a member of Congress, for a Representative to sit upon this floor to assist in making laws for Michigan as well as South Carolina, then it becomes a national question and a question that my constituency is interested in. And no constituency will submit to such a wrong tamely for any length of time when it becomes evident that the intention is to carry it out to the bitter end. In such a case the majesty of the law must be invoked, for the good of South Carolina as well as for the good of Michigan. The necessity for this law in that section of the country is demonstrable from the language of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], who, on this floor, said:

We know we must either rule that country or leave it. Now, for myself, before the people of the United States and before God in all reverence I swear we will not leave it.

Then they will rule it. Sir, they only can rule it by righteousness. They cannot, for any considerable length of time, rule it by violence, by fraud, by crime, because in so doing they are committing a crime against the people of the United States which that people will not be slow to resent and to correct.

I will not believe, until compelled to do so, that my friend from South Carolina voices the sentiments of the majority of the white people of that State. Is it indeed true that that Commonwealth is ready to say "We will nullify the Constitution of the United States; we will, in spite of the Constitution, trample these men under foot—not because they vote the Republican ticket or the Democratic ticket, but because they are negroes?" When I am compelled to believe that of South Carolina I will do so; but until I have more proof than now exists I shall hold that the gentleman did not speak the sentiments of vast numbers of the white men of that State. If it is true, then they are ready to-day, as in 1861, to undertake to overthrow this Government in order to carry out their ends. I will not charge them with that. God forbid! In this "Government of the people" we must be united, but we never can be upon any principle that involves a wrong to any of the voters of the United States, no matter what their color is or nationality may have been.

There should be no more question about the fairness of elections in South Carolina than in Michigan. See how my State changes her delegation on this floor. In one Congress it will be six Democrats and five Republicans; in the next it will be five Democrats and six Republicans; sometimes nine Republicans and two Democrats. So our delegation changes—why? Because the people vote just as they see fit and their vote is counted just as it is cast. That is the reason. And we have no trouble there. You will have no trouble anywhere if you do this.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Will you allow me a question?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Did the gentleman from South Carolina use any expression which authorizes you to say that he did not intend to declare that the white people would rule South Carolina by their earnest, honest efforts to control the elections, to control them by the fair preponderance of votes? Why do you assume he meant to assert that they are going to control by violence? He did not say that.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I make no commentary whatever upon the text of the gentleman's remarks. I simply quote his words, and I repeat that I will not, until compelled, believe that he voices the sentiment of the majority of the people of that State, for, if his declaration is true, then South Carolina is just as ready to overthrow the Constitution to-day as she was in 1861, and I prefer to believe, if possible, that it has been thoroughly and loyally reconstructed.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The gentleman from South Carolina did not say anything to warrant your construction of his language.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I quote his language exactly.

Mr. STOCKDALE. And then you construe it most unfairly.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I have simply construed it in the only way that is possible. When a man says "We must either rule the country or leave it, and before God I swear we will not leave it," I assume he means just what he says.

Mr. STOCKDALE. That is just what you are going to do at home.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. No, sir. If I can not vote in Michigan without taking the vote of somebody else and trampling it in the mud instead of putting it in the ballot-box—

Mr. STOCKDALE. He did not say that.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I will leave the State. If there is not room enough in my State for both the voters who disagree with me and myself also, I will not undertake to deprive them of their rights, nor allow them to take away mine, and if I could not abide the rule of the majority I would go somewhere else.

Mr. Speaker, this ought not to be a race question; it ought not to be a sectional question; but all fair-minded and honest men should unite in the overthrow of illegal voting in this country and in the protection of honest voting. We should unite upon these two propositions, and if we do so the future of this country is boundless in its glory. But if we are to fight over again here and elsewhere the question as to whether the negro is a citizen, it bodes evil, and evil only, to each and every section of the country. It is our duty as loyal and patriotic men to rise above all prejudice and insist that every man who has the right shall vote and have his vote counted.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say to gentlemen on the other side I know of no race toward whom you can afford to be more magnanimous than the negroes. They are not cowards. They demonstrated during the war that they possessed one of the noblest traits of manhood, trustworthiness. They had it in their power to spread destruction and carnage over every portion of the South. They refrained from doing it. You trusted your dearest interests to them. Why do you say now that they, having been clothed with manhood, shall not have that which the Constitution gives them and which protects the free man better than bayonets, the ballot? Why do you not say that the negro demonstrated through four years of bloody war the fact that he was both patient and trustworthy? Do you suppose that a race capable of all this has come up "out of great tribulation" for naught?

Do you not recognize that you are contending against fate, that you are fighting against the "stars in their courses" when you undertake to thwart, to belittle, to turn back again this race that God freed through your instrumentality and ours?

This black race not only defended the households of the South, but upon a hundred fields of battle, from the awful scenes at Fort Pillow to the closing glory at Appomattox, the negro soldier, with a loyalty that never was excelled, followed the banner of the nation, giving up his life, as a soldier should, in order that the Union, which to him had been a curse, should be preserved. He did this not as the ox goes to slaughter; he did it as an intelligent human being. And I ask you what there is in all he has done that should bring down upon his head the combined wrath of whole communities and whole States. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that applause in the galleries can not be permitted.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, this is the most important question that can possibly come before this or any other Congress in time of peace. Its presence here is a confession on the part of the advocates of the bill that the people are not capable of managing and controlling their own elections and it is proposed by one bold step to centralize, under the pretext of supervision, all the election machinery in the Federal courts and other officers to be appointed for life. It is a daring and reckless attempt of the Republican party, the champion of centralization to perpetuate itself in power by a partisan and unconstitutional law. The scheme requires that the Federal judiciary shall be called from that lofty position it has heretofore occupied, down to the level of party politics.

Why are the judges to make the appointments, instead of the President? It is because they are, with only one or two exceptions, Republicans, and hold office for life, and are in no sense responsible to the people. The purpose is to get control of the election machinery and at the same time place it beyond the reach of the people, who ought to have the right to choose their own election officials or at least to select those who do. Under our system the people can reach the President and Congress, but not the judiciary. This is the boldest attack upon the fundamental doctrine of "home rule" ever made in this country. I shall not discuss the details of the bill at any length, because the eloquent gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], my talented and able friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], and the forcible and logical gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] have completely dissected and exposed it, so that no man whose political fortune is not continuous with the success of the Republican party can fail to oppose it.

I base my opposition to it upon the ground that it is unnecessary and expensive and seeks to surround the election precincts with political hirelings of the Republican party for the purpose of obtaining party victories; that it violates the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution, by assuming to take control of the elections, which primarily belongs to the States and the people. The objections to the use of such power by Congress were so forcibly stated by Judge Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution that I will quote his language:

The objection was not to that part of the clause which vests in the State Legislatures the power of prescribing the times, places, and manner of holding elections; for, so far, it was a surrender of power to the State governments; but it was to the superintending power of Congress to make or alter such regulations. It was said that such a superintending power would be dangerous to the liberties of the people and to a just exercise of their privileges in elections. Congress might prescribe the times of elections so unreasonably as to prevent the attendance of electors or the place at so inconvenient a distance from the body of the electors as to prevent a due exercise of the right of choice. And Congress might contrive the manner of holding elections so as to exclude all but their own favorites from office. They might modify the right of election as they should please; they might regulate the number of votes by the quantity of property, without involving any repugnancy to the Constitution. These and other suggestions of a similar nature, calculated to spread terror and alarm among the people, were dwelt on with peculiar emphasis.

In answer to the suggestion that the power might be used to secure political triumphs, as is evidently the purpose of this bill, his language is very emphatic. He said:

The truth is that Congress could never resort to a measure of this sort for purposes of oppression or party triumph until that body had ceased to represent the will of the States and the people, and if under such circumstances the members could still hold office it would be because a general and irremediable corruption or indifference pervaded the whole community. No republican constitution could pretend to afford any remedy for such a state of things.

Here is what Mr. Jay said of the clause, and it appears clear that so long as the States exercise the power Congress can not:

Suppose by design or accident the States should neglect to appoint Representatives, certainly there should be some constitutional remedy for this evil. The obvious meaning of the paragraph was that if this neglect should take place Congress should have the power to support the Government and prevent the dissolution of the Union. He believed this was the design of the Federal Constitution.

The advocates of the bill confess that it is mainly directed at the large cities and the South, and to show the necessity for it make or reiterate false charges of fraud and violence. No gentleman who has yet spoken upon this bill has insisted that such a law was necessary in his State or district.

Their speeches remind me of Bishop Warburton's statement of the difference between orthodoxy and heterodoxy. He said "Orthodoxy is my doxy and heterodoxy is another man's doxy." So it is with these gentlemen, the fraud is always in another man's district. There are, however, some men on this floor who were not here at the organization of the House who have admitted and made charges against their own people as a basis for such legislation. In this line and for such purposes my colleague has consented to the base and abject confession that the charges of fraud, violence, disorder, and murder against Arkansas are true. These charges were at the time denied by me, and to which I propose now to call attention. I do not do this merely for the purpose of a controversy with the gentleman who made the charges, but to resent an assault upon the honor of my State. "The insignificance of the accuser is sometimes lost in the magnitude of the accusation."

If I could in justice to my own self-respect and the high character of the people of my State pass these accusations without notice I would be glad to do so, because I do not believe that such matters properly belong here, and I would not for any consideration first introduce them in this House. But I am unwilling to remain silent and permit the statements of the gentleman, so deliberately made, revised, printed, and circulated, to go unchallenged. What I shall say will be with as little passion and prejudice as is possible for one who feels that the State that honors him and the people who have his sympathy and affection have been unjustly assaulted by one whose position should evidence the fact that he is a friend and advocate.

My desire for harmony between the two sections of our country is too strong and firmly fixed for me to be led off into any sectional controversy, and those who may expect such on this occasion will be disappointed. Neither will I base the defense of my State upon acts of violence in other States of the Union. I shall not make her defense by criminating and recriminating other parts of our common country, but will rely upon the high and broad plea of "not guilty," and upon this will test the truth of the accusations so recklessly made by meeting the allegations upon the facts before the country. That we may fully and clearly understand the full scope of the charges made by my colleague [Mr. FEATHERSTON], we must first read them in connection with the assault upon the State made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY], on the 13th day of last February, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Here is what he stated:

Mr. Speaker, we see this wave of political murder roll across the Mississippi River into Arkansas; we see hundreds of humble but loyal and true Republican victims fall a sacrifice to Democratic hate; day after day, night after night, they fall in the humble cabin, in presence of wife and children, on the highway, in the field, in the lonesome wood, in the jails where they have been placed by the officers of the law on some false pretext, that they might be taken at a greater disadvantage by the cowardly Democratic assassins. And yet Republicans in that State persist in exercising their political rights. The leaders must be killed, is the Democratic edict.

No greater libel was ever published against an honorable people. Continuing in the same strain and referring to the necessity for seating my colleague instead of Judge Cate, who then occupied a seat here, the gentleman from Kansas said:

He [FEATHERSTON] is a Republican, has been a Confederate soldier, was born and raised and has all his life lived in the South, but if the Democratic programme is carried out he is to die. "Ten thousand dead already—who is the next to die?" might be written of these heroic, self-sacrificing Republicans of the South, and only half the truth expressed. Every dead man a Republican, every assassin a Democrat is also truth. Political murder seems to be a pastime, and a "nigger hunt," as a sport, is as exhilarating as the old-time "fox hunt."

After two months of reflection upon these false charges against the people of Arkansas, my colleague, without qualification or reserve, vouches for their truth, as will appear by the following statement and colloquy taken from his speech of April 23. He [Mr. FEATHERSTON] said:

Not one of the assertions made by the gentleman from Kansas relative to political murders, not one of his assertions can be denied in regard to these results, and not one can be denied in regard to the cause. These are just as he stated. There has not been a single conviction by the State courts.

Now, gentlemen, this is to be deplored, and I regret it; but it stands there, and there is nothing to contradict it. In my own county to-day there is a second term of the court in session since that mob murdered Wilson, Farham, and Neely, and the court is so organized that notwithstanding the fact that men went before it and swore that they saw the shots fired at the murdered men not a single indictment was found.

Mr. McRAE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I will yield for a question.

Mr. McRAE. Do you state that as a fact?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I state that as a fact.

Mr. McRAE. Do you know it?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I know it.

Mr. McRAE. Were you a member of the grand jury?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. No, sir.

Mr. McRAE. How do you know it, then?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I know it because it is a matter of public proof.

Mr. McRAE. I want to know how it could be a matter of public proof when the proceedings of the grand jury are secret.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Not one of these men has been indicted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; that is a different thing.

Mr. McRAE. I hope the gentleman from Maine will keep his place.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, ho!

Mr. McRAE. I have permission to ask the gentleman a question, and I hope the gentleman from Maine will not interrupt me without permission. The gentleman states that he knows this as a fact, and he knows as well as I do that under the laws of the State of Arkansas the proceedings of the grand jury are secret; but if he knows or if we can find out who the guilty parties are we will punish them. The proceedings, however, before the grand jury are secret.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I can not yield further. The gentleman from Arkansas knows that it is true that this matter has already been before the court and that there have been no indictments.

Mr. McRAE. I do not know such to be true; and I want to know how and by what authority you stated that you know that such evidence was furnished to the grand jury.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Now, these questions are precisely met as they have been in the argument to-day. In the canvass in our State, when the young men in that State complain of these outrages and these wrongs, we are told a great deal of the history that has been furnished to-day, and answer is given that Powell Clayton did thus and so twenty-five years ago. The murderers of Wilson, Farham, and Neely are known to those gentlemen. They are known to the managers of the Democratic party. It is known to Governor Eagle who these men are, and yet not a dollar of reward has been offered, nor has there ever yet been an effort made for the punishment of these criminals.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] has done what he has done and said what he has said without any consultation with me or with anybody else from our State that I know of, but when these questions are met and answered in the manner in which they have been met and answered to-day, I want that the truth shall be known, and that such statements as are made upon this floor shall not go to the world as representing the actual condition of the State of Arkansas. I am not in favor of making one single assertion that can not be substantiated by the proof. I simply say, when the assertion is made that we are slanderers of the State of Arkansas, that, if to tell the plain truth is slander, then it is a necessity and must be done. That the ballot-boxes were stuffed in Arkansas in the last election has been proved beyond all question.

Yet every day these charges are thrown in my face, as though it were an outrageous crime for me to publish the facts as they exist. Gentlemen will not deny that an armed mob went into Crittenden County, and that the Governor (Hughes) knew all about it—

Mr. McRAE. I deny that the governor knew anything about it until after it had occurred.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I do not pretend to say that the governor was a party to the conspiracy. I did not say that. But I say that he knew it after it was done, and that nothing was done to induce those men to come back or to protect them when they came back. This is the condition that confronts us there.

That the governor himself (Eagle) knows that there were seven or eight thousand votes counted for him that were never polled for him I do not believe any intelligent man in the State doubts. That there were returned in the county of Lee 2,865 Democratic majority, in a county which went 500 majority for Benjamin Harrison in the Presidential election, is a fact beyond dispute.

I indignantly deny these accusations of political murders and lawlessness made against the Democratic party of Arkansas, as maliciously false and defamatory, born of recklessness, blind ignorance, and violent hate.

The following is an extract from an interview with the gentleman, published soon after he was seated, in which he promptly committed himself to Federal supervision of elections, and in doing so gave his approval to statements that are not true in fact.

WORK OF PROFESSIONAL POLITICIANS.

Mr. FEATHERSTON declares the fact to be that there exists in Arkansas and in others of the late rebellious States an oligarchy of disappointed army officers, who, having embarked in politics as a profession, have adopted for their motto, "This is a white man's Government," and have resorted to Winchester rifles, false ballot-boxes, and kindred frauds by means of which they intend at all hazards to maintain themselves in office. The outrages against life committed under the instigation of these political cliques and the frauds perpetrated against honest elections have at last aroused a determination to shake off this incubus upon the honor and prosperity of the State, and therefore it is that thousands of farmers ("Wheeler") and laboring men, as well as Republicans, have united to restore to the people of that State a free ballot and a fair count.

Mr. FEATHERSTON insists that this can not be done without a severe and determined contest, for the future of the reigning oligarchy depends on their power to keep the Southern masses in subjection to their despotic sway. He says the action of Congress in his case will give new courage to the voters of that section; and he also believes that an act of Congress, providing for Federal supervision of elections for Congressmen and Presidential electors would be a great aid in the impending struggle.

Mr. FEATHERSTON, having carefully read the foregoing, assents to its publication as a correct statement of the facts and the true position of affairs in his Congressional district.

His speech and interviews and others like them, manufactured for the purpose, contain the evidence upon which the majority of the committee and the House justify such expensive, radical, unconstitutional, and revolutionary measures as the pending bill. I will, therefore, undertake to show that the evidence so far as Arkansas is concerned is false, and that there is in fact no necessity for any such legislation. None of the acts mentioned by him refer to Congressional elections.

For the present let us abandon that "exhilarating" and imaginary "nigger hunt" and pass in silence the cemetery of the "ten thousand dead" where it is alleged "every dead man is a Republican." Let us not disturb the reflections of those "self-sacrificing Republicans" who still survive "the cowardly Democratic assassins" referred to by the gentleman from Kansas. My colleague says that "these are just as he [KELLEY] stated," and he says that he is "not in favor of making one single assertion that can not be substantiated by the proof." Let us test the truth of the particular charges specified by him, after which we will have something more to say about the people and those wholesale slanders of them. The gentleman pretends to know all about the troubles in his own county, and as he has laid greatest stress upon them we will first take up the TROUBLE THAT CAUSED THE FORREST CITY RIOT.

The election on hand at the time of the riot was a school election, with no politics in it. It was a question of old school board or new school board. There were Democrats, Fusionists, and negroes on both sides. The school building for the negroes was as good, if not better, than that for the whites. The negroes had made no complaint about their own school. They had for years been represented on the board and there was no effort to prevent this. Professor James W. Stewart had been principal of the white school for twelve years, and a large majority of the whites wanted him to continue. Those who were opposed to him sought to combine with the negroes to elect a board that would dispense with his services. Meetings were held, and the people arrayed in mad factions, and the ignorant negroes incited by designing whites to insolence and to threats of violence. To avoid trouble, a proposition was made to select a compromise ticket, which was agreed to by both sides.

There were two directors whose terms expired. Two others of the board of six were about to move away, and it was proposed that their resignations be tendered, and these two vacancies be filled at the same election, making four in all. The school board had been heretofore composed of five white men and one colored man, A. M. Neeley. He had been nominated for the office of receiver of the land office at Little Rock, and expected to move, and so he agreed to resign. The compromise would have allowed each side to nominate and elect two directors. By some influence the compromise was defeated. Whoever was responsible for the riot and the death of the four men. The resignations were withheld, and the election confined to the two directors whose terms were about to expire.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE TROUBLE?

As to who is responsible for the failure I will not pretend to say but will read what was reported to be the facts soon after the unfortunate occurrence by Dickison Brugman, the editor of the Journal, a newspaper published in Little Rock, who visited Forrest City for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting the facts. Here is what he published upon this point.

Neeley was a member of the school board. The term of office of Fussell and Rollwage had expired. Neeley was to be appointed register of the land office at Little Rock. Captain Wynne had gone into business in Memphis. On Saturday preceding the election, Neeley approached Mr. Rollwage with a proposition to compromise, offering to resign his position on the board if Captain Wynne would do so, thus leaving four vacancies to fill at the approaching election, instead of two. He offered to let the whites nominate two candidates if the whites would agree to accept the two nominated by the negroes, the four to be placed on the same ticket and voted for. Mr. R. stated in reply that he had no authority to speak for the whites, but that he would invite the leading citizens, Democrats and Republicans to meet on Monday forenoon.

The meeting was well attended; Rollwage and Fussell were nominated for reelection, and, in the interest of peace, Neeley's proposition was accepted with only one dissenting vote. Neeley and his followers met Monday night. Neeley represented that Mr. Rollwage made the compromise proposition to him. A colored preacher, who presided, characterized the proposition as an insult to their intelligence, and the other speakers became so enthused with the prospect of electing four members of the board, thus controlling the schools of the city, that they publicly declared their intention of carrying the election, even if they had to fight for it. The whites met again on Wednesday evening. The meeting expressed its determination never to let the schools pass into the hands of an illiterate negro mob, and in this determination they were heartily supported by nearly one hundred well educated colored Republicans, who well knew what the domination of negro ignorance means.

This editor, in the same report, in speaking of the part that my colleague took in preventing the compromise and arousing the passions of the negroes, said:

He (Mr. Featherston) attended the negro meeting Monday night, and counseled the negroes to reject the compromise; assured them they had the power to control the schools; with uplifted hands and eyes he thanked his God that the negroes were as good as white men and that they should insist on exercising their rights. His speech did more to inflame the passions of the negroes and to arouse the whites than anything else that occurred.

The whites of Forrest City became so alarmed at the aspect school matters were assuming that even the Republican candidate for sheriff, in 1888, a Vermont by birth, a captain in the Federal army, a member of the G. A. R., boldly declared in the meeting that he would shed his blood in order to keep the white schools from under the domination of Neeley and his ignorant mob. When it is known that the whites in this district pay almost all the taxes; that they have done everything they could to raise the negro in the scale of intelligence; that they recently built them a school-house that cost $1,000 more than the white school building, and giving eight months' school (same term as given the whites), it is no wonder that some of the leading Fusionists refused to follow Neeley and Mr. L. P. Featherston (recent Fusion candidate for Congress) in their insane career.

That there was a plot on the part of Fusionists to carry the election by any means, fair or foul, and that the plot had been entered into months before the day of election, can not be doubted. County Judge Coffey, Fusionist, contrary to the spirit, if not the letter of the school law, transferred many negroes, just prior to the election, who resided in other districts, into the Forrest City district, with the intention of electing their candidates by that means. He is the same just (?) judge who declined to admit into the city district a body of white petitioners, who resided in the district south of the city.

If the gentleman is correctly reported it would better become him to wash his own hands of this unfortunate affair rather than to assail the governor, grand jury, and court as he has done.

It appears, if this report be true, that the gentleman did not misjudge his audience. He knew how to stir them to threats of bloodshed, and when he heard the colored minister declare that they would carry the election if they had to fight for it, he must have known that trouble was likely to follow. He could well have closed as did Mark Antony his memorable address to the Roman citizens, when he moved them to mutiny by saying:

Now let it work; mischief thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I just want to say that that statement is unqualifiedly false. I want to say further—

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman says that the report of the speech is not true I will take his word for it and permit his denial to be entered here. Do I understand him to say that he did not address the meeting in question and did not say anything of the kind at such a meeting?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Both factions of the Democratic party were in that meeting. Both factions made addresses to the meeting, but I want to say to the gentleman that no word of the language he quoted ever escaped my lips.

Mr. MCRAE. Very well, I am glad to hear it.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Then who told the lie about him?

Mr. MCRAE. I have given the name of the editor and the paper from which the statement was taken. Now, since the gentleman denies it, I will drop it, for I personally know nothing of what occurred at the meeting.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. What I did say was I thanked Heaven the time had come in Arkansas when the humblest citizen, without a dollar in his pocket, had a vote which was equal to that of Jay Gould in New York, backed up with his $200,000,000.

Mr. MCRAE. On the morning of the election the excitement ran high. When the polls were about to be opened, an altercation occurred between Neeley and Mr. Fussell, a candidate for director. Neeley had falsely said that Fussell was unfriendly to free schools and the education of the negro, and Fussell was endeavoring to have him correct it. Neeley in a haughty, insulting manner declined and said he had no time to talk with him, at the same time putting his hand in his hip pocket. Fussell struck him with a small cane. Neeley, followed by Fussell, ran to Capt. John Parham, who declared his intention to protect him, and thereupon Neeley drew his pistol. Fussell drew his pistol and was pointing it in the direction of Neeley. Captain Parham also drew a pistol. The town marshal, Folbre, came upon the scene and with drawn pistol commanded the peace.

With all of this there would possibly have been no bloodshed, had not Thomas H. Parham, a son of Capt. John Parham, appeared at the top of an out-door stairway to his office and fired at the marshal. He evidently thought the drawn weapons were intended for his father. The mistake was a natural one, for Neeley was near his father, and the marshal was talking excitedly and waving his pistol. As Folbre fell he shot and killed Thomas H. Parham. So these two killed each other.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. If the gentleman will simply state the truth, I will not interrupt him. I say that this is the belief of every citizen in the town of Forrest City, that Parham did not fire the first shot, and afterwards when he did fire it was in defense of his father who was attacked by the mob.

Mr. MCRAE. The contrary has been published in all the papers and accepted as true by every man whom I have ever heard speak upon the subject in the State of Arkansas except yourself. This is the first time I ever heard you assert it. It is known by all that Parham killed Folbre and that Folbre killed Parham.

Other shots were fired. Sheriff Wilson came running to the scene when a ball struck him, piercing his heart and killing him instantly. The public does not know who killed him, nor whether it was intentional or accidental. It is believed by many that a stray ball from Thomas H. Parham's pistol killed him. While this was taking place Neeley fled and escaped into his room by the back door.

In the excitement that followed the first two shots, it was impossible to know who took part in the fight. A friend who was near at the beginning, describing the scene to me, said, "At the crack of the pistols it seemed that everybody ran in every direction." Wilson was a good citizen and officer, and his death was regretted by all without regard to party. The killing of Neeley did not occur until early next morning, after the riot, and was by a mob from the surrounding country in every direction. It dispersed at once. He was found hidden under the floor of his room. The sheriff's posse demanded his surrender. His reply was three pistol shots. He was fired into and literally riddled. It was one of those occasions when, because of the excitement and the numbers, nothing can be determined. These are the facts as I understand them. Governor Eagle was informed.

GOVERNOR EAGLE'S ACTION.

He at once telegraphed Colonel Van Izard, appointing him sheriff, with instructions to restore peace, if possible. He was asked to send the militia. He declined to do so, but went on the first train himself. He arrived at Forrest City Sunday evening, and proceeded at once to investigate the trouble.

The people were intensely excited and nearly all armed. He stood in the street and made a speech to the citizens, expressing great sorrow over the sad occurrence of the death of those who had been killed and the condition of affairs. He earnestly appealed to all factions to seriously consider the situation and put up their arms and disperse. He urged every man to control himself and to consider himself a committee of one to influence others to preserve proper conduct. He counseled peace, and warned them against all threats of violence. He denounced mob law, and declared that it must not be resorted to. He advised them to put none but sober men on duty as sentinels, and called attention to an intoxicated man he had seen with a gun. His action was in striking contrast with that of the gentleman who has so wantonly assailed him.

Like the brave governor that he is, he faced the people and spoke for law and order, while the gentleman, as I am informed, fled from the scene and did nothing to stay the passions of his friends and neighbors.

THE CIRCUIT COURT.

The gentleman said that there had been two terms of the court held since Wilson, Parham, and Neely were murdered, and that the court is so organized that, notwithstanding the fact that men went before it and swore that they saw the shots fired at the murdered men, not a single indictment was found. This statement, so far as the organization of the court is concerned, is not true. It is a slander upon the character of the circuit judge, Hon. M. T. Sanders, than whom there is no purer, abler, and more faithful judge in all this broad land. I will read so much of his charge to the grand jury as relates to this matter. It was applauded by all the Democratic newspapers in the State at the time, and I think it is worthy to be read here:

THE CHARGE TO THE JURY.

I further charge you, especially, to make diligent inquiry of the violence and bloodshed which occurred here at your county seat in May last and threatened a general conflict of arms. Every act of violence committed by an individual or a multitude or a mob, whether it has its origin in personal malice, in politics or party strife or a vindictive, reckless disposition, demands full and impartial investigation. The turbulent condition of affairs in this county, which culminated in the killing of four of your prominent citizens, can not be smothered up nor ignored, but must receive a rigid and just exposition of the facts. The performance of your duty in this respect involves the peace and welfare of your county and of the State. The question at issue is, shall peace bless and prosper your people, or violence and disorder destroy them? You can not put it aside as merely a political disturbance or mutual fight between violent partisans, the results of which are to be deplored; but you must confront the responsibility which rests upon you to probe the matter to the bottom.

It is a question which, in its consequences, reaches to the very foundations of society, of government, and the security of life and liberty. In times of party conflicts, when passions are inflamed, it is an easy thing, if intrigue or intimidation will not accomplish their designs, to incite to deeds of violence. It is not enough to deprecate such evils and outrages—they must be repressed; and those who seek to control men and affairs by force and arms must be punished. To connive at or tolerate such methods places the law-abiding at the mercy of the lawless and leads to the worst forms of anarchy.

All good citizens look to the courts and officers of the law to preserve order, protect life and property; and when they cease to afford protection or redress for wrongs, or become powerless to do so, then an appeal to arms will, of necessity, follow. Hence, I charge you that you owe it to the people of your county, to the State, and to this court to make thorough investigation in order that the facts may be known and the criminal actors in that tragedy be dealt with as law and justice demand.

But when you proceed to inquire into acts of violence committed in times of partisan feuds and warfare, you must divest your minds of passion, prejudice, or bias and discharge your duty as honest and impartial jurors. You must bear in mind that you can not carry Democracy or Republicanism or Fusionism into the jury room or take advantage of your position to knife your political enemies and shield your allies. Do not allow favor or friendship to sway you, nor let fear deter or revenge actuate you in presenting or omitting to present any man who has violated the peace of your county and State. It is the pride of courts to uphold the law and enforce its mandates, but their authority can not be perverted or prostituted to the service of any party or faction. If it should come to the knowledge of this court that you indict any one from improper motives or exercise the extraordinary powers vested in you solely to injure or oppress any citizen or to subserve the ends of any faction or element in politics, I will promptly set aside your action and discharge your body.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Will the gentleman allow another interruption?

Mr. McRAE. If I have misrepresented the gentleman in any manner I want him to correct me.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. If Arkansas is to be pretty liberally discussed on this floor the gentleman is the cause of it. Now, let me say—

Mr. McRAE. I am replying to charges made by you, and my time is very limited. If the gentleman is anxious to discuss the matter in his own time he must get the time from that side of the House.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I just wanted to say to you that the prosecuting attorney arranged that grand jury by preferring certain trumped-up charges against certain members of the grand jury until there was not a sufficient number upon it to find this indictment. I want to say further that nine members of the grand jury had written up and signed a different report, but from the fact that that mob of the Democratic party was around in the town they regarded it as dangerous to do so.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, it is a very singular thing to me that the gentleman should know all these secrets of the grand jury. It is, to my mind, conclusive proof of the fact that the grand jury was made up largely of the friends of the gentleman. It is a most remarkable fact that nine of the sixteen agreed to the report I have read. They were a majority, and could make any report they wanted to make.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Because it takes twelve men to indict, and it was so arranged that there would not be a sufficient number of Fusionists or free-ballot and fair-count Democrats to secure an indictment. I say that was done by collusion on the part of the district attorney.

Mr. McRAE. The prosecuting attorney, the Hon. S. Brundige, is an able, fearless officer, and I am informed did his whole duty in relation to this matter. By this charge he is held up by a Representative from his State as unfaithful and corrupt, without any proof whatever. Such charges, based upon the uncorroborated statement of my colleague, will not be believed by the people who know all the parties. They have been made here, as I firmly believe, for political use and effect, in total disregard of the facts. The grand jury that investigated the riot was composed, as I am reliably informed, of ten Fusionists, all of whom were political allies of Wilson and Neeley, as well as of the gentleman [Mr. FEATHERSTON] who now assails them.

There were only six Democrats on the grand jury. These sixteen were representative men of good character and standing in the county, who were selected, examined, sworn, and impaneled to make a true deliverance upon this and all questions submitted to them. They had the power to and did send for all persons who were supposed to know anything about the riot. Out of the eighteen witnesses examined upon this matter, I understand that only one witness pretended to know who killed Wilson, and his statements were so in conflict with other proven facts as to discredit them as unworthy of belief. After the emphatic and direct charge of the court, the organization of the grand jury as I have shown, and a careful investigation, the following report was made to the court by the grand jury:

And we further report that we have made as thorough, full, complete, and impartial examination of the unfortunate riot which occurred in Forrest City on the 18th day of May, 1888, without bias, prejudice, or feeling of partisanship, as it was capable for us to make, having examined eighteen witnesses upon the subject, and find the evidence before our body to be so conflicting and contradictory that we could not find any conclusive and satisfactory proofs as to who fired the shots that did the killing.

The fair inference to be drawn from the charge of the gentleman is that these sixteen men, all his neighbors, and citizens of the county in which he has lived for several years, a majority of them his political friends, have deliberately committed perjury to shield murderers whose guilt, he says, has been shown by public proof; mark the word. He does not say that there was evidence, but "proof," that which convinces the mind of the certainty of the truth and produces belief.

Mr. Speaker, I am here to say that the grand juries of Arkansas, whether made up of Democrats, Republicans, Fusionists, Greenbackers, or Wheelers, are not composed of that kind of material. The juries are generally honest, and the law as a rule is enforced in a spirit of fairness and without favor, fear, or prejudice. Since the gentleman has in effect declared that the identity of the murderers is a matter of public proof, and feels that it is his duty to say here in his place in the American Congress that the governor of his State, the court of his district, and the grand jury of his county have all failed to perform their respective duties; and since he says that the murderers are on the streets of Forrest City every day and known to him, I want to ask him to now name them, and also the witnesses by which the proof was made. I will now yield for his answer.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I can answer that question. Mr. S. C. Wilson, of Forrest City, told me he went before the grand jury and swore that he saw the man who fired the shot that killed D. M. Wilson, the sheriff of St. Francis County.

Mr. KELLEY. That is specific, and I hope will be satisfactory.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Speaker, in this connection I will refer to the report of the grand jury before mentioned as a denial of the fact that such proof was satisfactory.

THE DENIAL OF THE GOVERNOR.

The gentleman, reckless and indifferent of the good name and high character of the chief executive of his State, as well as of those of his own constituents, declared that Governor Eagle knew who killed Wilson and others, and that he had done nothing to have the criminals punished. The governor promptly telegraphed me that he did not know who did the killing, and in a recent letter to me about the riot he says that "when Mr. FEATHERSTON said in Congress that the governor knew who killed these men and had done nothing to have them brought to justice, and that other officers had done nothing, he misrepresented me and the other officers whose duty it is to enforce the law." I put the statement of Governor Eagle against that of my colleague [Mr. FEATHERSTON], with no doubt in my mind as to which will be believed by the people of Arkansas where they are both known.

FALSE CHARGE OF BALLOT-BOX STUFFING.

After the gentleman has arraigned the Democratic party of the State, of which he has been a member until recently, as an organization of ballot-box stuffers, and declared that "the party rests in power in Arkansas, not by the votes of the honest majority of the people, but by stuffed ballot-boxes," which utterance received the applause of the Republican side of this Chamber and brought forth the congratulations of the Speaker, he only names one county, and the only proof of ballot-box stuffing in that is that the county voted for the Democratic candidate for governor in September and gave a majority for President Harrison two months later. If the gentleman is ungenerous enough to make these charges of murder, fraud, and ballot-box stuffing against his former political friends, and really believes that since his betrayal and abandonment of the Democratic party that there remains in it the spirit of such lawlessness, modesty would require that he should at least not assume that all the honesty, humanity, and patriotism departed from it when he deserted us and with all the zeal of a new convert rushed into the arms of Clayton, McClure, and Dudley, through whose saving grace he professes a new political birth.

It will be remembered that the gentleman never left the Democratic party until he began his race for Congress, and even then claimed to be a Democratic "Wheeler."

The charge that seven or eight thousand more votes were counted for Governor Eagle than he received is without foundation and untrue in fact. No statement was ever made that was more foreign to the truth. The State ticket, I believe, received every vote that was counted for it. It was charged, and as to a few precincts in a few counties may have been true, that some boxes were thrown out and not counted because of irregularities, but not enough to change the result, and no honest man in Arkansas doubts the election of the entire Democratic State ticket by about 10,000 majority.

The gentleman asserts that the Democratic party rests in power in Arkansas "by stuffed ballot-boxes" without any exception, when he knows that the last election in April, 1889, for three supreme judges was conceded by all to be perfectly fair and honest. In every voting precinct there was a free ballot and a fair count, and the result has never been questioned. The Democratic majority at that election was about 10,000. The gentleman is the only one in the State, so far as I have heard, who is reckless enough to assert that the acting supreme judges were not fairly elected. Mr. Speaker, there is not a State in the Union where there is a stronger public sentiment against election frauds than in Arkansas, and whenever and wherever frauds have occurred they have been promptly denounced by the officials, the press, and the people of the State.

The constitution (article 3, section 6) declares that—

Any person who shall be convicted of fraud, bribery, or other willful and corrupt violation of any election law of this State shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit in this State.

The last Democratic State platform, upon this point, is as follows:

15. We announce our firm and unalterable adherence to the doctrine of free and fair elections; and to this end we favor the enactment, by the next general assembly, of an election law securing to the voter a secret ballot and the privilege of casting his vote uninfluenced by party leaders, or the fear of social or political ostracism—the prerequisite of a "free ballot and a fair count" being a free and untrammelled vote.

REWARD.

The gentleman professes to know where the murderers of Parham, Wilson, and Neely are, and yet complains that the governor has offered no reward for them. If he knows who they are and where they are, what does he want with a reward? Certainly he does not mean by this to say that a reward is necessary to obtain the facts known to him. Besides, the gentleman ought to know that no reward can be offered under the laws of Arkansas, except where persons break prison, flee from justice, or abscond or secrete themselves.

LEE COUNTY VOTE.

He fails to tell this House, what is truth, that there are many decent Republicans in Arkansas who will not lend themselves to the election of every bolting sore-head Democrat who happens to run for office. But I will let the good people of Lee County answer this charge of their Representative as to the alleged frauds there in 1888.

Here is what they say and what I believe to be true. This letter, from which I extract, was written by James P. Brown, a truthful and honorable man, September 24, 1888, in answer to charges of this same character made by another, who is, I believe, one of the political friends of the gentleman, and the facts in it are vouched for by a number of prominent Wheelers and Knights of Labor. I extract so much of it as is pertinent to the issue here, and it explains why there was not a full Republican vote for Dr. Norwood and why a full Democratic vote was polled for Governor Eagle.

As far as the Democratic vote of Lee County in the late general election is concerned, there are many well known reasons why it was so much larger than ever before. Among such reasons are the following:

The Republican party of Lee County is composed almost entirely of negroes, and there was no Republican ticket in the field, either State or county; indeed there was no county ticket at all except the straight Democratic ticket. If there had been a Republican ticket there is no doubt that many negroes would have voted it in preference to the Democratic ticket; but many of them voted openly and undeniably the Democratic ticket in preference to the mongrel affair which they easily recognized as a snare and a delusion.

In the largest negro townships of the county there were no Union Labor tickets at all to be found on election day. And why? Because the white Republican boss of the party in this county failed to send them there.

The negro race loves to vote. Generally, they will vote the Republican ticket if they can find one, but if they cannot find a Republican ticket, they will vote any other kind, rather than not vote at all. In the townships of this county in which there were none but Democratic tickets, the negroes voted the straight Democratic ticket to a man.

The negroes having experienced for the past three years the fact that Democratic national success does not mean a re-enslavement of their race, are much less stubborn in their Republicanism and much more disposed to listen to reason in politics than they ever were before, and there is no doubt that many former Republicans among the colored people are, as they never were before, Democrats from principle.

In the last place, the Democratic party of Lee County is as solid and as finely organized as anywhere on earth. In every township in the county there is the utmost harmony and not the least discord in our ranks. We all "pull together," and it would have been very unreasonable, under the circumstances, if our party in the county at the late election had not secured the largest vote and majority for our ticket that we have ever had. We were all in earnest, and, to a man, we all worked at the polls for the success of our ticket, both State and county. It is true that if a hand had not been turned over our ticket, under the circumstances mentioned, would have won, but we had a feeling of pride in the matter and we worked as though the enemy had met us in open field, face to face, and the result of our work was a Democratic vote of which the people of Lee County are proud. Neither on election day, nor before nor since, was there an unkind word uttered in the county against any voter, Republican or Democrat. No threats, no intimidation, no word of complaint from any one; no people on earth happier to-day than the colored people of Lee County.

We, the undersigned, have read and hereby heartily approve and indorse the foregoing communication in every particular.

Hickey, President Lee County Wheel Co-operative Association and Chairman Wheel Executive Committee; W. T. Derrick, Circuit Clerk and member of Knights of Labor.

I will now give some attention to the

CRITTENDEN COUNTY TROUBLES

The gentleman refers to an armed mob in Crittenden County, which he charged that Governor Hughes knew all about. I was never in that county, except to pass through it over the railroad, but I know many good men who live there. I will put their statement as to the cause of the trouble, and of the governor, as to what he did, against the charge that this trouble was political. Here are the statements signed by over one hundred of the best white citizens of the county, and nearly as many reliable colored citizens:

MARION, ARK., July 14, 1888.

To the Editor of the Avalanche:

SIR: We, the undersigned, residents and citizens of Crittenden County, feel constrained by this method of speech to express our individual opinions concerning what is known and called "Crittenden County troubles," moved so to do that the world, through the avenue of the columns of your valuable paper, may be advised as to the real and true causes thereof.

In our county some of the most important offices, such as county judge, clerks, assessor, etc., have been filled and the duties thereof exercised by vicious, wicked, corrupt, and drunken negroes; that in the exercise of their respective official duties (when the same were observed at all) they had as their aids and assistants those who indorsed their ideas of right and wrong, and only those who kept pace in the prosecution of their various plans and schemes.

That their official oaths and offices were prostituted to such an extent that they and their following had become and was a power in this county, both in and out of the courts in obstructing and oftentimes defeating the administration of justice; destroying the peace and order of the county, and fostering by counsel and otherwise strife, bitterness, and bad blood between the races; defying the law and wantonly trampling upon and overriding the rights of others, however sacred, who happened to disagree with them or their aids.

That so far back as May, 1887, these vicious and drunken officials, with their cohorts and followers, by designs and wicked schemes attempted to and did take, by stealth and otherwise, possession and control of the very largest colored church in the county, ejected its pastor and outraged its members, and they, the very best colored citizens in the county, and that for a period of sixty days demoralized and destroyed the labor of the county, and that for a like period of time sought to subdue them by vicious prosecution in courts presided over by men of this clan and clique.

That to particularize the many gross outrages and wrongs visited upon the people (white and colored) by these officials and their following would make a volume of 1,000 pages, certainly an article too long for publication in a newspaper; hence we mention the following as a few of their many wrongs and outrages:

1. That one of the party, a high county official, in the streets of Marion, publicly declared that they were going to have a war of races, which war was only prevented because the better class of colored men refused to follow and denounced the measure.

2. That this same high official with a drunken following at another time stopped the United States mail in transit upon the Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis Railroad, insulted the conductor, and would have taken him forcibly before one of the clan for trial but for the fact that Col. J. F. Smith, who happened to be present, went on his bond, and that upon the day fixed for trial this same official insulted the conductor in the grossest and most outrageous manner, delaying the conclusion of the case upon one pretext and another until all of the trains going both north and south had passed the town, and when the trial was concluded and the conductor discharged he repaired to the hotel for the night; that after dark this same official, with his friends and allies, drinking and drunk, went to the hotel and attempted to murder said conductor—which was also prevented by the prompt action of Colonel Smith—and all because said conductor had collected the usual fare from West Memphis to Marion from one of its members.

3. That at another time another of its members, York Byers, at a very recent date that same week an humble citizen who appeared in the sanctum of the Appeal, with an armed force of one hundred or more, took possession of and held the town of Crawfordville and its vicinity, and set up such a reign of terror and outlawry by shooting into the houses of Dr. John T. Harden and Mr. E. Back, two of our most prominent citizens, and doing other acts of violence and outrage too numerous to mention, that when the matter was brought to the attention of the grand jury, now in session, the parties who had been so wronged were summoned and did appear, but frankly said that they were afraid to tell the truth and so refused.

4. That at one of their meetings in the town of Marion reliable parties heard them declare that certain white and colored citizens must and should be assassinated.

5. That soon thereafter some six of our most worthy citizens and all the white people of the county were advised and warned to leave the country in five days under the penalty of death if they refused so to do, which said notices are in writing and are known to have emanated from the clerk's office and mailed in Marion, all because David Ferguson, the clerk, and Daniel W. Lewis, the judge of the county, were indicted at a former term of the court for drunkenness, and the witnesses indorsed upon the indictments were white people, and that having received such notices, the time being so short, the danger so imminent, threatening, and urgent, discretion dictated vigorous and prompt action, and not the slow, tardy process of the courts of the country; hence the action taken in the matter.

6. Now, in conclusion, we know and believe that the editor of the Appeal is a brave and true man, as well as a friend to the people, but in this instance his generosity is, in our judgment, at the expense of the safety of our wives and children; hence, in justice to ourselves, our wives and children, we can not and will not adopt his theory of action, or hear or entertain it from any other source declaring as we now do that no compromise can be had or considered.

To the editors of the Avalanche, Ledger, and Scimitar we extend our sincere thanks for their words of truth and soberness spoken and published in our defense.

WHAT THE COLORED PEOPLE SAY.

MARION, ARK., July 14, 1888.

To the Editor of the Avalanche:

We, the undersigned, colored citizens of the county of Crittenden, living in and around the town of Marion and its locality, having in mind and under consideration amongst ourselves the causes and influences of what is known as the "Crittenden County troubles," have determined in this manner to express our opinion thereof; not from any fear, real or threatened to us, our rights or our liberties, but that the world, through the channel of the papers, may learn and be advised from us that those "troubles" did not spring from and do not exist here on account of what some say is a war of the races on account of politics or otherwise. No such trouble exists.

But from the acts and conduct of a few vicious, drunken, and corrupt men of our race, who are and have been in office, such as judge, clerk, assessor, etc., of the county, and who have called to their aid a following equally as vicious, lawless, drunken, and corrupt as themselves, until, feeling safe in their power and not satisfied with usurping the government and control of our churches in the most secret and lawless manner, insulting by arrest and abuses our pastor and members by malicious prosecutions in the courts presided over and held by men of and in sympathy with them, they prostituted their various offices, and used the machinery thereof in the most villainous and corrupt way; that by its use the administration of justice here was a farce. Peace and order were destroyed. Chaos and confusion established instead.

The law was defied, and no sort of respect was entertained or had for the rights of any one, white or colored, who happened not to belong to their clique, or dared to disagree with them; that race war was discussed, fostered, freely and openly encouraged by them; that intemperance and prejudice alone fitted one for office, and thus, step by step, they sought by the use of the mails and threats of warning to force the whites of the county to leave, hoping thereby to save two of their leaders from a successful prosecution for drunkenness, etc. (Than which a more righteous accusation was never alleged against any man.)

After which another and a new lease of drunkenness, of crime, of outrages and wrongs would be created for them and in their interest; that, being persons of color, if we are influenced or biased in our feelings concerning this matter, we would naturally side with those of our own color; but being upon the grounds, familiar with the whole situation, a detail of which would make this communication too lengthy for publication, we can not find it in our hearts to either censure or blame our white citizens, aided and supported by men of our color, for what they have done in the past few days; and we each of us fully, cheerfully, and willingly indorse all and everything that has been done in and about the matter, and declare that if men ever had the right to strike in the defense of their lives, that of their families, their homes, and liberties, the white people of Crittenden County had that cause when they struck, and we commend them for it, and congratulate them as well as ourselves that, the "clouds having rolled by," we will have an era of peace, of law, of justice, of order, and sobriety in Crittenden County never heretofore known, and for which all ought to feel thankful, and by a proper exercise of all of our rights prevent a return thereof.

Governor Hughes over his own signature, in speaking of the Crittenden County trouble, said:

That occurred some weeks before the election, and about the time of the circuit court there, in which several obnoxious characters were forced by the citizens of that county to leave the county because, as is said, those who left being indicted for drunkenness in office, for which they were to be tried at the circuit court, had written threatening notes to the witnesses against them, ordering the witnesses to leave the county within five days or take the consequences of remaining. This was a sudden occurrence and was over before the governor had any information of it. Upon communicating with the judge of the circuit court, then in session, the governor was informed that the law would be enforced by the civil authorities, and that the whole matter would be investigated by the grand jury, and that there was no need of militia.

I do not pretend to defend the Crittenden County people in all they did, but I submit to my friends on the other side and to the country that if the facts are as alleged by these citizens, both white and black, they were justified in arming themselves for defense, as the Constitution gave them the right to do. Is there an intelligent community in the United States that would not prepare for defense under such circumstances as are described here? Remember that this was no militia company and the arms not State arms. The gentleman has referred to the alleged forged and false ex parte statements of certain parties in relation to this matter that were read on this floor in his contest case and made to serve so well the purpose intended here. I submit that the gentleman ought at least to have the fairness to let the matter rest as far as he and this House are concerned. Feeling outraged by the House, Judge Cate has appealed from the decision of the Republican caucus to the people interested, and in November next I am satisfied their verdict will be rendered with an emphasis that will leave no doubt as to who they want to represent them upon this floor. As the gentleman from Kansas inserted in the speech indorsed by my colleague an anonymous letter published in the Marion Reform, I will detain the House to state what I understand upon good authority to be the facts about the

BUFFALO BILL LETTER.

There was an organization in Crittenden County composed of young men and boys of different political creeds, some Democrats, some Republicans, and some Wheelers, and that they called themselves the "Crawfordsville Rifles." The organization had no political significance whatever. There were present on the day referred to parties who are opposed to each other, both as to local and national politics. Mr. C. E. Rasberry, who was present on the occasion that called forth the utterances of "Buffalo Bill," is a pronounced Republican, and has announced himself as a candidate for the sheriff's office, opposing Mr. W. F. Werner, the present sheriff of that county, and who was the captain of the organization. There were also other Republicans present, to wit, William Rasberry and James Huxtable. Mr. Jack Cox, a planter living near Marion, was drill-master of the company on account of his proficiency in the tactics, and is a man who takes no interest in politics.

The editor and proprietor of the Reform resides in Memphis, has never lived at Marion, knows nothing about the politics of that county, and has no interest there except what he can make out of his paper. On the occasion of the publication of "Buffalo Bill's" effusion, I am informed that the editor was sick at his home in Memphis, and his son, a boy of about fourteen, had charge of his office, and allowed the article to be published. The article was written by a party who was not present on the occasion of the drill of the company, who was not a member of the organization, who was not authorized to speak for or about them, and who has no interest in Crittenden County further than a precarious living he can make by doing odd jobs at odd times, and between jobs regaling himself with such cheap whisky as he can afford to get in Memphis. The people of Arkansas ought not to be judged by the utterances and writings of such men as "Buffalo Bill," and no fair-minded man will so judge them. They do not indorse it, but condemn all such foolish and silly utterances.

The members of the company promptly repudiated the article and denounced it as a slander upon them and the State generally. There were members of that company who preferred Mr. FEATHERSTON to Mr. Cate for Congress, but I hardly think they will approve his act in indorsing its use. The only surprise about the matter is that members of this House, in their capacity as members of the Committee on Elections, would use an anonymous letter written to an unknown and obscure country paper like this, as this has been used, without any knowledge of the character of the man who wrote it. The unqualified indorsement that my colleague has given the speech of the gentleman from Kansas carries with it the indorsement of the use of this falsehood and slander upon his constituents in Crittenden County.

ARKANSAS RECONSTRUCTION REPUBLICAN.

The gentleman with much warmth characterized the recent speech of Judge ROGERS as "simply an effort at the defamation of the character of two citizens of the State of Arkansas." Now, Mr. Speaker, who are these citizens in defense of whose character—God save the mark—the gentleman rushes forward to flesh his maiden sword on this floor? Let the gentleman himself answer. Hear him as he warms up in their defense:

So far as Judge McClure and Powell Clayton are concerned, they are citizens of Arkansas who stand equally as well with the Republicans of that State as the gentleman from the Fourth district stands with the Democrats.

The gentleman speaks as one who fully understands and knows the standing and rank of the members of the Republican party of Arkansas. I do not question his right to know and speak for them, but it would better become him, if he should speak at all, to answer the indictment brought against them, than to attempt to plead the statute of limitations as a defense for them. The gentleman complains that the record of their transactions, as detailed by Judge ROGERS, is old. This is indeed a sad fact for him and his friends, but let me assure my colleague that it is no fault of theirs that the wrongs are not more recent. That they have made no such official record in that State since 1874 is to the credit of the Democracy of Arkansas.

With the people of Arkansas the statute of limitations does not run against the reconstruction frauds, corruption, and thievery. I want to say to him that no length of time will wipe out from the recollection of the people of Arkansas the offenses for which his new associates and friends were driven from power. The unprecedented legislative pardon has kept many of them out of the penitentiary, but their infamies are not forgotten by the people, nor are they forgiven to the extent of trusting them with power again. The gentleman says he is "not here to defame Arkansas," and "not here to slander her people."

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McRAE. I have not time to yield further unless the gentleman controverts some statement of fact that I make.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. With regard to defaming anybody, I want to ask the gentleman this question: If I made the statement that there are six hundred men in the penitentiary in the State of Arkansas, is that a slander of the good citizens of the State? There was no one slandered save those in the penitentiary.

Mr. McRAE. There are perhaps six thousand men of the old Clayton crowd who, if they had justice, ought to be there, and would perhaps have been there but for the legislative pardon. The charge you made was against the Democratic party and State officials, which by this you class as felons.

Mr. KELLEY. Arkansas must be a bad State.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, if your slanders were true. The statement with reference to the penitentiary in connection with the Clayton and McClure reign is very appropriate.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I want you to understand that I have not slandered the good people of Arkansas, and that the ballot-box stuffers who have disgraced her name are not good citizens, and I will say that there are as noble and generous people in that State as there are on the face of this earth, and they are not slandered when I make charges as to ballot-box stuffers.

Mr. McRAE. This may be true, but the circumstances surrounding your contest, the methods used to get you here, and the promptness with which you join others in assailing the State administration would appear to contradict it. The fact stands out in bold relief that your first and only effort on this floor was in defense of those who have wronged the people, and whose greatest delight has been, and is now, in traducing their good name. The gentleman has also indorsed speeches and interviews full of misrepresentations touching affairs in the State.

No one will question the right of the gentleman to admit the truth of so much of the statement of the gentlemen from Kansas as declares that "he [Mr. FEATHERSTON] is a Republican." It is immaterial as to whether he was a soldier or not, and he knows and has the undisputed right to fix his own political status, but since he claimed to be a Democrat during the canvass of 1888, and said he voted for Cleveland, he should tell us when, why, and for what he became a Republican. Since the gentleman from Kansas says he is a Republican, and since he sits with them, and on all close party questions votes with them, and turns for them the crank of the outrage mill we will admit it, but, Mr. Speaker, I deny his right to admit for the State, or any part of it, the truth of the imputation involved in the statement as to political murders under the present State administration.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say—

Mr. McRAE. I can not yield any further to the gentleman.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I want to say that it was with regret that I left the party, and only on account of the election frauds for which I considered it responsible.

Mr. McRAE. "Every dead man a Republican, every assassin a Democrat, is also true. Political murder seems to be a pastime, and a 'nigger hunt,' as a sport, is as exhilarating as the old-time 'fox hunt,'" shouts the gentleman from Kansas. And the gentleman from the First Arkansas district, taking up the acclaim, says, "These are just as he stated."

Now let us see if "every dead man is a Republican." No one knows better than the gentleman himself that the first man killed in the riot in his own town was the Democratic town marshal, Mr. Folbre, and because he met his death in the discharge of his official duty at the hands of one of the political friends of the gentleman does not warrant the gentleman in suppressing the truth and indorsing a falsehood for party purposes.

I now pause to ask him why he would attempt to make such an impression. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. The gentleman also knows that the first blood shed in St. Francis County growing out of the troubles of 1888 was at the hands of the negro leader, Neeley, who undertook to bulldoze and terrorize such of the colored Republicans as would not follow him in his support of the gentleman and other so-called "Fusionists."

A dreadful riot ensued, one colored man was killed and several others were wounded. Neeley died while under indictment for this offense. The gentleman also knows that at Millbrook, in the darkness of night, a party of white Democrats were fired into from ambush and some of them wounded, and that a short time before a party of mounted Fusionists were seen going in that direction. In the face of all this he asserts that it is true that "every dead man is a Republican, and every assassin a Democrat." Here is what I believe to be a truthful summing up of this unfortunate and sad tragedy:

Every unbiased man must feel that the men of Forrest City, even while their passions were most inflamed, acted with a deliberation and prudence that is worthy of commendation. They saw a Republican negro murdered because he would not desert his party principles; they saw seven peaceable white men shot down in the dark hours of the night for no crime; and this experience no doubt brought about a union between the Republicans and Democrats, who both believed that the Fusion party sought their lives, and that in their union lay their strength. It was the Fusionists who issued the declaration of war; it was a Fusionist who drew the first pistol; it was a Fusionist who fired the first shot; it was a Democrat who first fell; it was a union of Democrats and Republicans who swept the streets like a tornado—a tornado that the Fusionists raved as the result of the sowing of the seed of race prejudices in the past. It was Federal and Confederate soldiers that at once formed themselves into a company to maintain the peace and protect the property of the city. It was the blue and the gray that for five long weary nights guarded every avenue of approach to the town.

RECONSTRUCTION AND ITS RESULTS.

Mr. Speaker, I have never, either here or elsewhere, purposely said any thing that was calculated to arouse or keep alive sectional hate and bitterness. I believe in political organizations, and believe that this Government can best be administered by the application of the principles and policies enunciated by that historic constitutional party of which I am proud to be a member. I am proud of it because it is in no sense sectional, but extends its organization, proclaims its doctrines, and wins its victories in every part of our restored, reunited, and common country. I am attached to my State and proud of our beloved Southland, but above all and beyond all I love the Union of all the States, and desire to see no legislation that is calculated to revive the bitter memories of the war or restore in the South the methods of reconstruction. I want peace and contentment for the whole country.

I had no part in the late war and take on none of the prejudices that grow out of it. I was less than ten years of age when it began and not fourteen when it ended, but I know how the people of my State suffered during those four years, and how they struggled under oppression after it, and how they feel toward the Union today. They are as loyal to the flag as the people of any part of this great country. I know that the soldiers of the Confederate army who survived the war surrendered in good faith and returned home to witness a poverty and desolation beyond description. They had no money, no credit, no provisions, no stock, and no farm implements. Their fields had been laid waste and many of the houses burned. Without a murmur they went to work, relying upon the promises made to them at the time of the surrender.

To borrow the language of my eloquent friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]—

It was a pathetic but glorious spectacle that conquered and beggared people amid the ruins of their States and the destruction of their hopes, surrounded by the graves of their beloved slain, and in the depths of poverty, intensely at work for their daily bread and resolutely set on doing the best possible under the circumstances encompassing them.

While thus engaged in trying to rebuild the waste places, and relying upon the declaration of President Lincoln and the resolutions of Congress that the war was only waged to protect the Constitution, and not for conquest, the party then in power, with a two-thirds majority in both Houses, began to insist that the South should be reconstructed and treated as a conquered province. The reconstruction act of 1867 was passed and every provision of the Constitution violated to accomplish the same purpose as is desired by this bill—the success of the Republican party.

The illustrious Judge Jerry Black said of it, as can well be said of this, that—

If the Constitution still lived, this act of Congress was a gross breach of the oath which the members had taken to support it; if we suppose it dead, the act was a most indecent outrage on its corpse.

Martial law was proclaimed and the people held at the mercy of the military officers. Many of these refused to do the dirty work of oppression for the Republican party. The most striking instance was that of the immortal Hancock, God bless his name, who startled those in authority by the publication of his celebrated letter in favor of civil law. These military men, courageous lovers of law and liberty, were called in, and instead the carpet-baggers sent in the name of law to harass and oppress the people. They sprang upon our people like the lice of Egypt.

These were generally the meanest of adventurers, dregs of Northern society, who went for no other purpose except to plunder and oppress the people of the South. They took control of affairs by disfranchising the white people, organized the courts, and by fraud had themselves elected or appointed to all the political and judicial offices. It is no wonder that under such circumstances crimes were frequent.

If there were crimes committed they were excited by you. I think now, as I thought then, the treason of ministers against the liberty of the people is much more culpable than the rebellion against ministers.

Mr. Speaker, these are the words of the immortal Grattan, spoken in the English Parliament in defense of Ireland when oppressed as the South was during the days of reconstruction, and as she may be again if this bill should become a law.

While it is true that crimes were committed by the Southern people it is also true, as in the case of Ireland, they were excited by those who were sent to rule over them. It was once said on this floor that "history, with its long line of infamous characters who have linked their names to their crimes" and emblazoned their names to eternal infamy, furnishes one striking character that those spoilers of the South should canonize as their patron saint, and that one is Verres, who in three years after he obtained the administration of Sicily, then "the richest and most highly favored province of the Republic of Rome, amassed enormous wealth and fairly rendered that island desolate by his rapacity. Victory tainted in the estimation of the robber the wealth and beauty of the island. This man was driven to an execrable fate nearly two thousand years ago by the senate of Rome for thus plundering a foreign province."

While Verres is perhaps the most striking official robber found in history, his rapacity falls far short of that exhibited by the carpet-baggers who ruled Arkansas, and whom this bill is designed to restore to power. They appropriated to their own use almost everything that they could get their hands on in that State, and then by the issue of State, county, and municipal bonds created for their own profit liabilities nearly equal to all the taxable values in the State at the time. The greatest of Pennsylvania lawyers, in contrasting the Southern carpet-baggers with the robbers of the Old World, said that—wasted; the Norman did not strip the Saxon quite to the skin; the Puritans under Cromwell did not utterly desolate Ireland. Their rapacity was confined to the visible things which they could presently handle and use. They could not take what did not exist. But the American carpet-bagger has an invention unknown to those old-fashioned robbers, which increases his stealing power as much as the steam-engine adds to the mechanical force of mere natural muscles. He makes negotiable bonds of the State, signs and seals them "according to the forms of law," sells them, converts the proceeds to his own use, and then defies justice "to go behind the returns."

By this device his felonious fingers are made long enough to reach into the pockets of posterity; he lays his lien on property yet uncreated; he anticipates the labor of coming ages and appropriates the fruits of it in advance; he coins the industry of future generations into cash, and snatches the inheritance from children whose fathers are unborn. Projecting his chest forward by this contrivance and operating laterally at the same time, he gathers an amount of plunder which no country in the world would have yielded to the Goth or Vandal.

No State in the South was cursed with a more daring, reckless and unscrupulous gang of carpet-bag plunderers than Arkansas. It would require volumes to recount the many outrages upon our defenseless people. Finally the people rose in their might and hurled them from power, since which we have had a growth in wealth and population not equaled by any State. Many of them still live in the State, and not a few hold office under the present Administration. The man who controlled and directed these operations as the carpet-bag governor is now deputy president for Arkansas and absolutely controls the Federal patronage to such an extent that he is consulted about all offices in the State, even the smallest post-offices, and no one who is not his obedient tool can be appointed. If this bill passes he will again control the elections.

With the Federal patronage and the aid of some renegade Democrats, who for place and power have deserted their party and are willing to "bow the neck and lick the infamous hand that holds the end to them," these same men, many of whom have grown rich by robbing the State, still seek under the guise of first one new party and then another, with the false charge of election frauds, the Democratic party to get control of the State again, and this bill is intended to aid them in doing so. They constantly malign and slander the State and Democratic party so as to make a pretext for such legislation. These are the men whose record my colleague [Judge ROGERS] so forcibly and truthfully furnished the House.

These are the men upon whose testimony you must rely for voting upon the country this extraordinary bill. These are the men for whose benefit the measure is pressed. These are the men who will control the offices provided for, levy and disburse the taxes, and who will begin another career of thievery, robbery, demoralization, and disfranchisement of our people. With such a record are you, gentlemen of the majority, willing to take their statement against the protest of the great body of the tax-payers and citizens of the State?

CONCLUSION.

Will you be willing by such legislation to check our prosperity and turn back the tide of immigration and capital now pouring into the State? Are you willing to destroy the confidence of Northern capital?

Will you disturb that friendly relation that now exists between the laborer and the employer? Will you disintegrate the one and intimidate the other? I beg of you to stop and consider the effect of this measure upon the whole country, for if you injure the South you affect the North. Leave our people to work out their own destiny under the law, and all will be well in the end.

The people of Arkansas have caught the spirit of the age, and with enterprise and energy are pushing to the front. She has at last waked up to her immense possibilities, and, with just legislation and a cessation of all this unnecessary agitation about the supposed race problem and imaginary Southern outrages that do not exist, in a few years will accomplish wonders.

I invite you to a closer knowledge of the condition of affairs before you take this reckless step. Come among our people and see the pleasant relations that exist between the races; see the towns and cities, the beautiful farms and orchards, upon which are grown almost all the farm products, fruits, and vegetables that can be grown anywhere, including that great staple, cotton, in which we led all the States in quality and quantity per acre at the World's Exposition at New Orleans; apples, for which we carried off the premium of the American Pomological Society in 1886; the churches and colleges and public schools for which we are paying a greater rate of taxes than any State in the Union; the 20,000,000 acres of timber lands and the 4,000,000 acres of coal and iron lands waiting for the manufacturer's capital.

If you will not come and see the evidences of prosperity and elements of success, then I invite your attention to the Eleventh Census now being taken, so far as it relates to Arkansas and to the exhibit she will make at Chicago in 1892. But, whatever you do, do not afflict us with this bill, which is sure to produce a conflict between the races in some localities that will produce disorder, incendiarism, murder, and a general disorganization. Hands off, and I pledge you that justice shall be done to all classes in Arkansas.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the following proceedings took place:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. PEEL] is entitled to time this evening, and he has promised to yield me such time as he has.

Mr. PEEL. I will yield my colleague such time as I have at my disposal.

Mr. MCRAE. I hope the gentleman who comes next will not object to my finishing my remarks now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired. Mr. MCRAE. I ask leave to print a communication written by a prominent citizen of Arkansas that does not relate to this matter particularly, but to the reconstruction period.

APPENDIX.

WHY THE SOLID SOUTH?—RECONSTRUCTION IN THE SOUTH AND ITS RESULTS—WHY ARKANSAS REMAINS SOLIDLY DEMOCRATIC.

Crimination and recrimination are as repugnant to good taste as they are to my own inclination. Between sections of a common country they are criminal. Under this conviction, and that all parts of our Republic might be fraternized and united in a combined effort to build up our great nationality, the Southern statesmen have abstained from replying to the many slanders against the Southern people, which have been widely circulated by Republican leaders, until their unanswered reiteration has led to the belief that they are true, and has produced such widespread and deep-rooted prejudices among their less informed followers as to amount, in the judgment of thinking and patriotic men, to a serious danger to our institutions.

As evidenced by the character of the late Presidential campaign in the North, that section is becoming as separate and antagonistic as if we were two distinct and hostile empires.

Surely this is to be deplored, and surely it becomes a public duty of Southern men, who know the facts, to disabuse the minds of the more candid of our fellow-citizens of the North; to let them see that the antagonism of the people of the South to the Republican party is in no sense an antagonism to the Northern section of our common country; to show them that the conduct of this party in the South was such as not only to repel the patriotism and decency of the South, but was also such as should serve as a monumental warning to the American people against all attempts to seek party advantages through illegitimate or doubtful legislative enactment.

It is under this conviction of duty that I have consented to write this review of reconstruction in Arkansas.

Nor is there the slightest admixture of malice in anything I shall say. Accordingly, I shall not mention names except when absolutely necessary. I write not of persons, but of conditions and methods and outrages, which I could have hoped it might never be necessary to recall.

Indeed, many a man who participated in these outrages, when surrounded by the temptations thrown around him by the then condition, has become a respected and law-abiding citizen since he has been surrounded by the better influences of Democratic supremacy. I shall respect his present standing, holding myself ready, however, to furnish names upon any demand entitled to respect.

To obtain a clear appreciation of the state of things in Arkansas during reconstruction, it will be necessary to show how the carpet-bag government was foisted upon our people by Congress, and also what sort of government it was.

It was well known that the Southern people had returned from the civil war utterly impoverished. Their desolate homes were without furniture, without fencing, without labor, and often without houses; nothing was left for the support of themselves and their families except their own courage and manhood, and therefore they could not afford to lose time at elections except upon the most important questions.

Accordingly, when the Republican Congress, in the reconstruction act of March 23, 1867, section 5, enacted "That . . . if Congress shall be satisfied that such constitution meets the approval of a majority of all the qualified electors, . . . and the constitution shall be approved by Congress, the State shall be declared entitled to representation, . . . etc.," the people of Arkansas were disposed to be grateful to them for thus recognizing their impoverished condition and the consequent value to their families of their time in thus enabling them to defeat an onerous constitution by simply remaining at their much-needed labors at home, not to vote at all being equivalent to voting against it.

Thus grateful, and relying implicitly upon the good faith of Congress, the people pursued their labors in security, feeling assured that nothing very damaging to their interests would be consummated without their consent.

A constitutional convention met and formulated a constitution which was so unrepugnant in its schedule that the people did not dream that Congress would approve it, and accordingly not nearly half of them voted upon its ratification.

Its schedule gave three men, James L. Hodges, Joseph Brooks, and Thomas M. Bowen, such absolute control of the election of State and county officials under it that they could elect or defeat whom they wished.

Section 4 gave them power to select such judges and clerks of election as they saw fit, and to hold the election as long as they might wish in order to afford the negroes opportunity to vote in as many districts as might be needed. (See military report of General A. C. Gillem upon election in Pulaski County, April 22, 1868.)

Section 8 gave them power to reject or count all votes which seemed to them legal or illegal, fraudulent or rightful.

Section 11 gave these election judges the right to allow any vote with which they might be "satisfied."

This constitution provided for the election of State and county officers under this schedule, which was directly contrary to the act of Congress, inasmuch as the constitution had neither received the "approval of a majority of all the qualified electors," nor had been "approved" by Congress; and so grateful were the people to Congress for its supposed protection in the acts above quoted, the Democrats, almost to a man, refused to insult Congress by voting at this separate election, in defiance of their authority.

But alas! On the second day after the election had begun, and in the afternoon, the following telegram was received by General A. C. Gillem, the officer commanding:

"WASHINGTON, March 13, 1868.

"The last amendatory act passed is now law. It provides that majority of votes actually cast determines adoption or rejection of constitution; also that electors may at the same time vote for members of Congress and all the elective officers provided for by said constitution.

"U. S. GRANT.

"Maj. Gen. A. C. GILLEM."

This notification, coming two days after the election had begun, too late, as every Congressman well knew, for the electors of a State having neither railroads nor telegraphs ever to hear of its existence in time for use, was the most extensive outrage upon the ballot ever perpetrated in the United States.

Congress first got the confidence of the people, and then took advantage of it to betray and virtually to disfranchise them.

These elections, held separate from those for the ratification of the constitution, to avoid the military surveillance under which the latter were held, resulted in the organization of county, town, and State governments elected by a mere tithe of voters. In Green County, for instance, the sheriff was elected by a total vote of 8; the clerk, by a total vote of 7; the State senator, from the district composed of Lawrence, Randolph, and Green Counties, was elected by a total vote of 30.

The assurance with which these carpet-bag citizens, fresh from the districts of these Congressmen, assumed that they would be sustained by Congress; the ready acceptance by that body of a constitution having such a schedule and which the commanding-general declared was not ratified except by counting 1,900 votes which were fraudulent, and the opportune time at which this last "amendatory act" was passed and telegraphed, all bear unmistakable earmarks of a conspiracy between the Congress and the carpet-bag government.

Nor did the conspiracy end with the establishment of their State and county governments.

Recognizing the fact that they had been elected to office by an insignificant minority, the officials were shrewd enough to know that in order to hold their ill-gotten power it was necessary that they should have absolute control, first, of the future elections; second, of the revenues. But, first of all, they knew that, as there was likely to be trouble as soon as the people should find out how basely they had been betrayed and how wantonly they were to be plundered of every sacred right of the citizen, it was necessary that they should be thoroughly intimidated.

Their first Legislature in 1868 addressed themselves to these three tasks with the ingenuity of the brigand.

INTIMIDATION.

Although General C. H. Smith, United States Army, commanding the district of Arkansas, wrote to his superior officer that there was no state of facts existing in Arkansas to warrant such a step, upon the flimsiest pretext the governor declared martial law in a number of counties where the people were most outspoken in their denunciation of the government which had been thus foisted upon them without their consent. Negro militia marched and marauded and murdered at will through these counties.

I might fill page after page with their atrocities, but I forbear, lest their detail stir up animosities which could do no good, but were better suppressed.

They grew, however, to such enormity as to shock especially the "old citizens," who were members of the Legislature and who were not fully into the secrets of the conspiracy between the Congress and their carpet-bag representatives, as will be seen by the following general order:

LITTLE ROCK, December 4, 1868.

GENERAL: I am instructed by the governor to write you as follows:

"Although the Legislature in the first part of the session fully indorsed the action of his excellency in declaring martial law and putting into active service the State guards, it is apparent now that many of them are 'weakening,' especially are the old citizens beginning to refuse that support which should be given the executive at this time. In order to prevent the growth of this feeling and to take advantage of this faction it is desirable that our military operations be pushed to an end within the next thirty days. All we can do now is to show the rebels that we can march the militia through any county in the State whenever it is necessary. Use every effort to catch the desperadoes in Woodruff, Craighead, and Greene Counties.

"I hope you will end your operations in your section as soon as possible. You see we are likely not only to have to fight the rebels, but the Legislature also. We don't propose to allow any advantage."

I am, General, your obedient servant,

KEYES DANFORTH,
Adjutant-General.

Brigadier-General UPHAM,
Commanding District Northeast Arkansas.

In another order to General S. W. Mallory, commanding southeast district of Arkansas, on the 25th day of December, 1868, ten days afterwards, the following sentence occurs: "He," the governor, "thinks you may safely execute many of them. It is absolutely necessary that some examples be made."

"PRIVATE SECRETARY."

It will be seen that he dare not sign his name to this carte blanche commission to murder.

His caution, however, was quite unnecessary, as the Legislature subsequently passed an amnesty act forbidding the punishment of any of the murders or other outrages committed by the militia. The act is here inserted. I would call especial attention to the phrase, "or otherwise," and its significance as it occurs in two places in the act. It covers a multitude of wanton crimes:

"An act to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the governor of the State of Arkansas, and acts done in pursuance thereof, or of his orders in the declaration of martial law."

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas:

"SECTION 1. That all acts, proclamations, and orders of the governor of the State of Arkansas, or acts done by his authority, or approved after the 3d day of November, 1868, and before the 1st day of April, 1869, respecting martial law, military trials by courts-martial, or military commissions, or the arrest and imprisonment, or trials of persons charged with any offense against the State, or any resistance to the laws thereof, or as aiders and abettors thereof, or as guilty of any disloyal practice in aid thereof, or of affording aid and comfort to those engaged therein, and all proceedings and acts done by the military forces, or had by courts-martial or military commissions, arrests, imprisonments, searches and seizures made in the premises by any person by the authority of the orders or proclamations of the governor of the State, made as aforesaid, or in aid thereof, or otherwise, are hereby approved in all respects, legalized, and made valid to the same extent and with the same effect as if said orders, proclamations, and acts had been issued and made, and said arrests and imprisonments, searches and seizures, proceedings and acts, had been done under the previous express authority and directions of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, and in pursuance of the laws thereof, previously enacted, and expressly authorizing and directing the same to be done.

"And no courts of the State of Arkansas shall have or take jurisdiction of, or in any manner review any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid; nor shall any person be held to answer in any court of said State for any act done, or omitted to be done, in pursuance of or in aid of any of said proclamations, or orders, or otherwise, by any of said force or forces in the period aforesaid, and all officers and other persons in the State of Arkansas, or who acted in aid thereof, acting in the premises or otherwise, shall be held to be prima facie to have been authorized by the governor of the State: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit the convening of courts-martial for the trial of persons belonging to the militia or State guards of this State.

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage. Approved April 6, 1869."

Under these orders right energetically did they "push their military operations." Democrats, who were most outspoken, were arrested without charge, carried off, nobody knows, even to this date, where in some instances; others were tied up and shot to death; others whipped, others imprisoned, and all robbed of personal property.

They seemed to act in these outrages, as in many others, upon the assumption that the more atrocious the outrage the less it would be believed in the civilized world, while the very complaints of them could be used as evidence of "rebel lies," and "rebel bitterness and disloyalty."

If it would serve any good purpose I might give scores of instances in detail. But suffice it to say that the very fact that any man connected with these murders and outrages could reside in Arkansas for from fifteen to twenty-five years afterward unmolested is the highest possible tribute to the love of peace and order of the people of the State.

ELECTIONS.

Their first election law is a model of mockery. It should be preserved in the archives of the nation as at once a history and an admonition.

Section 2270 (Gant's Digest) gave the governor, with the consent of the senate, power to select all the registrars of votes.

Section 2274 gave him power to fill all vacancies (which were sure to occur) when he wished it. (See page 23,* Poland's Report No. 5, to the Forty-second Congress, second session.)

Section 2270 gave him the right to select the president of the board of registrars.

Section 2281 gave the board of registrars power to reject any vote at will.

Section 2288 gave the board of review the power to erase the names of those who had registered, if they saw fit to do so.

Section 2307 gave the board the power to select all clerks and judges of election.

To make the job complete, section 2300 forbade any interference by the courts of justice.

Under this farce all the elections of the State were held until, in 1874, they had become so shocking to decency, the people by a vote of ten to one (or 88,000 to 8,000) demanded its overthrow.

I might fill a thousand pages, as the report of Hon. Mr. Poland, of Vermont, fills upward of 600 pages, with outrages upon the ballot perpetrated with impunity under this act, but in the interest of brevity I will cite only a few by way of illustrating each species.

No. 1.—ERASING FROM REGISTRATION BOOKS.

The favorite scheme and the one practiced in every precinct in the State, where it was necessary, was to first register all who were entitled to vote and then meet in review in some private place and scratch off with red ink such names as were necessary to secure their majority, under section 2288, which gave them that power.

In this legislative district, composed of the counties of Franklin, Crawford, Sebastian, and Scott, just before the election of 1872, 2,500 names of legal voters were erased by the board of review after they had been registered.

(See the depositions of many of them in Poland Report No. 23, pages 35 to 52.)

In this county the board struck off 1,300 names.

(See testimony of one of the board, H. A. Pearce, Poland Report No. 2, page 70.)

Many of these were Union men and ex-Federal soldiers.

No. 2.—THROWING OUT COUNTIES AND PRECINCTS.

Another favorite plan was to have their friends get up some sort of irregularity in precincts or counties, and then use them for a pretext for throwing out the precinct or county vote entire.

In 1872, after all the returns had come up to the secretary of state, it was found that Brooks was elected governor. That official (the secretary of state) sent the returns back to be "doctored" and letters were written to the clerks to amend returns, and excuses were gathered up for throwing out enough precincts and counties to elect Baxter. Democratic precincts in Van Buren County, all but one in Conway County, all of Green, Johnson, Scott, and Poinsett Counties were thrown out. Leading Republicans went all over the State to attend to the "doctoring."

(See Poland's Report No. 2, pages 244, 245, 253, and 67 to 75.)

In Hot Springs County, in 1868, the registrar began to register votes, and had registered perhaps a dozen when several gentlemen came into the yard to register. They were quietly laughing and conversing among themselves about every-day matters, when the registrar jumped up and said he wanted protection. The bystanders were astonished. They asked him what he meant. He replied that if he could not get protection he would quit, and immediately picked up his book and left.

Nobody understood it until a few days afterward a proclamation of the governor declared that no election would be held in this county. The registrar had selected an out-of-way precinct to enact this farce. Thus this Democratic county was wholly disfranchised.

No. 3.—ERASING AND STUFFING.

In Hot Springs County, in 1872, a candidate for State senator fraudulently struck off three hundred names from the registration books and substituted in their stead several hundred straw names, and after the election, his brother being clerk, he called off these straw names and his brother added them to the poll-list and voted them. Many of the names scratched off were Republicans, but would not vote for senator. (See Poland Report No. 5, pages 22 to 24.)

In Caddo Township, in Clark County, the poll-book showed 1,148, whereas the registration-book and the census showed only 899. (See Poland Report No. 5, page 25.)

In Missouri Township the candidate for clerk, who was one of the judges of election, stole and stuffed the ballot-box 490 votes. This stuffing elected him.

In Antioch Township only seventeen names registered, but 121 voted in 1870, etc.

No. 4.—STEALING ONE BOX AND SUBSTITUTING ANOTHER.

In the town of Van Buren, Crawford County, a leading negro was instructed to place sentinels upon the various roads leading into town and to keep back negro voters until the afternoon. He was not told why.

The supervisors of election were also kept outside until after dinner. The Democrats voted in the forenoon. When the judges and clerks and supervisors went upstairs to dinner, a box already prepared, having as many votes in it as had voted in the forenoon, and all Republican votes, was substituted for the one in which the forenoon votes had been cast and which was stolen. It was afterward found in the garret with the Democratic votes all in it.

In the afternoon the negroes and Republicans did their voting in this new box, which was the one counted. (See Poland's Report No. 2, pages 36, 49, and 50.)

No. 5.—SECRETLY CHANGING POLLING-PLACES AND STUFFING.

In Richland Township, in Crawford County, the polling-place was secretly changed on the night before the election of 1872 from the place where it had been for thirty years and removed 6 miles to a cane-brake on the farm of the United States marshal of the western district of Arkansas. The negroes and Republicans were advised of the change, but not the Democrats.

A box with 50 votes in it, all Republican, was taken to the polling-place, and

* The Republican House of the Forty-second Congress, second session, raised a committee, of which Mr. Poland, of Vermont was chairman and sent them to Arkansas to investigate the affairs of Arkansas to ascertain if we had a republican form of government.

they were kept in the boxes and counted by the judges. The box was taken 10 miles away in another township, and there the votes were counted. (See Poland Report No. 2, pages 36 and 37.)

NO. 6.—DEFEATING REGISTRATION.

The board of registrars would meet at the appointed time for registration, but would only let a few Republicans in, and then adjourn to the next day. People would come for miles for three or four days at a time, but as they could not get in they would get discouraged and go home. In Clarksville and Newport and other places not one in ten could register. (See Poland Report No. 2, pages 284, 289, and 290.)

NO. 7.—CERTIFICATION.

It was a favorite boast of the clerk of Union County that "the Democrats must think I am a d—d fool if they ever expect me to certify a Democrat as elected while I am clerk."

NO. 8.—EXCHANGING.

In 1872, in Cache precinct, in Monroe County, 125 more votes were voted for Brooks for governor than the judges returned. Brooks's votes were given to Baxter and, Baxter's to Brooks.

But why multiply examples? Let any candid man read the 600 pages of Mr. Poland's two reports to the Forty-second Congress, second session, and say whether, if any Arkansian were seeking a generic phrase, which would include every species of outrage upon the ballot ever invented by man, he would not be justifiable in terming it

"REPUBLICANIZING THE BALLOT?"

Let it not be forgotten that I have not referred to the testimony of Democrats before that committee, but to that of Republicans and men, too, who had participated in the outrages to which they swore. They had perpetrated the outrages to secure the election of Baxter as governor, but when he proved more honest to the people than they had expected, they swore to their own infamy to get him unseated, and had been sustained so long by all the departments of Government, they fully expected Congress to do their bidding and reinstate them in their organized plunder.

REVENUES.

Their first revenue law is exquisite in the ingenuity of its plan of plunder.

Responsible alone to public sentiment of the North, they dared not make the rate of taxation too exorbitant, but raised their enormous revenues through enormous assessments, which could more readily be hidden from public view.

For an illustration, in 1865, the first year of Democratic rule after the war, and before reconstruction, the tax on the north half of section 1, township 4 south, range 3 west, was $2.40. In 1873, the last year of Republican rule, the tax on the same tract was $29.70, or upward of

TWELVE TIMES AS MUCH.

Or to take two other periods, in 1888, when property all over Arkansas was more valuable than ever before, a house and twelve lots in DeWitt was assessed at $1,600 under Democratic régime.

In 1871, under Republican rule, the same house, with only half as many lots and not nearly so well improved, was assessed at $4,640, or nearly five times as much.

The tax on the same house, greatly improved, with twelve lots, was, in 1888, under Democratic rule, $14.60.

In 1871, on same house with only half as many lots, under Republican rule, the tax was $92.80, or nearly seven times as much.

These remarkable differences were effected through the instrumentality of their peculiar assessment law. It is a curious document.

Section 38 gave the governor power to appoint and remove all assessors.

Section 156 gave the assessor $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. commission upon all taxes collected as a bribe to assess largely.

Section 47 required him to swear that he had not assessed any property at less than its cash value. He could assess at as much more as he pleased and no questions asked. Not only did the governor hold the power of removal in terrorem over him; not only did they bribe him by large commissions; not only did they swear him not to assess too little, but sections 53 and 64 made it the duty of the county clerk to revise the assessor's return, and to add as much as he saw fit, but forbid him to reduce "in any case."

Section 154 gave the clerk a bribe for adding in the shape of fees, depending upon the number of words.

Sections 57 and 66 organized a county board of equalization composed of this same assessor, this same clerk, and two other county officials interested in the large tax crops. To this board it was said:

"You may raise any assessment you think proper or reduce in any case you wish, but you shall not reduce the aggregate value of the property of the county below the aggregate value thereof as returned by the assessor with the additions of the clerk as hereinbefore required."

Or as it was construed and acted upon, "You may take from a Republican as much as you please, but you must put it upon the Democrats so as not to reduce the aggregate."

EXTRAVAGANT RESULTS.

Under Democratic rule the amount expended for State purposes for the two and one-half years from April 18, 1864, to October 1, 1866, was only $162,000, or $64,000 per annum.

Under Republican rule for two years ending October 1, 1870, the amount expended for State purposes was $1,949,456.72, or upward of $974,000 per annum, or more than fifteen times as much.

For two years ending October 1, 1872, the amount expended was $1,805,137.98, or upwards of $902,000 per annum, being upward of fourteen times as much.

For the two years ending October 1, 1874, the amount expended was $2,529,686.91, or upwards of $1,264,000 per annum, being more than nineteen times as much.

In addition to these amounts collected and expended during these six years under Republican rule, they left outstanding claims amounting to $2,147,950.39, which have been paid by Democrats since and which increase their annual average expenditure to $1,259,140.03, or nineteen times as much as under Democratic rule just past before they got power.

One item will serve to account for this vast difference.

It seems to have been necessary to import carpet-baggers to do the dirty work of this illegitimate government from which the old citizens recoiled, and when they came to Little Rock it was necessary to provide for them until they were needed in their respective fields of duty. Accordingly they were put upon payrolls as clerks of some of the departments. For instance:

Under the Democrats in 1866, the auditor's office included that of land commissioner. The clerk-hire for that year amounted to $8,373.60.

Under Republican rule in 1873, the office has been divided into two, the clerk-hire in one-half (auditor's office proper) amounting during the year to $60,461.21, in the other half to $43,673.30, being a total of $104,134.51, or upwards of twenty-three times as much. (See special-report of auditor, January 7, 1887.)

That there be no quibbling about periods, let us take two others for comparison.

During the six years of Republican rule there were expended for State purposes (not including school expenses) a total of $7,555,840.21, being an average of $1,259.03 per annum. Of this vast sum less than $100,000, or one seventy-fifth part, were expended for public improvements.

During six years of Democratic rule, from 1860 to 1866 (after most of the floating debt had been paid off), the total cost of State government (not including school expenses) was $2,173,446.66, and of this more than $500,000, or nearly one-fourth, was for public buildings.

Deducting amount for public buildings, and we have under Democratic rule for six years a total of $1,673,446.66, or about $278,000 per annum.

Deducting amount for public buildings under Republican rule, and we have left a total of $7,454,840.21, or upwards of $1,242,000 per annum. But it should be remembered that a very large part of the expenses under Democratic rule is for care of State institutions built by Democrats, and not in existence during the Republican régime.

But it must not be forgotten, if we would rightly appreciate the enormity of their plunder, that I have been speaking of State taxes and State expenses alone. The county, town, and school district taxes and expenses were very much more extravagant and burdensome, the rate of taxes in the various counties and towns ranging from 2 per cent. to 6 per cent. and school-district tax from 2 per cent. to 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and upon assessments often more than the property would sell for. These enormous taxes, taken together with the State tax, amounted, in hundreds and thousands of instances, to confiscation. In Union County hundreds of farms were abandoned.

In Arkansas County 2,510 tracts of land were sold for taxes in 1868.

In this city, then a village, in 1873 a widow lady, who made a living by sewing, was taxed $50 on a piece of a lot fronting on a back alley, and having a house which could be built for from $300 to $400. It was more money than she had ever had at one time in her life. My wife, moved to tears at her deep distress at the prospective and inevitable loss of her home, persuaded me to pay her taxes as an act of charity.

The whole State was filled with despondency and gloom. No wonder that the next year there was such an overwhelming demand for the overthrow of the conspiracy.

But the half has not yet been told. In addition to all these vast revenues collected and wantonly expended, they left the State and every county, town, and school district in the State overwhelmed with debts.

If there is a single exception I have not been able to find it out.

I doubt not that the aggregate of these county debts amounted to more than the entire State debt, including the fraudulent bonds of the State, and yet there was absolutely nothing to show for them.

The school district of Fort Smith, for example, was left so deeply in debt that for several years a number of us had to support the public schools by private subscriptions, while the entire tax was appropriated to paying off its debts.

This county was left a debt of about $100,000, with not $500 worth of improvements to show for it.

The county of Clark was left a debt of $300,000, of which only $500 was expended in public improvements.

Chicot County had a debt of $400,000, with no quid pro quo handed down from the conspiracy.

Pulaski County had a debt left her of nearly if not quite $1,000,000 (including Little Rock).

The scrips of the various towns, counties, and school districts were worth only from 10 cents to 30 cents on the dollar. Even the State scrip, bearing 5 per cent. interest, was worth only 25 cents on the dollar.

On the other hand, when the Democrats got into power, in 1874, their constitution made the maximum of State taxes 1 per cent. (we levy only one-half of that); that of the county one-half of 1 per cent.; that of cities and towns one-half of 1 per cent.; that of school districts one-half of 1 per cent. And it also forbids the issue of any bonds or other interest-bearing evidences of debt for any purpose except to pay pre-existing debts.

Yet notwithstanding these low rates we have taken up upwards of two millions of the floating debt of the State, paid off several hundred thousand dollars of bonded debt, paid off nearly all the county and school debts, have built a hundred times as many school-houses and twenty times as many other public improvements as did the Republicans with all their millions of revenues, amounting to from ten to nineteen times as much as have been exacted from the people by the Democratic government.

In addition to all these taxes and county and town and school district debts, they left us as a legacy nearly ten millions of fraudulent State bonds to be dealt with.

First. Under a law, since declared unconstitutional by our supreme court, bonds of the State were issued, during reconstruction, to the amount of $5,350,000 to certain railroad companies, all in fraud of the law, even if it had been constitutional. From two to three times as much was issued to each road as the terms of the law allowed.

To the M. and L. R. R. Co. was issued $1,200,000, nearly three times as much as was allowed by the terms of the law.

To the L. R., P. B. and N. O. R. R. were issued:

Railroad aid bonds.....	$750,000
Levee bonds.....	320,000

(See page 25, Poland's Report.)

Of Chicot County bonds..... 100,000

This company built for all this only 12 miles of road, and then took up the iron to put it on other roads to draw bonds anew.

To the M. O. and L. R. R. (a member of the supreme court being president) were issued both railroad aid bonds and levee bonds and Chicot County bonds—all fraudulent. (See page 25 Poland's Report and Official Record.)

And thus with all the roads which were corrupt enough to receive bonds. But the road which really meant to be built, the I. M. and S. R. R., would not have them. And every road that received them was so much crippled that its completion was delayed for years. The State not only did not receive any benefits but injury instead.

Second. Under two acts of the Legislature of 1869, when a few people desired to have their farms ditched or drained, they applied to the commissioner of public works at the capital, who, if he saw fit, had the ditches or drains made. (See acts of March 16, 1869, and September 12, 1869.) To pay for them all the neighbors who were supposed to be benefited by them were taxed. Sometimes farms in the mountains 15 miles away were taxed. These payments were made in the first place in "swamp-land warrants."

These acts were so clearly unconstitutional, and there was so much corruption connected with the issue of warrants, they became entirely worthless; indeed, had no market value at all.

In 1871 the holders of them, or a number of them, bribed the Legislature to pass the act of March 21, 1871, under which these warrants were to be taken up and exchanged for bonds of the State, known as "levee bonds," and also made receivable for lands of the State.

Under this last act $3,005,846.05 in "levee bonds" were issued, although the act limited the issue to $3,000,000.

This act was held void by our supreme court.

Under this act also bonds were to be issued to railroads whose beds were available for levees or drains.

A senate committee in 1883 reported that under this act—

"The White River Valley and Texas Railway Company received bonds amounting to $175,196.36. There was no such road. It may have been chartered, but no such road was ever built, and if it had been it would have been worthless as a levee." (See report for this as well as other items of the great fraud.)

The report also says that upwards of a million acres of the best lands of the State were bought with these worthless warrants under this last act.

Third. Under an act of the Legislature, approved February 21, 1833, the State loaned a private bank in Little Rock, called the Real Estate Bank, $500,000 in its bonds to be sold, but at not less than par, and the proceeds to be used in starting a branch of their bank in Van Buren, in the western part of the State.

The bank officers undertook to sell them to the North American Trust and Banking Company of New York. The company said that they had already floated as many Arkansas bonds as could be floated at par, and refused either to buy or to attempt to sell.

The officers of the bank then hypothecated the bonds with this same company and drew out upon their security $121,338, and not for the purposes of the act, but for their own private purposes.

The North American company failed shortly afterwards, owing one James Holford a large amount. He found among their assets these five hundred $1,000 bonds, and demanded payment by the State. The governor informed him that the bonds showed upon their face that they were in the possession of the trust company by fraud, and they belonged not to Holford, but to the State.

Holford held on to the bonds, and in April, 1869, he saw his opportunity with the carpet-bag Legislature.

His agent asked them for the $121,000 drawn out by the bank officers, together with interest. But the Legislature through lobbyists said no, we will not pay you this amount of about $339,000, but if you will put in your claim for the $500,000 with forty years' interest, making in all $1,370,000, we will give you your $330,000, and we will take the balance as a reward for our honesty "in restoring the honor and credit of the State."

This amount was issued and so divided.

These three classes of bonds were investigated by a committee of the house, of which I was chairman. The almost unanimous report of the committee was in the following language:

"Mr. Speaker, your committee * * * have had in evidence before them that there was formed and organized in this city a combination of men called a 'ring,' who had a regular cypher by which they concealed their true names in their correspondence.

"That this 'ring' borrowed money from persons outside the State for the purpose of bribing the funding act of April 6, 1869, through the Legislature of getting a distribution of the 'railroad aid' bond, * * * and that $75,000 were subscribed by men interested in the levee contracts with which to purchase the legislation, which made levee bonds receivable for the lands of the State.

"BY NINE OF COMMITTEE."

(One Republican dissenting.)

A few samples will show the state of things about then:

J. S. Haymaker had a contract for a ditch in Crawford County, for which he received three times its cost. It benefited nobody, but farms up in the mountains were taxed to pay for it. Warrants were issued to him which he wanted to exchange for bonds. He was willing to pay for the act of March 21, 1871.

I have in my possession a check drawn by him upon the Republican bank in Little Rock for $2,000, payable to the secretary of senate (whose father was a senator) when the act of March 21, 1871, should be passed without amendment. Across the face is the acceptance of the bank upon conditions named. Across the face also is marked "paid March 21, 1871," and signed by the bank officials. Accompanying it is the certificate of the secretary of the senate that the bill had passed.

The partner of Mr. Haymaker in the banking business in this city testified that "Mr. Haymaker was one of the parties interested in levee contracts. He showed me a note addressed to him by a member of the Legislature, without signature, stating that he must have $10,000 for his support and influence.

"He also told me that he approached a certain man in Little Rock for his support and influence in favor of the levee act of March 21, 1871, and was told that it could be had for $25,000.

"This price was refused, but afterwards this same man (whose name I am not certain of) was silenced by a threat to thwart his aspirations to a position on the supreme bench, which he afterwards got."

A gentleman of high standing, who was employed in the offices of the leading lobbyists, testified that a certain distinguished member of the Legislature got $25,000 for his support of the "Holford bond" or "funding bill" of April 6, 1869. That member was called before the committee, but declined to answer, and as we could not force him to criminate himself he was excused.

A Republican State senator who was deep in the inside of matters, after warding off question after question by the chairman, finally admitted that his opinion was that the lobbyists, naming them, got $870,000 as their share.

The people of the State, after ten years' discussion through the press and on the stump, adopted since an amendment to the constitution forbidding the Legislature ever to pay either principal or interest of these three classes of bonds.

If this review was not already too long, I could show that the various county and school debts were equally fraudulent. In many of the counties scrip was forged and then bonded.

MISCELLANEOUS OUTRAGES.

Perhaps I can give no better idea of the condition and spirit of affairs during reconstruction than by a few simple illustrations of a miscellaneous character:

No. 1. A judge of one of the circuits carried with him around his circuit an armed squad of men, who were placed on guard at the court-house door, and even around the bench. A citizen of Carroll County was arrested, examined, and committed to answer at circuit court for assault with intent to kill J. T. Hopper. The proof showed that the judge was himself implicated in a conspiracy to have Hopper killed (I am informed that Hopper was a disgusted Republican). The judge ordered the case dismissed before the grand jury could act.

He also carried around with him a stenographer, but nobody ever heard of his having reported a line. In Carroll County this judge ordered the clerk to illegally issue to his stenographer $400 in county scrip, but it was really to himself, for two nights afterwards the judge lost it all at poker.

No. 2. One of the reconstruction judges of our supreme court remarked to me the first time I ever met him: "D—n a principle; I am for what will win." This same judge, while on the bench, was a lobbyist before the Legislature, and it was sworn that he offered to buy votes for a United States Senator, our chief-justice being another lobbyist. (See pages 91, 92, and 93 of the report of the Morrill committee to United States Senate of Forty-second Congress, third session.)

Another judge of same court offered to sell his vote as a member of the Legislature and in support of a corrupt scheme of robbery for $25,000 as seen above.

The chief-justice, besides being a lobbyist, as before stated (as will be seen from his own testimony, pages 213, 215, Poland Report No. 2), was chief counselor in "straightening out crooked certificates and returns, president of the Republican Newspaper Company, its behind-the-throne editor, chairman of the Republican State central committee, and chief-justice of the supreme court of reconstructed Arkansas.

No. 3. The clerk of Union County, when threatened with prosecution for illegally issuing scrip to himself, remarked publicly that "I would be a d—d fool to do that when I have a court which will make me any allowance I ask for." (His clerk elected the court or defeated it.)

The clerk of Clark County would take the scrip-book with him, walk into a store, and asking how much he owed, would fill in a blank piece of scrip with the amount and pay his debt.

No. 4. The assessor of Yell County (as in others) assessed the lands of Democrats at from two to five times the value of lands of Republicans lying alongside, having the same character and being much better improved.

In this city the assessor lost heavily at faro one night. I was told the next morning that he rose from the faro table and remarked: "Well, I don't know how I will ever get even unless I raise the assessments on Fishback or some of these other damned Democrats." (He got 3½ per cent. commission on the raise.)

No. 5. Hot Springs County, in 1873, the county court, through commissioners appointed by himself, contracted with the sheriff to have a court-house built, to be paid for in county bonds. The bonds were issued to the extent of $33,000 worth. But the house was not built. The county did not even get a brick-bat or nail in return for about $7,000, which was the total amount of bonds, interest, and cost of suit which the people have since paid.

The Democrats have paid this since and built a very fine court-house.

No. 6. In Perry County the county officials bought 40 acres of land only a quarter of a mile from the county site, laid off a town on this 40 acres, and then removed the county site to it. They then let a contract to their own stockholders in their new site for building a court-house at three times its value, and advanced money out of the county treasury with which to purchase and erect a saw-mill for the purpose of sawing the necessary lumber for that house.

No. 7. In Clark County (as in several others) bonds of the county to the amount of $100,000 were fraudulently issued to a railroad, not a rod of which was ever built. The county has had these bonds to pay.

In the same county scrip was forged to the amount of $63,000, and afterwards funded in county bonds. Suit was brought by innocent holders, and it was proven that they were forged.

In the same county the county court paid out of the county treasury $1,625 to Republican lawyers as fees for defending a contest of the seals of judge, sheriff, clerk, and treasurer.

The clerk was also allowed and paid $2,000 for stationery.

The wife of the clerk testified that he had forced her to burn the scrip-book.

No. 8. In Union County, where the clerk who issued scrip to himself resided and presided, the average annual county expenditures during the six years of Republican rule amounted to $18,982.92. During the last fourteen years of Democratic rule the average annual expenditures amounted to about $10,000. And much of this has gone to pay off a debt of $35,000 with interest, left them by the Republican rule.

No. 9. The spirit of whole reconstruction business can not be better illustrated than by two little incidents:

Mr. I. S. Haymaker, above referred to, when he first came to Arkansas, came to my house to induce me to go into the banking business with him. In the course of our conversation he said that he was on his way to Fort Smith. His steam-boat stopped at Little Rock nearly twenty-four hours. While at the wharf a certain man (naming him), from the same town in Ohio with himself, but now in official position in Little Rock, came aboard and said to him: "Haymaker, get out here. Here are the finest pickings. We have got the d—d rebels by the wool, and we intend to pick them as long as there is a lock of the fleece left."

When I introduced to the constitutional convention of 1874 the resolution looking to repudiating the fraudulent bonds above described, a banker from New York or Boston, I forgot which, was at Hot Springs and remarked to a distinguished gentleman of the State: "I have some of those bonds myself." The gentleman asked him if he did not know how fraudulent they were, and that the people would not pay them. He replied: "I do not think they ought to, but they only cost me 15 cents on the dollar, and I believed the Republicans would hold this State for the next twenty-five years and in that time I would get a dollar for my 15 cents."

No. 10. In Washington County the president of the board of registrars, in 1872, and the circuit judge of that circuit, had a conference with Z. M. Pettigrew, an old citizen who had been sheriff of the county before the war. They informed him that they foresaw the early overthrow of their party (subsequent events showed that they were frightened and wished to prepare for the future), and they wished him, although a Democrat, to be elected sheriff, offering to allow enough names to remain on the registration list to elect him if he would run. He agreed to do so upon condition that they would elect P. R. Smith, another Democrat, clerk. To this they agreed, and it was accordingly done—both were elected.

No. 11. In 1871 the governor of the State was indicted by a Republican grand jury of the Federal court at Little Rock, for issuing for a corrupt consideration a false certificate of election to John Edwards to Congress (the House of Representatives also unseated Edwards because the certificate was false). The same grand jury indicted the senator of Hot Springs County, for erasing three hundred names from the registration books and inserting several hundred straw names, which he and his brother afterwards fraudulently voted.

The President of the United States removed both the United States marshal and the district attorney to protect these men from punishment, and put in their stead two henchmen of the indicted governor. The man appointed as district attorney had been a member of the governor's staff and was known as his serviceable tool, but was not known to the bar of the State. If he had ever had a case out of a justice of the peace's court or of any higher character than small misdemeanor in any other court is not generally known. (See Poland's Report No. 5, pages 3, 6, 8, 10, 13, 20, 21, 22, 25.)

No. 12. In this city, in 1872, right under the nose of the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas, under whose exclusive jurisdiction the election frauds of the district had been placed for the protection of the people, a line of negroes extending across the street was stationed at the polling place. As a negro would vote he would step out and go to the rear end of the line to keep out such as they did not wish to offer to vote, but to step out and give place to such as they desired to vote.

To prevent a riot on the part of the whites, who were thus kept away from the polls, a company of men, armed with Winchester rifles, were stationed in a room above the polling place.

United States District Judge W. W. Story appointed a supervisor of elections for the precinct, but the judges of election refused to let him serve. This was communicated to the judge, who, instead of committing them for contempt, recalled the appointment and appointed another man, but the judges refused to let him act, but sent the judge word that if he would appoint a certain other man he would be admitted. The United States district judge did as the men bid him.

As heretofore seen, the United States marshal of this same district was a party to the fraudulent removal of the precinct of Richland, in Crawford County, down to his farm (as seen by reference to Poland Report, above).

Twenty-five hundred names of legal voters of this legislative district were erased from the registration books by the board of review. One hundred and ten of these were ex-Federal soldiers. Thirteen hundred names in this county alone were scratched off. (See testimony of one of the registrars in Poland Report, page 70.)

In Big Creek Township, in this county, the name of an old Union man who had lost four sons in the Federal Army was among those erased and disfranchised, while armed militia stood before the polling place and threatened to arrest any one who attempted to vote at the side polls under the enforcement act.

The people thought to appeal to the court for the punishment of these crimes. But the United States marshal, himself a particeps criminis, did not summon the grand jury selected by the commissioners in the usual way. They attended court, however, and were on hand ready to serve. The court set aside the panel.

The marshal, instead of summoning these good and true men for a new panel, called a number whom he had summoned for the purpose, and a number of whom had been parties to election frauds. Thus not a man was punished or even indicted.

I drew up a statement of the facts at the time, which was attested by twenty-two members of the bar in attendance upon the court, and sent it to the President of the United States. But the executive, as the judicial department of the Government, was deaf to our appeals.

No. 13. Again and again these outrages were laid before Congress in cases of contested seats, both in the Senate and House, but in no instance was any attempt made to arrest them.

And when, in 1874, Republicans and Democrats alike voted by the unprecedented majority of 10 to 1 (in this county having over 900 Republican votes, nearly all white, there were only 2 votes in opposition) demanding a new constitution, at once the cry, starting at Hot Springs with the late O. P. Morton, of Indiana, then United States Senator, and extending to Congress, went up that we were engaged in a revolutionary proceeding, and the Poland committees was sent to investigate us.

The report of that committee should be had by every voter in the North.

It may not be out of place just here to say that the same Republican grand jury which indicted the governor in 1871 was to examine cases against Democrats, but could find no proof. (See Poland's Report No. 5, page 8.)

And within the past six months the same United States district court has been called to investigate alleged cases against Democratic outrages, but although hundreds of witnesses were examined indictments were found against but two or three Democrats and two or three Republicans for violations of the election laws. In all but one of those against Democrats the offense was merely technical.

What, then, is there about the Republican party as our people know it to commend it to self-respecting, patriotic men of the South?

In whatever attitude they have presented themselves to us, whether as committing every species of outrage upon human rights to attain party success, or as bitterly and falsely maligning the people of the South in every campaign since the war, or in whatever aspect they have appeared they have led our people to believe their motive and their motto to be, as expressed by one of their leaders in this State: "D—n principle; I am for what will win."

Surely, after reading these facts, it will not be necessary for our candid, reasonable fellow-citizens of the North to account for the solidarity of the South upon the hypothesis of hostility to the Northern section of our common country.

W. M. FISHBACK.

OCTOBER 6, 1889.

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, I have not desired to occupy time in a discussion of the provisions of this bill, and should have said nothing had it not been for the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], a Republican member of this House, who has stated that he could not support it. It was noticeable that this conclusion received the applause of the Democratic Representatives, though some of his statements must have grated harshly upon their ears. It is a peculiar fact that when a Republican goes wrong—breaks away from the great body of his party—he is certain to be rewarded by the applause of the other side. For a moment he is a patriot in his independent attitude, and the extended hand hides for the instant the foot drawn back with sinister intent.

The gentleman admits that—

The state of things as they exist in this country justify the passage of such a measure.

I quote his exact words. He admits that "frauds are perpetrated to a certain extent in the South and North." He has voted to unseat a number of gentlemen from the South whose seats on this floor were obtained by fraud. Therefore it would seem from his own action as expressed by his votes that he was satisfied that fraud was perpetrated at the South to no uncertain extent.

He objects to this bill, that "United States marshals have often caused trouble at election places." Now, having admitted that frauds have been perpetrated to an extent which has justified him in voting to right the wrong by unseating the beneficiaries, I ask him if he does not think it high time that some one should "cause trouble" for the violators of law at "election places." Trouble has indeed been caused by United States marshals at election places, and noticeably so in the city of New York, but not for law-abiding citizens. And it has yet to be shown that it was not justifiably caused in the interest of purity in elections.

Has the gentleman, has any one, the slightest doubt that there has been necessity for such supervision in New York? Does any one doubt that necessity for such supervision exists in other sections, notably in the South? Fraud in elections in New York is a matter of ancient as well as modern history.

In 1868 the following circular letter was issued by the chairman of the Democratic State committee:

ROOMS OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE,
October 27, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: Please at once to communicate with some reliable person, in three or four principal towns and in each city of your county, and request him (expenses duly arranged for at this end) to telegraph to William M. Tweed, Tammany Hall, at the minute of closing the polls, not waiting for the count, such person's estimate of the vote. Let the telegraph be as follows: "This town will show a Democratic gain [or loss] over last year of—[number];" or this one, if sufficiently certain: "This town will give a Republican [or Democratic] majority of —." There is, of course, an important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls, but not longer waiting. Opportunity can be taken of the usual half-hour lull in telegraphic communication over lines before actual results begin to be declared, and before the Associated Press absorb the telegraph with returns and interfere with individual messages, and give orders to watch carefully the count.

Very truly yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN, Chairman.

This circular occasioned the publishing of a letter the next year under the caption "Letter to a politician."

Now, Mr. Tilden, I call on you to put a stop to this business. You have but to walk into the sheriff's, the mayor's, and the supervisors' offices in the City Hall Park, and say there must be no more of it—say it so that there shall be no doubt that you mean it—and we shall have a tolerably fair election once more. Probably a good part of the fifty thousand supplied last fall with bogus naturalization certificates will offer to register and to vote—some of them pretending not to know that they are no more citizens of the United States than the King of Dahomey is—but very few will vote repeatedly unless paid for it; and we shall not be cheated more than ten thousand if you simply tell the boss workmen that there must be no more illegal voting instigated and paid for.

Will you do it? Your reputation is at stake. The cowardly craft which "would not play false,

And yet would wrongly win," will not avail. If we Republicans are swindled again as we were swindled last fall, you, and such as you, will be responsible to God and man for the outrage. Prosecutors, magistrates, municipal authorities, are all in the pool; we have nothing to hope from the ministers of justice, and the villains have no fear of the terrors of the law. I appeal to you, and anxiously await the result.

Yours,

HORACE GREELEY.

NEW YORK, October 20, 1869.

These were the compliments of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1872 to the Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1876, and is the pen picture which he drew of Democratic election methods in New York City.

How much weight this letter had with Samuel J. Tilden and the Democratic party was seen later in their attempt to corner the market in mules, and to purchase at any price the vote of a colored elector in South Carolina.

But the gentleman from New Jersey further opposes this bill for the reason as stated by him:

That when frauds have been committed in election matters public opinion will finally compel the conviction and punishment of law-breakers.

The gentleman must have a faith that would remove mountains. Where, I ask him, in all the South has he observed any evidence of the development of that enlightened public opinion which is to give the black man his rights at the ballot-box under the Constitution and the laws?

Having admitted that these frauds have been perpetrated with "damnable iteration" for years, I ask him how long he proposes to wait for that "public opinion" to manifest itself in the conviction of the perpetrators of these frauds, and the conversion of their beneficiaries—the Democratic party?

Can not the gentleman see in this bill itself the manifestation of the desire of the people for reform in the conduct of elections? What further manifestation does he wish? Would he wait until a petition from the voters in every precinct of the South for protection in the exercise of the rights which the Constitution and the laws have attempted to confer upon them shall be placed upon his desk? Would he read them if they were?

As a further reason for his opposition to this bill the gentleman says:

Every imaginable law may be enacted, but no matter how stringent, it will have no effect upon these people.

I look in the RECORD in vain to find that any demonstration of applause from our Democratic friends followed this declaration of his belief in their purpose to nullify the law. I look also in vain for a declaration on the part of the gentleman that the powers of the Government should be invoked to enforce the law. Evidently he has little of the characteristics of a Jackson or a Dix in his composition, which would make it dangerous to nullify law or haul down the American flag.

Sir, shall we fold our hands and wait for an "enlightened public sentiment" to make tender the consciences of those men who strive to regain and retain through frauds at the ballot-box that political power which they could not grasp through victories won on the field of battle? Our friend forgets—

Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow.

That unless some one protests, the wrong will never be made to appear, and, being concealed, will never be righted.

The gentleman from South Carolina has declared that he and such as he "must rule that State or leave it," and has sworn they "would not leave it," because it was the "home of their fathers," who "bought it with their blood" and "handed it down to them unimpaired." Sir, you forfeited the heritage bequeathed to you by your fathers when you fired the first shot at Sumter. You lost it at Appomattox when your attempt to destroy the Government your fathers founded ended in failure. You regained it unimpaired through the magnanimity and valor of your fellow-citizens. Your duty now to preserve it unimpaired can best be performed by rendering obedience to the Constitution and laws of your country.

Sir, when Abraham Lincoln stood at Gettysburgh and uttered those memorable words in which he designated this as "a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people," he never dreamed that after the "purification by blood" it would be possible that a party which had "fallen from power as a conspiracy against human rights" could ever return to it through the perpetration of crimes against the rights of the people as deadly as had been that perpetrated against humanity. Had he contemplated this he might have said, as you on the other side of this Chamber say to-day, "This is a government of white men, by white men, for white men, in which the colored man is to have no part unless he votes the Democratic ticket; a government in which the shotgun, the revolver, and the whip, social ostracism, tissue ballots, and stuffed ballot-boxes shall declare the will of the people."

My Republican friends from New Jersey, North Carolina, and Louisiana, that is not the government you desire. It is not the Government which, through the Constitution, the fathers established. It is not the Government which five hundred thousand men yielded their lives to preserve. But it is the Government you will have unless you, in common with other Republicans on this floor, provide the remedy by enacting a bulwark against which the waves of terrorism and the ever-rising tide of election frauds shall beat in vain. [Loud applause.]

[Mr. MUTCHLER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we have witnessed in this House within a few brief months the most remarkable revolution that has occurred since our Constitution was ordained and this Government of States adopted. It may be instructive to note its procession and progress. This session of Congress found the Republican party in a majority of three. The first step in this revolution was to so organize the House and adopt such rules that this slender and unreliable majority might be increased, by turning out the representatives of the people and placing in their stead its own creatures, by which you now have a majority of twenty, and yet to be increased by the same mode as further exigencies of your party may demand.

All parliamentary obstructions to these revolutionary proceedings were to be removed. A quorum is to be counted by the Speaker. The yea-and-nay vote required to be entered upon the House journal to be kept by the House under the Constitution is to be so changed as that the Speaker adds thereto such persons only as he designates to make up a quorum.

One hundred members, to constitute a quorum in the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering all bills of appropriation, and such also as make a charge upon the people. A Committee on Rules to be appointed by the Speaker, of which he should be chairman, alone to present such bills as the Speaker should decide might be considered, with power in this committee to propose the previous question, thus limiting debate and preventing any amendments.

These, Mr. Speaker, were the processes to be used, and with what moderation the proceedings of this House too painfully will show.

In this mode you have increased the burdens of taxation imposed by your tariff from 43 per cent. to 52 per cent.

You have defeated the will of the people, who demanded such remedial change in our financial policy by which we might have a larger volume of currency, and instead of giving us free coinage of silver you have utterly and completely demonetized it.

None of these wrongs and oppressions would you have attempted until you wrested from the representatives of the people their usual and rightful powers.

All things now being ready, you and your party have entered upon the final stage of this revolution, as exhibited in this Federal election bill. Two days you allow for general debate and two days to consider the same by sections and to offer amendments, when the previous question is ordered! This, Mr. Speaker, is the refinement of cruelty, for your mercy could have better been shown by refusing all debate and opportunity to amend a most complex bill of seventy-three pages, when the House must know such time is wholly insufficient.

Your party is impatient of restraint; your work of destruction is yet incomplete. The members of this House whom your party have counted in from the South by turning out Democrats are anxious to give expression of their gratitude, and you may well count upon them to a man to vote for any law that will humiliate and degrade the South.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that in the time allotted me I can not analyze this bill and expose its unjust, dangerous, and unconstitutional provisions as I would wish. I shall deal in no invective, vituperation, or recrimination; the occasion and the hour demand of us the most considerate judgment and sober, deliberate expression.

If the condition of the States or any one of them is such, demanding such radical change in the mode of choosing Representatives as is provided in this bill, then indeed is our Republic in danger. More than a quarter of a century ago Mr. Seward said our country could not remain one-half free and the other slaves. Let his prophetic words ring out in this Chamber anew.

The laws of Congress can not act one way in the South and yet different in the North. Such a state is repugnant to any sovereignty, and is disunion or anarchy! You can not place the South under surveillance, dishonor, and finally overthrow their governments without a like misrule and oppression to the North. I thank God this Union is composed of indestructible sovereign States. Their political organism is so related in twinning that harm to one is an injury to all. Twin sisters they are of equal dignity and authority, or else their Constitution is a rope of sand, or, what is worse, united by sword and bayonet!

I will state succinctly the provisions of this bill which, in my judgment, mar and destroy the integrity of this Union.

The circuit courts of the United States appoint in their several circuits in each Congressional district a general supervisor, who in turn appoints an indefinite number of supervisors upon petition of citizens—an indefinite number of supervisors at each election precinct. The general supervisor has appointed as many deputy marshals as he wishes, and can have in addition thereto the forces of the Army and Navy.

These general supervisors have unlimited power as relates to elections for members of Congress. They make their secret returns to a board of canvassers appointed under this law, who are far removed from the people, and the certificate of election of this board outweighs the usual certificate of election of the governor of the State, and the person holding the certificate of this board takes his seat in Congress.

The Constitution of the United States provides that the House of Representatives shall be chosen by the people of the several States.

It further provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to places of choosing Senators.

It is under this clause of the Constitution that the claim is made of the power of Congress to pass this bill, and the cases of Ex parte Siebold, 100 United States, 371, and Ex parte Yarborough, 110 United States, 651, decided by our United States Supreme Court, are relied upon as establishing the constitutional power of Congress to enact this bill.

It would be sufficient reply to make to the decision of this supreme co-ordinate branch of the Government, as mere authority, to say no such law was before the court, nor no such power of Congress as in this bill which the court in these two cases then considered. They neither pronounced nor were called upon to pronounce any such decision as to the exercise by Congress of any such power as in this bill, governing elections by the people of their Representatives. The court was considering the sole question of penalties enacted in the statute of 1871 and the act amendatory thereof for the violation of State regulations in the matter of election of a member of Congress. The court sustained such power in Congress prescribing these penalties, and further decided that such power in the matter of such regulations by Congress was absolute and exclusive in whatever modicum of such power exerted.

If this be the law, then I ask where is the authority in Congress to make any regulations co-ordinate and concurrent with that of the States wherein the people choose their Representatives? To make or alter regulations of these States in such elections by Congress, under these discussions, would require of Congress to exercise its power not in any co-ordinate or concurrent action with the State, but exclusive. If Congress does not do this, then Congress does not by law either make or alter the regulations prescribed by the States.

This is the very vice of this bill. It undertakes to preserve all the machinery of the several States regulating such elections. In the language of the report upon this bill and the speech of its author, Mr. LODGE, of Massachusetts, this bill attempts to co-operate with the States in the matter of holding elections for members of Congress. Such power I utterly deny. It is supported by no authority and violates the essential principles of good government.

No sovereign can exercise his rightful power concurrently with any other magistracy. Confusion and conflict would be inevitable. The author of the bill sees this dilemma and seeks to avoid so absurd and dangerous a result by providing that the certificate of election by the returning board created by this bill shall have precedence over that issued under the State law.

This only adds to the difficulty and the more clearly demonstrates the unconstitutional character of this provision, and unavoidably produces this unnatural and abnormal result, namely, that the people under the Constitution, by virtue of the laws of their respective States, choose their Representatives, do everything and all things incident to holding an election therefor, but other persons, unknown to their law, taking no part in the election, performing no duty connected therewith, make the returns and declare the result.

The people do the voting, the choosing, and the returning board, quite away from them, out of the district, out of the State, wherever this circuit judge holds his court, makes the return and certifies to the result. In what sense, I ask, under such a bill, do the people choose their Representatives in the very language of the Constitution, when a board, not one of their own creation, expresses their wish? What power have I to make my choice and what is that power worth to me when the agencies to express that choice are denied me?

The great thing to be preserved by the Constitution is the right of the people to choose their representatives. The incidents to that act—the most important to any freeman—are the regulating as they relate to times, places, and manner of doing it. Such regulating Congress is empowered to make or alter, but, sir, whenever, under the pretense of making or altering such regulations, the right of the people to choose their Representatives is impaired or threatened, then you invite fraud, force, and violence, in a much more grave form than now threatens the electing by the people.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is yet a much more serious objection to this system of legislation. The language of the Constitution is:

But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations.

Whatever Congress may rightfully do must be done by law.

The form of the expression and the term law, here used, imply that such action as Congress does exercise must be general, uniform, final, and binding as the very force of law upon all the people. It can not apply to States, sections, or communities. It must have the binding force of law upon all the people. Congress has no power to delegate its authority to any portion of the people or permit them in spots to have this law or not as they please. There should be no local option as to its enforcement or its adoption. All must be under or none can be.

In what sense is that a law of Congress by which one district in a State acts under the authority of the Legislature of the State while another acts under the provisions of this bill? In one instance the State alone issues the certificate of election and in the other the State in effect is denied this power in another district within the same State.

Let me ask, Mr. Speaker, what is the real purpose of this bill? Why do Representatives upon this floor from the entire North, East, and West declare they do not want this bill applied to their State or district? But one gentleman from that section has had the temerity to announce he wished it for his district, and of him I am sure his people will say they can do both without him and this bill. Yet with but a single exception upon the Republican side these same gentlemen say they wish it applied to the South. Why to the South?

This bill is framed with the view that the people of the North would not submit to it, nor in my judgment would they. But the Republican party and its members in this Chamber have preferred so many false and slanderous charges against the States in the South that they believe the people of the North are ready to see placed over them mercenary hirelings as supervisors and deputy marshals to control their elections.

If this law is passed, and I have no doubt you will be able to do so by votes of these members from the South whom you elected to Congress, then those States will bear to the Federal Government a much more hapless condition and relation than Ireland does to England. Ireland is struggling to regain her right to local self-government, while we of the South can only lament and resent the loss of ours.

You think it means your supremacy in the South and the perpetuation of your rule in this Government. In both you will be mistaken. The South will become more solid, and remain so as long as she is threatened with that rapine and robbery and public plunder which in every State and county in the South Republicanism were exhibited during your administering of those State governments.

We make no appeal to you; you are drunk with your successes and excesses. Your ambition has overleaped itself. We do appeal to our countrymen everywhere who love peace, justice, equality, and liberty, who place country above party, and with whom the passions and animosities of the war between the States have given place to a more perfect union.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, if it were admitted that the bill under consideration, should it become a law, would not be repugnant to the Constitution, and also that frauds in Federal elections were being committed, do the means for preventing such frauds as provided in this bill assure a free ballot and fair count? An assertion that they do would not only contradict all past experience, but it would be repugnant to common sense.

Men often honestly differ in the adjustment of property or business interests. When they can not agree, this difference is submitted to an authority to decide that has no interest in the subject-matter of dispute. One party does not leave it to his adversary to determine the right, for the adversary has already determined it against him. I submit that the means provided in this bill leave the matter in dispute to the judgment of the adversary.

The wrong to be remedied is political. The entire machinery, judges, inspectors, supervisors, etc., are dominated by one party. They will be appointed to do this work because of known zeal in the interest of that party. They are chosen to find one way, and they will do it. The judiciary throughout the land will be prostituted and made to do the work of the worst character of political partisanship.

We can not have forgotten the seven-by-eight commission, and that seven were Democrats and eight Republicans. Here is a clear instance of the highest tribunal in the land acting upon and finding upon purely a partisan standpoint. That decision lowered the status of that high tribunal to an extent that ages can not eradicate, and demonstrates that in political matters the party that holds the authority will always decide in their own favor and to retain power. Where is there an instance to the contrary?

How has the vote been in this House upon contested-election cases? In nearly every instance the question of right is ignored and the decision is reached from a partisan standpoint.

The division of this House now upon this bill shows that it was conceived for partisan purposes; that it is a measure intended to retain the Republican party in power. Does any one suppose that the machinery put in motion by its terms will fail to carry out this purpose? No. If fairness and justice will do as well, then that may be the rule. If fairness will not do, then such measures are to be resorted to as will accomplish it, even to the extent of fraud and force.

Should this bill become a law it will fill the country with strife and contention. It will intensify the days of reconstruction. It will array neighborhoods and sections against each other. It may lead to revolution and the destruction of our Constitution and system of government. It surely can not be that for merely temporary and partisan purposes such a strain is to be put on the judiciary; that it is to be prostituted, and the entire people become one vast body of contention and strife; yet it does seem that so far as this House is concerned it has been so determined. Will the people confirm that determination? Are they willing to waive the right to choose their own Representatives, and place that inestimable privilege in the hands of henchmen who are only too willing to do their masters' bidding.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make reference to that portion of the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] which especially concerns the State a district of which I represent in this House. The gentleman, as I recall his utterance, and as I find it printed in the RECORD, said:

Take the State of Connecticut. In 1884, 1886, and 1888 the majority of votes there, as we all know, were cast for a Democratic governor, but the Legislature did not regard the voice of the majority.

I do not think that our friend from South Carolina purposely intended to misstate political facts in my State. His assertion, as just quoted, is not simply misleading, it is an inaccurate statement of fact. The five State officials for whom we ballot on the State ticket in Connecticut are the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, the treasurer, and the comptroller. In the election of 1880 the candidate for each of these offices on the Republican ticket received a majority of all the votes cast in the State, and each one of these candidates was inducted into office without the intervention of the Legislature. In the election of 1882 four of the candidates on the Democratic State ticket and one candidate (the gentleman named for comptroller) on the Republican State ticket received each a majority of all the votes cast in the State; and these majority candidates, four Democrats and one Republican, were inducted into office without the intervention of the Legislature. That was the last election in the State of Connecticut in which any candidate of any political party for any State office received a majority of all the votes cast in the State. Hence the gentleman is wrong when he states that the voice of the majority of the voters in the State of Connecticut was given in 1884 and in 1886 and in 1888 for a Democratic governor. Had the majority of votes been cast as he asserts, then the State of Connecticut would have been presided over by a Democratic executive during the last six years.

But the majority of votes cast in the elections in the three years as named, having been against instead of for a Democratic governor, the Legislature, under the State constitution of Connecticut, was called upon to determine who should be the governor. The Legislature acted in accordance with a provision of the constitution, which, after prescribing the manner of canvassing the votes cast in a State election, declares as follows:

If no person shall have a majority of the whole number of said votes, or if two or more shall have an equal and the greatest number of said votes, then said Assembly, on the second day of their session, by joint ballot of both houses, shall proceed, without debate, to choose a governor from a list of the names of the two persons having the greatest number of votes, or of the names of the persons having an equal and highest number of votes as returned as aforesaid.

A similar provision of the constitution applies to legislative election of a lieutenant-governor, a secretary of state, a treasurer, and a comptroller in cases where no person shall have a majority of the whole number of votes cast for candidates for those respective offices. And so the Legislatures of the State of Connecticut, in session in the January following the elections in 1884 and in 1886 and in 1888, being Republican and the lawful and accepted representation of the political sentiment of the State, elected the Republican candidates for governor and State offices who had been balloted for in the elections in the November preceding; and as I will show later on, in several elections, notably in 1884 and 1888, did some of the candidates on the Republican ticket receive a plurality of all the votes cast at the election, their competitors on the Democratic ticket receiving less than a plurality. And vice versa did some candidates on the Democratic ticket receive a plurality of all the votes cast at the election, their competitors on the Republican ticket receiving less than a plurality. But plurality to Republican or Democrat, it makes no difference, except a majority vote be cast for some one candidate, the Legislature—the representative body of local government—elects the State officials in Connecticut.

However much some gentlemen may criticize this form of State elections in my State, yet none can point to a single instance where the State has been misgoverned or oppressed by its State officials, or where the people of either party have failed to accord honor and respect and obedience to the political results attained under the constitution of the State of Connecticut. Our constitution in its present form is the direct descendant of that notable instrument which in 1639 bore the stamp of a settlement in Connecticut, and was the first written democratic constitution on record. This Connecticut constitution of 1639, to use the expression of the writer on Connecticut in the series of American Commonwealths, Professor Alexander Johnson, "was the starting-point for the democratic development which has since gained control of all our Commonwealths, and now makes the essential feature of our Commonwealth government." The good old Commonwealth of Connecticut has stood firm to her constitution, and has grafted her traditions and principles upon the vast territory to the West, until they have been embodied in larger and mightier Commonwealths. She can not now be construed, after her peaceful and prosperous experience of two hundred and fifty years under her present form of local government, into an excuse or a palliation, or a precedent for Southern operations during the last twenty-five years. These operations in crime and trickery have attempted the subjugation of all government, local and national. In effect these operations have oppressed a free citizenship, and have destroyed a free suffrage.

Let me again refer to the fact that in the Connecticut State elections of 1884, 1886, and 1888 the Democratic candidates failed to receive the majority of votes cast. In the election of 1884 there were cast 137,689 votes for candidates for governor, and the Democratic candidate lacked 935 votes of a majority. In the election of 1886 there were cast 123,243 votes for candidates for governor, and the Democratic candidate lacked 2,804 votes of a majority. In the election of 1888 there were cast 153,648 votes for candidates for governor, and the Democratic candidate lacked 1,751 votes of a majority.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. In each one of these cases from 1884 the Democratic candidate received more votes than the Republican, did he not?

Mr. RUSSELL. Exactly, sir, in the case of the candidates for governor. In each of these three elections the Democratic candidate for governor received a plurality vote. But in the election of 1884 three Republican candidates received a plurality vote over their respective competitors on the Democratic ticket. In other words, in that election the Republican pluralities to the Democratic pluralities were in the ratio of 3 to 2; and yet under our constitution the three Republican pluralities did the Republican party no more good, as far as the control of the State was concerned, than the two Democratic pluralities did the Democratic party. In the election of 1888, the last held in the State, the Republican candidate for lieutenant-governor received a plurality over his Democratic competitor.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yet the Republican got the office and the Democrat did not.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, all the Republican candidates on the State ticket, both those who had pluralities and those who did not, because the Legislature in joint ballot elected each State officer on each of the three occasions mentioned, and the Legislature—the local representation of the political sentiment of the people, the home-rule representation for which you gentlemen so vigorously contend—was Republican. Had the Legislature been Democratic; had that been the political sentiment of the State during those years, then I presume all the Democratic candidates for State offices, both those who had pluralities over their Republican competitors and those who did not, would have been elected. And the people acquiesce contentedly in the elections by their Legislature whenever the constitution places that duty upon the Legislature, whatever be the political complexion of the same; for the good people of the "land of steady habits" believe in their constitution and the exercise of all its prerogatives.

But the gentleman from South Carolina had further to say regarding Connecticut's political representation. I read the following from his printed speech:

As we all know, Connecticut has her representatives in the Senate of the United States who advocate and vote for Republican principles, while the political sentiment of Connecticut is absolutely Democratic, and has been for many years.

Now, I wish to take decided exception to that statement, and I submit its inaccuracies. The last expression we had from Connecticut of her political sentiments in anything relating to Congressional measures and actions was in the election of 1888. In that election there were 75,129 votes cast for the four Republican candidates for Congress and 74,340 votes cast for the four Democratic candidates for Congress. In other words, there were 789 more votes cast for Republican representation from the State of Connecticut in the House of the Fifty-first Congress than were cast for Democratic representation. The political sentiment of my State by its last expression at the polls does not seem to be so "absolutely Democratic" as the gentleman from South Carolina would have the country believe. In fact, it appears to be perceptibly Republican.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman tell us how many Democrats there are in this House from that State?

Mr. RUSSELL. In a moment, sir. In the same election year, 1888, for the State senate, which is the popular branch of our Legislature, there were more votes cast for Republican candidates than for Democratic candidates. In the State there are twenty-four senatorial districts, and the division of districts is as equitable as possible, according to population, decade by decade. The total number of votes cast for the twenty-four Republican candidates for the State senate in the election of 1888 was 74,599, and the total number for the Democratic candidates 74,343. In other words, the political sentiment of the State of Connecticut on popular vote, measured by its ballots for State senators in its last election, was 256 votes in favor of the Republican party; not an excessive plurality, I admit, but sufficient to show that politics in Connecticut are not "absolutely Democratic." Now, in view of the foregoing, I submit that according to the last and best expression which Connecticut has given of her political sentiments, as far as the legislative control of government goes, the two Republican Senators from the State are to-day properly, as well as ably, representing the political sentiment of my State when they "advocate and vote for Republican principles." Gentlemen must not confound the political sentiment of Connecticut as expressed in 1888 on the administrative control of the National Government with her sentiment on legislative control. The influence of an Administration and the power of a Democratic national committee might have induced, as it did, the meager plurality of 336 votes for Democratic electors. But that influence and that power, or anything else, can not make the political sentiment of Connecticut on legislative control of the Government Democratic, when Democracy stands for free trade and dishonest elections and Republicanism stands for protection and a free ballot and fair count.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has just propounded a question which I suppose means to emphasize the fact that the 75,129 Republican votes cast in Connecticut in the Congressional election of 1888 gave the State in this Congress three Republican Representatives, while the 74,340 Democratic votes cast in the same election gave only one Democratic Representative. He seeks to convey the impression that the ratio of party representation here is disproportionate to the votes cast by the respective parties. To reply to that impression I have only to make reference to the representation of the State in the Fiftieth Congress. In the Congressional election of 1886, when four members were chosen to the House from the State of Connecticut, there were 57,234 votes cast for the four Republican candidates and 58,581 votes for the four Democratic candidates. Thus there were only 1,347 more votes cast for the Democratic candidates in that election than were cast for the Republican candidates. Yet in the last Congress Connecticut's representation on this floor was three Democratic members and one Republican member. If gentlemen assume that the apportionment of Congressional representation in my State is unequal or unjust to the parties, let them consider the two Congresses named—the present and the last. If there be anything unfair, which I deny, or anything unjust to the political sentiment of my State, it would surely seem that one case washes the other.

Mr. TUCKER. I wish to ask the gentleman another question in the line on which he has been proceeding. I have been informed that the city of New Haven, which is a Democratic city, and has in round numbers one-eighth of the population of the State of Connecticut and therefore would be entitled to one-eighth of the numerical representation in the Legislature of the State, instead of having some thirty and odd representatives has in fact only two.

Mr. RUSSELL. I can not go into that question at length in the time allowed me. The gentleman is now referring to the town representation which the State of Connecticut has and always had in the house branch of its Legislature. That form of local representation is an old, an honored and respected one in my State. It has much to recommend it and I believe it is admitted to be the most complete recognition of the principle of local government. "In Connecticut it was the towns that created the Commonwealth." The Commonwealth still continues a combination of towns and in each member of the combination remains to-day the political power for the exercise of which the State must first establish its clear and just right. The towns of Connecticut stand in much the same relation to the Commonwealth as the States do to this Union and it seems strange for gentlemen contending against what they imagine may be an infringement or subversion of local government by the Federal Government to instance Connecticut as a place where there is a misrepresentation of home rule, as they call it.

So much, in the brief time I have, for the theory of the town representation in Connecticut. As to the politics of this form of representation, the Legislature of the State of Connecticut has been Democratic in the past; less than a decade ago a Democratic Senator represented the State in Congress. If the Democrats then did not care to preserve this honored and old form of town representation, which politically had done them service, they had the chance to change the constitution as far as legislative action could do it. But the city of New Haven is not the only city in the State where representation in the house of the Legislature is restricted to two members, though it is the largest. Other cities under another form of representation might politically show an advantage to our side.

Mr. TUCKER. Still, it is true that almost one-eighth of the population have only two representatives in the Legislature.

Mr. RUSSELL. I can not yield further, Mr. Speaker, much as I am willing to discuss town representation, for I have promised a portion of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANK]. I do not believe that the political facts, truly stated, in regard to Connecticut's constitutional form of representation in State and nation furnish argument for the form of misrepresentation acquired and maintained in some of our Southern sections. The vote of every legal voter in Connecticut is freely deposited, fairly counted, and correctly returned. The present Federal supervision law has been used now and then in certain places in Connecticut, and both parties have accepted it. I believe the majority of the voters of the State will approve the extension of the present law to be made applicable anywhere and everywhere where fraud of any sort exists or is anticipated. I know further, Mr. Speaker, that the honest, fair-minded people of the North are well aware of the political disturbances which have existed in our Southern sections. They know that bloodshed and crimes of all sorts have pertained to these disturbances, and the result, as they believe, has been the unlawful subversion of the majority suffrage of many districts in Southern States. They know that in the loss of life which has pertained to these disturbances the Republicans generally have been sacrificed. Formerly it was the loss of life of black Republicans only; latterly, some white Republicans, or white citizens who belonged to the free-ballot and fair-count contingent, have been included in the list of slain.

We begin to judge that the race issue and the political issue in parts of the South are much the same. While recognizing the growth of a new and peaceful South on the line of a business development and an intelligent application of resources and enterprise, while hoping for and stimulating by our investments and our social and commercial relations the fullness of this growth and the perfection of this development, yet in the interest of humanity, and as well as in the interest of fair elections, we can discover no calamity to the good citizen or the law-abiding section in the present proposed extension of the Federal election law. Only to the lawless need this proposed law, as any law, have terror.

I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, owing to the views I entertain on the pending measure, I enter into the discussion of this question with great reluctance, and have concluded to do so after mature reflection and from an impressive sense of duty to myself, my party, and my country. When I was honored by my party with the nomination for Congress in the Ninth district of Missouri in 1888, I accepted it on an issue exclusively local to St. Louis, and in which the people were intensely interested—an honest election, a pure ballot. In 1886, when I was nominated for Congress, the election machinery was in the hands of a corrupt and conscienceless gang of thugs and ballot-box stuffers. I was elected, though counted out by this ring. I set about to bring to justice these destroyers of the honest ballot and was enabled to do so only by reason of the fact that I had Federal supervisors at the election. I was enabled to invoke the jurisdiction of the United States courts.

Through my contest in the Fiftieth Congress testimony was preserved which secured the conviction of the registration officials and their punishment for illegally disfranchising thousands of qualified voters, most of whom were colored, though the gentleman who prepared the report of the committee and submitted to this House, living within my own State, and not 200 miles from the place of those trials, felt called upon to apologize for these scoundrels, and was convinced in his own mind that—

While it is true that in every election isolated instances of partiality, unfairness, and the inequitable working of the law are, perhaps, always apparent, we find nothing in this case to stamp it as one in which the powers of the election officers under the law were illegally or unfairly used for purposes of oppression or for improperly influencing the election or the method of its execution, unusually arbitrary or harsh.

Mr. McKINLEY. Who made the report?

Mr. FRANK. Mr. HEARD, of Missouri.

So in 1888 my campaign was fought on this issue and the people sustained me, not Republicans alone, but people of all politics; this is demonstrated by the fact that the district had always been regarded reliably Democratic by 1,600, and I was elected by over 2,500 without the use of money against a man who had many qualifications, not the least of which was a "barrel."

I allude to these matters for many reasons. First, to show that I am here to advocate the purity of the ballot; second, to prove the efficiency of supervision as the law now stands, if extended so as to be operative in any places as it is in cities alone; third, to prove the fairness of this measure properly modified.

This question, in the very nature of things, when rightly understood can not be contorted into a party question.

The Constitution, as interpreted by the judicial branch of this Government, has settled any question of that kind so far as this law is an extension of the provisions of the act of 1871, now upon the statute-book; but, so far as new provisions therein are concerned, a party issue may be made, not, perhaps, upon constitutional grounds, however, but upon grounds of policy to which I shall advert in a moment. But the questions of a fair ballot and an honest count, unimpeded vote and a correct return, an unbribed voter and an incorrupt canvasser, all these recognized and appreciated as the very foundation of a representative government and the perpetuity of republican institutions, are no patent rights of the Republican party; all the wisdom is not ours, all the blunders are not yours. The thoughts of the people of most of the States have been concentrated on this question for years. Each State has endeavored by its election laws, amended, altered, and improved, to secure the same result; and hence you have heard so much said of the latest fad, the Australian system, adopted in Massachusetts and my State, and this American system just adopted in New York, these systems which, in the zeal for a honest election, seem to have entered into a competition for the championship which can disfranchise the most voters.

This is wholesome legislation; this is not an invasion of home rule; it is recognition of home rule—local self-government—when sections 10, 15, 16, and 38 are eliminated or modified; when so eliminated or modified its provisions do not clash with a single right of a State or a State officer; it is a bill for Federal supervision without Federal interference or Federal control. With those provisions in, it is a hybrid-mongrel affair, subversive of recognized State rights, odious in its authorization of the determination of results by setting up comparatively irresponsible persons, selected by one man, as paramount in authority and position to the chief executive officers of the State chosen by the people of the State. With these provisions out or altered the people will sustain it and no party can afford to oppose it.

By the provisions of sections 15 and 16, the circuit judge appoints for each State three citizens to compose a national board of canvassers, two of whom will belong to the same political party in most cases, who, at $15 a day, shall do what?—declare and certify the results of the election on figures, tabulated returns, and statements furnished to them by the chief supervisor and the clerk of the court, which declaration and certification shall entitle the person designated to a seat on this floor.

The United States partakes of the State hospitality, uses its machinery, registration sheets, tickets, ballot-boxes, clerical force, voting booths, all the paraphernalia furnished free, and then withdraws without returning thanks; worse than this, acts the bear by refusing to give credence to the completed work; eats of the repast, and when the last course has been finished takes the "Rosa perfecta" furnished by the host, puffs it heartily, leaves the festive board, and discredits the dinner.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANK] be permitted to proceed further.

Mr. HEARD. Before that consent is granted, I ask that I may have five minutes to make a personal explanation.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Wait until the gentleman from Missouri is through.

Mr. HEARD. No; I would like to have this matter settled now. The gentleman from St. Louis has gone out of his way to single me out as a member of the committee which made a unanimous report against him, and I insist that I should be permitted to be heard on a personal matter.

Mr. FRANK. That is not an accurate statement.

Mr. HEARD. I say it is; and I will prove it before this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that a large number of gentlemen are on the list as desiring to speak, and the time has all been parceled out, so that any extension must necessarily cut out some one who has been promised recognition.

Mr. CHEADLE. The gentleman from Missouri is a member of the committee and is entitled to an hour. He asks for only a few minutes additional.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed five minutes.

Mr. HEARD. I shall not object; but I give notice that I shall reply to the gentleman's remarks at some time during the progress of this discussion, either during the debate on amendments or otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be very glad, indeed, to accommodate himself to the wishes of the gentleman from Missouri, but he can not do so in justice to other gentlemen.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Can not the gentleman's time be extended by unanimous consent?

A MEMBER. We can sit so much the longer to-night.

Mr. DOCKERY. The request is for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed to proceed—for how long?

Mr. FRANK. Five or six minutes.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Say ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman to proceed for ten minutes longer? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRANK. It is passing strange that gentlemen on this side in the discussion of this bill close their eyes to the danger lines and make their detour in the high atmosphere, free from obstacles. I say "let the lower lights be burning."

It may appear to some people that the rôle of statesmanship has reached the acme of perfection when the wisdom of a questionable measure is determined by the opposition aimed at it with invective against the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and her great thinkers, and the bill therefore supported by the distinguished Representative from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENHALGE]. It may appear to some people that opposition to this bill may be justified by the treatment the negro has received, the party has received, and many men on this side have received from persons high in rank and power; but it does not appear sufficient to me.

With the expurgation of the sections I have alluded to and will print in connection with these remarks in the RECORD, I believe the bill fair legislation. I do not think it means negro supremacy. It means a solution of the problem as suggested by Senator INGALLS: Justice—justice which follows an observance of the laws of man; the laws of nature work out their own results. I use that distinguished gentleman's language:

Sir, the black race is capable of civilization. Notwithstanding the obstacles and discouragements, the failures and disappointments, justice requires the admission that in the dark and tragic interval of its transition period it has made marked and substantial progress, greater, far greater, than could have been reasonably expected. If the degenerate proclivities engendered by centuries of oppression and ignorance have not been extirpated, they have at least been surprisingly modified; and while there is nothing in his origin and in his history to justify the expectation that the African can ever successfully compete with the Anglo-Saxon in government, in art, in conquest, or practical affairs, neither is there anything to indicate that he is not susceptible of high civilization.

Much has been said about a new South—there is a new South; something has been said about a new North—there is a new North; but better than that there is a new, a rejuvenated, Republican party only partially represented, I fear, on this floor—a party who know the war is over, who believe the result is fixed and honestly accepted by the Southern people; a party who believe that the party is one of progress, of good-will, and not one to retard the prosperity of any section of the country by promoting labor disturbances and race antagonisms; a party composed of young men who first saw the light of day since the days of Appomattox who see enough in the issues framed by the party platforms to think about and to contend for without appealing to the worm-eaten chestnut of bloody shirts and interred hatred to arouse discord.

I am a friend of the colored man. I appeal to the many black men in my district who are among the most industrious, orderly, and enlightened of the population whether I have not given them incontrovertible proof of it in my efforts and zeal in their behalf.

I am opposed to this measure in its present form. I am not willing to say as did the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. EWART] that if this be treason to the party make the most of it. Let me say this: With the Republican party in undisputed control of every branch of the Government a warning voice raised against abuse of power—an emphatic protest against the use of power unnecessary for the prosperity of the country and the resolution to resist such measures are the highest attributes of party allegiance. [Loud applause on both sides of the Chamber.]

APPENDIX.

OBJECTIONABLE PROVISIONS.

SEC. 10. * * * If, at any time, the whole number of ballots found in any box intended for the reception of ballots cast for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress which properly belong therein shall exceed the total number of persons who shall have voted that day in the election district, then, in such case, it shall be the duty of the chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election and of the chairman or acting chairman of the supervisors of election to place in the said Congressional box all the ballots found to have been cast therein for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress, and to thoroughly mingle the same, when, if such excess shall be but one ballot, one of the inspectors of election, and if such excess shall exceed one ballot, then one of the inspectors of election and one of the supervisors of election shall be blindfolded and placed with his back or their backs to the said box, from which they shall publicly draw so many ballots as shall be equal to the excess, which ballots shall be forthwith destroyed and the votes for the persons named in such withdrawn ballots shall be deducted from the votes entered for such persons on the tallies. Where the ballots drawn from any such box are to be drawn by an inspector of election and a supervisor of election, such drawing shall be done as follows: The first ballot shall be drawn by the inspector of election and the second ballot by the supervisor of election; all ballots drawn thereafter shall be drawn by each of said officers alternately.

SEC. 15. It shall be the duty of each chief supervisor of election, on or before the first day of September next following the passage of this act, to cause a judge of the circuit court of the United States in his judicial district to be informed in writing that it is necessary that the circuit court should be opened for the purpose of complying with the provisions of this section.

It shall be the duty of the circuit judge who shall be so informed, on or before the first day of October next following the date of any communication containing such information, to personally open and hold a circuit court of the United States in such judicial district in such one of the States comprising his judicial circuit as shall be most convenient to him, and within ten days thereafter the said circuit court, so held by said circuit judge, shall, for each State within the said judicial circuit, appoint three persons of good standing and repute, citizens of the United States and residents of the State for which they shall be appointed, who shall be known as the United States board of canvassers of the Congressional vote within and for the State for which they shall be appointed; one of said three persons shall, when appointed, be named as chairman of the board. Such persons shall be sworn to the faithful performance of their duty and to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. They shall each hold their office so long as faithful and capable, and not more than two of them shall belong to the same political party; they shall each receive a salary of $15 a day for each day actually employed in the work of canvassing the statements and certificates of ballots cast at any election, general or special, for a Representative or Delegate in Congress and a further sum of $5 per day for their personal expenses. They shall have a seal and may appoint a clerk, who shall receive $12 a day for his services and expenses while actually in attendance upon said board. As a board it shall be the duty of such appointees of the said circuit court to convene on the 15th day of November of each even year, unless the same shall fall upon Sunday, when they shall convene on the following day. In case of a special election they shall convene one week from the day of such special election. They shall so convene at such place in their State as shall be most convenient for them, which place must, however, be a place where a term of the circuit court of the United States is by law regularly held, and there proceed to finally canvass and tabulate the votes which shall have been stated and certified as cast for Representative or Delegate in Congress in each Congressional district in their State in and throughout which this act shall have been enforced, and not elsewhere, and shall declare and certify the result of the election thereof in each such district.

For the purposes aforesaid they shall use the statements and certificates and such accompanying papers, if any, as shall have been forwarded to the clerk of the circuit court of the United States in the several judicial districts in their

State, and the same shall be, by such officers, produced before the said board for such purpose; when opened by the chairman or acting chairman of the said board he shall mark each separate sheet of each such statement and certificate as shall be contained therein with the initials of his name. The said board may also require the production before it of such certificates and statements and such accompanying papers and tallies filed with the several chief supervisors of elections in the same judicial districts as shall be necessary for examination and comparison by said board, where it shall appear by a comparison of the tabulated returns furnished for their inspection and reference by such chief supervisors, as provided in this act, with the statements and certificates filed with the several clerks of the circuit courts, that there are discrepancies or errors existing. It shall also be authorized and empowered to summon and compel the attendance before it of the supervisors of election who served on election day in any election district in and from which there shall be found to exist incomplete, imperfect, or inconsistent certificates and statements, and to examine such officers for the purpose of ascertaining whether such certificates and statements are imperfect or inconsistent and of arriving at the facts. Any supervisor of election who shall fail, neglect, or refuse, without good and sufficient excuse, to obey any summons of said board to so attend at the time and place required therein, shall be liable to arrest, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The marshal of the United States in the judicial district in which any such board of canvassers shall be convened shall detail one of his deputies to attend its sessions and preserve order thereat. Such marshal shall, by his deputies, serve all summonses of said board.

The determination arrived at and stated in the declarations and certificates of any such United States board of canvassers shall, as to each such Congressional district, be at once made public, and the declaration and certificate for each Congressional district shall be made in triplicate, be signed by each member of the board, and have affixed thereto the seal of said board; one shall be filed in the office of the chief supervisor of elections, under whose supervision the Congressional district covered by it was, together with all the papers and documents used, or which might by law be used, before such board for the purpose of ascertaining, declaring, and certifying the result in said Congressional district; another shall be forwarded by mail to the person found by them to have been elected, addressed to him at his place of residence; the third copy shall be similarly forwarded to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States at Washington. In case no person be found duly elected in any district a certificate of that fact shall be made by said board in triplicate, under their hands and seals, and forwarded as follows: One to the governor of the State, another to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the third to the proper chief supervisor of elections.

The final declaration and certificate of said board as to the result in each and every Congressional district shall be completed and transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives as soon as practicable, and in no event later than the last day of the month in which by law said board is to convene.

SEC. 16. Upon the receipt by the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the declaration and certificate of any United States board of canvassers of the Congressional vote as to the election of any Representative or Delegate in Congress it shall be the duty of that officer to open and file the same in his office. If by such declaration and certificate it shall appear that another and different person has been elected as a Representative or Delegate in Congress than the person certified as elected by such officer or officers of the State in which such Congressional district is situated, whose duty it is by the laws of the State to make such certificate, then the person so certified as elected by the declaration and certificate of the United States board of canvassers shall be, by the said Clerk of the House of Representatives, placed upon the rolls of persons elected as Representatives or Delegates in Congress, and the provisions of existing law respecting the names of persons who shall be placed upon the roll of the House of Representatives by the Clerk thereof are modified to the extent herein provided, and to such extent only. Any Clerk of the House of Representatives who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to place upon the roll of Representatives and Delegates elected the name of any person entitled to be placed thereon as provided by the laws of the United States, shall be liable to arrest, and, upon conviction of such neglect, failure, or refusal, shall be punished by a fine not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall be forever disqualified from holding thereafter any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

Section 38 is the one changing the jury law.

[Mr. MAISH addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to-night with a great deal of interest to many of the arguments that have been advanced by gentlemen on the other side of the House and on this regarding the substance of this proposed law. I desire in some measure to review the arguments as they have struck my attention in the delivery here.

The gentleman who first occupied the floor asserted, in substance, that gentlemen on this side who voted for the bill would not vote their convictions. Now, I am here to say that that is a mistake. The members on this side who vote for this bill will, in the main, vote for it because they believe that it is framed in the interest of good government and of free and fair elections.

It has been argued that elections are fair and free and that there is no necessity for the passage of this bill. Gentlemen of the South, we of the North have been impressed in a different way regarding elections held in your portion of this country—whether with reason or not is a question of fact to be determined not by declamation and rhetoric, but by the returns and the recorded facts of history.

In what I have to say I do not propose to fight over any issues of the war. In that great struggle I took my part, as you did yours; and I suffered for my convictions, as you suffered for yours. I believed then I was right; I still believe I was right; and the conviction that thus impresses me is a conviction not particular and peculiar to myself alone, but a conviction that is diffused among the people of the North, which permeates every fiber of their being.

The desire of the great body of the people of the North is that there shall be given to each individual citizen in this land of ours the same equal right to participate in the privileges of government that is enjoyed by each individual citizen at the North. We care not whether his skin be black or white; we care not whether his estate be mean or noble; we desire simply that his rights under the law, wherever he be located, whether in the East, the West, the North, or the South, shall be equal and equally maintained. That is all the people of the North desire. And when it is argued that in supporting a measure which is calculated, in the judgment of the members on this side of the House, to obtain for each individual citizen that equal right we are voting against our convictions, gentlemen make a grave mistake.

If we support this bill we shall do so because it promises to give equal rights to the people of this country, black and white, poor and rich, noble and mean alike. And is there objection to be found to that? Is there any good reason that can be urged why such a law as this should not obtain in this Republic if it be founded on the principles of our Constitution?

Gentlemen say the law is unconstitutional. Whom is it aimed at and what is it aimed at? It is simply aimed at the man, wherever he be, upon American soil that shall undertake to destroy the right of the citizen to enjoy equal rights under the Constitution and laws of the land. Why, then, should gentlemen object to it; why stand up in their places and level against it all the invective and all the harsh language that they can command for the purpose of casting odium upon this measure, the promoters of which believe to be constitutional, designed simply to do justice between men?

Do you say that it is unnecessary? Then we take issue with you upon the question of fact. We say that after the war closed the black man in the South was not clothed with the equal rights which the Constitution and the laws of the land granted to him, and we refer you simply to your statutory enactments to be found upon the statute-books of nearly every State of the South which interfere with his civil rights and privileges in proof of the assertion. The statutes to which we cite you on that subject are numerous.

Mr. WHITING. Does the gentleman claim as a Republican to be talking for the people of the North?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I am talking now for the people of the whole country.

Mr. WHITING. Yes, you are talking for the North.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I am talking for the whole country. This is a national question.

Mr. Speaker, we find on going over the history of political matters in the South since the war, that wherever there has been a disturbance in the Southern portion of the country, where killing has been done, the black man died and the white man triumphed. I am not inveighing against the white man of the South, but I am inveighing against the state of affairs that could produce such occurrences as have taken place in the last few years in that section.

I turn now, sir, to the elections in the South as an illustration of the point I am making, and I am free to admit, Mr. Speaker, that the acts of violence that existed for many years have given way to a milder form, that strikes not with the bludgeon or the shotgun, but strikes with the blow of fraud. I turn now to some of the statistics of your elections in the South, to ascertain the fact whether or not there are these free and fair elections there that should be accorded to every community and to every individual citizen throughout this broad land. For I say to you, gentlemen of the South, when you attack the fairness and freedom of elections in your own sections in the South you strike a blow at fair elections all over the land.

You enact or produce or bring into being a principle which, when applied to your own existence and political privileges in time to come, will debauch and destroy them; for like the cancerous sore on a healthy man, after it has performed its functions it feeds upon the living tissues of the flesh and destroys the organization. So with your suppression of the ballot; so with your interference with fair elections in the South, you pave the way to your own destruction as far as your political liberties are concerned. For, Mr. Speaker, when the present issues pass by, when the time comes that old issues are dead and new ones have arisen, when you are divided on different lines a hundred years hence, when your children's children come to inherit the liberty which has come down to us through hundreds of years of hardships, suffering, turmoil, and bloodshed, and they seek to accomplish political results unfairly, will they not better the instructions which you have given to them? Will they not interfere with your liberties then and there?

It is not so much a question for the people of the North, so far as the people now living are concerned, as it is a question for your posterity and for my posterity in this Republic that we hope to see go down through all the years crowned with blessings to you and yours and to me and mine.

Now, I ask your attention for a moment while I consider some of these elections in the South. I turn to the election of 1886 for Congressmen, and find in several States of the South that there was an aggregate of twenty-two "no-opposition" districts.

The time, gentlemen, has been when it was accounted an honor for men to occupy seats in this House. The time was when it was regarded as something of value to the citizen to come to the Congress of the United States and participate in the legislation for the whole country. And it is yet regarded as a prize worthy of striving for. But what do we find now in these districts? Twenty-two districts in the South in 1886 where there was but one candidate, or, if there was more than one, but one is known or recorded in history. And how were the men elected who were candidates in that election? I find the vote has fallen off enormously from the normal vote that should be cast there.

What does it argue to you and to me? It argues that the value of the elective franchise has become cheapened, lessened, in the sight of the people, and not worth working for in the minds of the Republicans of the South who have been deprived of their elective franchise and fair and free elections; and not only in their minds, but in the minds of the men who are electing Democrats to this body.

Take Alabama, which by the census of 1880 had a voting population of 259,884. What was the vote cast for your whole delegation in Congress in 1886? Only 71,704 votes, a falling off in your vote there of 188,180, as based upon the census of 1880.

I repeat, what does that argue to you and to me? That the value of the elective franchise is being lost sight of, cheapened, obscured, and placed out of sight by both parties, both races in the South. And that argues to you and to me that there is danger to your institutions and to mine in such a state of affairs.

Take the State of Arkansas. There, by the same census, there were 182,977 persons of voting age, or male residents twenty-one years of age and upwards. And the total Congressional delegation was elected in 1886 by 46,642.

Mr. PEEL. Will my good friend allow an interruption?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PEEL. My district is one of those.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Yes.

Mr. PEEL. I have in my district about 30,000 legal voters. I did not receive 5,000 votes, just simply because nobody went to the election.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Precisely; and why did nobody go?

Mr. PEEL. One moment; there was no opposition to me; and let me state that there sits an honorable gentleman who is a Republican from the State of Missouri. His district adjoins mine, and he will not say there is a suspicion upon my district.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I am not charging any individual gentleman here with these matters, but I am talking of the effect of this thing upon the morals of our country [derisive laughter upon the Democratic side], and the effect of this thing upon the elective franchise of our country, and the value that is placed upon it throughout those parts of the country.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. My district has been referred to and I will say that for the five elections now past no one will say a single unfair vote was cast or that there was any unfairness in the election.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I can not yield any further. I would be glad to if I had the time or if my time could be extended. I desire to refer to these matters and my time is very brief. Now, take the State of Georgia. There were there 321,438 voters according to the census of 1880, and the delegation in the Fiftieth Congress were elected by total vote of 27,475, or 10,000 votes less than were cast in my own district for one Representative. Now, take another State, the State of Mississippi, which had 238,532 voters by the census of 1880, and the total Congressional delegation was elected by 44,951 votes.

Take the vote of South Carolina, with a total vote of 205,789 by that census, but with only 39,077 votes cast for the total Congressional delegation. Now, I do not charge that every gentleman upon this floor who comes from a no-opposition district came here because somebody had been deprived of the right to vote, but I say that I argue legitimately and naturally and properly from the condition of affairs found there in four or five different States in the South that the condition of things there indicates there is something wrong, and there can be no other construction placed upon it.

Mr. BUNN. Will the gentleman yield for a single question?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUNN. How do you account for the loss of 40,000 votes in the States of Connecticut that has been mentioned here on the floor.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I do not know the total vote of Connecticut.

Mr. BUNN. It has just been given by the Representative from that State.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. But I do know this, that if you go through the North, in every State of the North where there is a general election, you will not find a single instance where there is no opposition.

Mr. PEEL. They are more greedy than we are.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Now, gentlemen, I put it to you as honest men, as men who love your country, who desire its best interest—

Mr. BUNN. I thought you had ruled us all out on that question.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I ask you whether that state of affairs ought to continue; whether there is not something wrong there that ought to be righted? This law proposes to do it. It proposes that there shall be a counting of all the voters and a registration; that there shall be a scrutiny of the votes in all cases, and now if that is done you say that it is as far as it ought to go. What would that amount to, now, if there is no one to certify to that vote? What would that amount to if there is no way of sending the result here, that shall bring it before this body untainted by any suspicion that something is wrong? What will the law amount to in that case?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Suppose that there is a suspicion that the return which comes here is wrong?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I will say that all human action must be entrusted to men, and the best that can be done is to select men who have good names.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Then why do not you trust the responsible State authorities instead of a set of irresponsible men who are accountable to nobody?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. When the judicial branch of the Government appoints these men from both political parties [derisive laughter and cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side]—when the judicial branch of the Government appoints these men, not from one party, but from both political parties, residents of that district, it seems to me it comes with poor grace to say that rascals will occupy those positions.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the judicial branch of the Government appoint these men?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Yes, sir; they are appointed by the circuit judges.

Mr. BUNN and Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Oh, no.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. If I am in error about that I hope the gentleman will correct me.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. You are in error. You are not stating the bill as it reads.

Mr. SHIVELY. The supervisors are appointed by the judges.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. The supervisors are appointed by the judges, and that amounts to the same thing. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. SHIVELY. But the supervisors make all the other appointments.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. That amounts to the same thing. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUNN. That is a very different thing.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. When you come to talk about the thugs and assassins, the burglars and that class of men being appointed to these positions, it seems to me that you stultify your own intelligence. You know that no political party will attempt to do that sort of thing as a rule.

Mr. BUNN. They have done it.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. There may be exceptional cases. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] There may be exceptional cases. I propose to discuss this thing squarely. There may be cases where some bad man will get into a position of that kind, just as bad men get into all other positions; but as a rule you will have those men selected under this law as they have been selected under the other law, from the reputable men of your community; and the law amended this afternoon proposes that they shall hold their offices for two years, or until their successors shall be appointed and qualified. Now you know just as well as I do that the circuit judges and the supervisors are just as amenable to public opinion as anybody.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Are they any more so than the State officers?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. And if the men who are appointed do not perform their duties properly they will be thrown out and others put in their places. I tell you, gentlemen, you have a deep interest in the proper solution of these difficulties. You have got the Southern question to deal with. You have got your negro question to properly solve.

Mr. BUNN. We are willing to attempt it, and we believe we can do it successfully.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. You have got these people among you, and you have these questions before you, and how are you going to solve them? You can not do it by taking away the elective franchise. You can not do it by depriving them of their rights. Where that condition of things exists under which they are deprived of their rights, that condition must be changed, whether it be this year or next year or a quarter of a century hence.

It can not go on in that way. For you have your own rights and your own interests to look out for, and I tell you you are more interested than any other class of men on this continent in having that question solved rightly and justly. We of the North believe that, whatever your desires have been in the matter, in the past you have unjustly deprived men of their rights.

Mr. BUNN. Oh, no.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. You must produce before us something which will controvert this statement which I have placed before you before you convince Northern men that you are now doing your duty to that dependent class of people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill because I am not afraid to place around any American citizen all the legal and constitutional requirements that will inure to his privilege and benefit and all the advantages of the position that he ought to occupy in relation to the elective franchise. I am not afraid of any law that will guard the honest voter, and I am not afraid of the enforcement of any law that will destroy the power of the men who destroy and debauch the elective franchise. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Mr. BUCHANAN, of Virginia, addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. LESTER, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, if the proposed measure could have dispassionate consideration, unaffected by partisan bias, it could not meet the approval of the Representatives on this floor, and I shall indulge the hope that sufficient conservatism still remains here to stay the hand now uplifted to do violence to the Constitution and to disturb the peace and fraternity of the States now so happily existing.

The proposition which it is proposed to enact into law is that the Federal Government shall step into the States and by its officers declare what persons shall constitute the representatives of the people of the States whenever one man in any one particular district shall certify that one hundred qualified voters in that district wish it to be so.

The chief supervisor shall, in fact, appoint three supervisors for each election district. These three shall overlook, interfere with, and declare who shall vote, by the power given them to pass upon the qualification of voters, to receive the ballots, and particularly to make such return to their chief as they shall see fit. The chief submits such returns as he pleases to make to three men appointed by the court to canvass the returns submitted and to certify the election, which certification shall be practically conclusive as to the election, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives must, under severe penalty, place the name so certified on the roll of elected members. The persons so certified shall constitute the Congress of the United States.

This bill is the response to that bold declaration recently made by the chief Republican, advising his party as to methods to meet party exigencies. "Let us do our own registration, our own counting, and our own certification. Let us, the Republican party, do this."

Are there no longer "people of the States?" Is representation of States in Congress no longer a matter essential to the Government, which is by the States, of the States, and for the States? Is it that the Congress is a distinct entity, independent of and of no concern to the States? Whence came the Government of the United States? It was created by the people of the States, and its succession depends upon the people of the States. The elections for members of Congress are by the people of the States, in the States, and for the States. Representation is one of the constitutional rights of the people of the States. It is one of the most sacred of all political rights, and no political party or power can justify its action in taking it away.

If statehood was obliterated there would be no constitutional government. None can have so great an interest in this General Government as the people of the States, because the representation is their representation, and this is not the less so because the people of all the States of the United States may be affected by legislation perfected by all the Representatives—the Congress of the United States. The first, the primal representation, is the representation of the "people of the several States." The very existence of the Government of the United States depends upon the representation of the States.

The governmental right, the national authority, did not come into existence by a higher power. It did not descend upon any man or body of men. It ascended, so to speak, from the people; not the aggregate mass of all the people, but from the segregated mass, from the several people of the several States. The Government is styled the "United States of America;" the significance of which is that it is the Government of States united for the purposes specified in the Constitution. "We, the people of the United States," used in the preamble of that Constitution, suggests no idea of consolidated power above, beyond, outside of, and independent of the States, no more than did the term "United colonies of North America," as applied to the Government of the Revolution, and the term "United States of America" used in the Articles of Confederation imply or suggest such absolute consolidated and independent government.

The nature of the General Government with respect to the composition of its governing powers and the manner of their creation is not left in doubt when we reflect that it has no power and not even an existence except as derived from the Constitution. The legislative authority, the subject of concern in the consideration of the measure under discussion, is provided for as follows:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives. (Article I, section 1.)

And the manner of creating the House of Representatives was thus prescribed:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. (Article I, section 2, paragraph 3.)

The Representative must be an inhabitant of the State in which he shall be chosen. (Article I, section 2, paragraph 3.)

But this is not all.

Representation and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States. (Article I, section 2, paragraph 3, and fourteenth amendment, section 2.)

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies. (Article I, section 2, paragraph 3.)

I invoke these provisions of the Constitution to show that the right of representation in the American Congress is a right that belongs to the "people of the States," a right the exercise of which concerns them alone; a right as sacred as any political or other right they may have, either by the guaranty of the Constitution of the United States or by the constitutions of the States.

If this right of choosing their own Representatives is not an important and cherished right, what is? It is our boast that the American Government is a representative Government. Representative of whom, or of what? There is but one answer: Representative of the people of the States, selected by the people thereof.

It will not do to say that the people of the States may manage their own affairs in the State governments, but have no concern in the selection of members of the House of Representatives, because representation in the Federal Government is their constitutional right, and he who attempts to deprive them of that right, either directly or by a device which may have the effect of suppressing their voice in the selection of their own Representatives, is far on the road to an absolute centralized government.

But it is said that the General Government has the power to take into its own hands the election of the Representatives of the States. It is derived, we are told, from Article I, section 4, of the Constitution, which declares as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to places of choosing Senators.

Not only is the right of the States to elect their own Representatives given, but it is made their duty to prescribe the time, place, and manner of holding the elections. In whom exists the right of holding the elections? The "time, place, and manner of holding" is a different thing from the regulations as to the "time, place, and manner" of the holding.

I ask again in whom does this right exist—in the States, or in the United States? It is not given in terms to either. The power is not in the United States, nor can it be assumed by the United States, for the United States is inhibited by the Constitution from the exercise of any power "not delegated" to it. It is in the States, first, by the necessary implication of the grant giving the right to representation; and, secondly, because "all powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." So speaks the Constitution.

An examination of this provision of the Constitution excites the inquiry, why was this power, whatever its limit, given in such strange manner, a power so apparently inconsistent at first view with the language immediately preceding it? There must be a reason, and a reason which will explain the ambiguity. When found it will furnish a satisfactory solution, not only a satisfactory solution, but a conclusive one; and by the rules of construction, the reason upon which the law is founded is the life and very expression of it. When the reason ceases the law ceases, by whatever words it may be expressed. While the reason exists law lives.

Referring to the history of the Constitution we find that this provision was considered and violently opposed by many of the States and some of the most eminent of its framers. They feared it might be used for the destruction of the rights of the States in the selection of their Representatives, but its advocates contended that the States might fail or refuse to provide for the time, place, and manner of electing Senators and Representatives and thus cause lapse of the General Government. To prevent the contingency of this lapse was the reason and the only reason assigned for such a provision as this. Thus assured, the opponents acquiesced in the provision.

The journal of the convention which framed the Constitution, the debates upon its ratification by the several States, and the writings of the most eminent men who took part in its formation are here at hand. They show by an unbroken current that the reason for the provision was what I have stated it to be. The consideration of the question may be found in the journal of the convention, May 31, 1787, and on pages 218, 240, 354, and 374; the Federalist, Nos. 59 and 60; and Mr. Madison, who for his great services, eminent ability, and patriotic zeal is sometimes styled the author of the Constitution, thus gives his testimony:

The power of Congress to make regulations in reference to elections was supplied in order to enable Congress to regulate, etc., if the States should fail or refuse to do so.—Madison's Minutes, Elliot 5, 402.

Why should not this provision be construed as it was intended, and why should an effort be made to put it in force when the contingency upon which the power was to be put into effect has not happened? It will not do to answer that we have the power and it is for us to say when it shall be exercised; that does not satisfy.

The people of the States have the right to think that there is a limitation upon such power. Such was the undoubted understanding. Congress has the right to "declare war," but would you declare war without offense? Would you declare war without the contingency happening upon which it could be justified and expect the people of the United States to sustain you because of your unquestioned right to declare it as written in the Constitution?

The right to exercise power is not always consistent with its justification. England had the right to tax the American colonies. The colonies denied the right without representation. England lost her colonies.

To those who are urging the passage of this bill to promote, as they imagine, the perpetuation of the power of a political party I commend the sage reflections of an eminent expounder of the Constitution. They are full of significance, and maybe are full of prophecy.

Judge Story, who was disposed to give the fullest possible effect to this power, in answering the suggestion that it is a power that might be employed in such manner as to promote the election of some favorite candidate or favorite class of men, dismisses the supposition as chimerical. He says: "Every probability is against it."

Who are to pass the laws for regulating elections? The Congress of the United States, composed of Senators chosen by State Legislatures, and of Representatives chosen by the people of the States. Can it be imagined that these persons will combine to defraud their constituents of their rights or to overthrow the State authorities or the State influence? The very attempt would arouse universal indignation and produce an immediate revolt among the great mass of the people, headed and directed by the State governments. And what motive could there be in Congress to produce such results?

The truth is that Congress could never resort to a measure of this sort for purposes of oppression or party triumph until that body had ceased to represent the will of the States and the people; and if under such circumstances the members could still hold office it would be because a general and irremediable corruption or indifference pervaded the whole community. No republican constitution could pretend to afford any remedy for such a state of things.

Mr. Speaker, if the time has arrived and the contingency has happened for the exercise by Congress of the power to "make or alter" the regulations of the States, I submit that it should do so by law, and not leave the power to be exercised by the will of one hundred irresponsible persons. The bill as it stands is a confession that there is no occasion for legislation on the subject. It declares that "any registration of voters, etc., for any election, etc., at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, and any such election shall be guarded, scrutinized, and supervised" by persons appointed by the circuit courts of the United States, when in any Congressional district or in any city of 20,000 inhabitants an "application shall be made by one hundred persons claiming to be citizens of the United States, residents, and qualified voters."

It shall not go into effect generally in the United States, nor generally in any State, but locally in such district or city as one hundred indefinite persons shall will to make it the law. Congress is not to express its will as to what shall be the law, nor when nor where it shall operate. That will is to be delegated to some one else, and, what is worse, it is not to be delegated to the people of the districts, nor even to a majority, but to a small fraction thereof. And yet, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on this floor declaim about the marvelous beauty and fairness of this provision and say that it is with the people of any district to have such law or not. They can not be familiar with the bill, else, and which is most probable, they are careless about reasons.

Every man, woman, and child in the district may protest against the law without avail. One hundred of the meanest and vilest may be their law-givers. When Congress abdicates its function to legislate by law for the people whose creature it is, it should not attempt to create another law-making power over and above the people.

The power attempted to be given to these one hundred persons by this bill is clearly a delegation of legislative power by Congress, and the measure proposed can not be a law. Let us examine it a moment.

The only means by which Congress can execute legislative power (and legislative power is all that it has) is by means of law, that is, by the enactment of laws.

The power to make laws "necessary and proper" for carrying into execution the powers conferred upon it is given Congress in the eighteenth paragraph, section 8, Article I, of the Constitution. But it must be borne in mind that it can not make laws except upon the subjects over which jurisdiction is given it, and that what it does in this respect must be done by the enactment of a law.

To Congress alone is given the power to make laws, and its will and not another's must be the expression and life of the law. In other words, it can not delegate its power to another, and the act by which it attempts this is in no sense a law.

Says Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations:

One of the settled maxims of the law is, that the power conferred upon the Legislature to make laws can not be delegated by that department to any other body or authority. Where the sovereign power of the State has located the authority there it must remain; and by the constitutional agency alone the laws must be made until the constitution is changed. The power to whose judgment, wisdom, and patriotism the high prerogative has been intrusted can not relieve itself of the responsibility by choosing other agencies upon which the power shall be devolved, nor can it substitute the judgment, wisdom, and patriotism of any other body for those to which alone the people have seen fit to confide the sovereign trust.

I am aware that a law may be passed to take effect upon the happening of a subsequent event. But an act to regulate elections which makes its operation to depend upon this contingency, namely, that one hundred persons shall say they desire it to go into effect, not generally, but locally, for an occasion, is not of this kind.

In the first place, the happening of such a contingency as that would not put the law into effect. It would be operative only in one locality. The rule, the law itself, would still be inoperative anywhere else. The most that can be said of the contingency mentioned in this bill is that the law, as a rule, shall not go into effect at all; or if so, it shall be not on the happening of one but of three hundred separate and distinct contingencies, and that it shall not even operate locally except upon a contingent contingency.

Inasmuch as Congress can legislate only by laws, as the very essence of a law is that it shall be a rule, and as this act as a rule can not be applied upon the contingency provided, it can not be a law.

The distinction between a conditional law and an act of the law-making power seeking to transfer functions, the legislative to another, is thus expressed in the opinion of the supreme court of Pennsylvania (6 Barr., 527):

The one leaves nothing to be done to perfect the rule of action, the other but molds the clay into shape, leaving to third persons the task of breathing into its mimic frame the energy of life. What is this more or better than simply preparing the project of a law to be submitted for sanction of a distinct and independent tribunal?

What is this measure when submitted to the test of rule? It is the will not of Congress, for it expresses no will. Whose will shall breathe into this clay the "energy of life?"

Congress does not express its will, but the majority of this House seems willing to allow another will to work, under the forms of this act. Gentlemen tell us that there is no necessity for this law in their particular district; that they do not wish it to operate there; yet they say they are willing for any to have it who wish, and therefore will support the bill. Yet the gentlemen know that no people want it, or at least they do not know that they do. And they know further, or ought to know, that the people will have no option whatever in the matter when the bill shall be passed. This generosity is indeed striking. Gentlemen are willing to force upon others what they themselves do not want and will not have.

Not the least objectionable feature of the bill is the requirement that the courts of the country shall give themselves to the work of operating the machinery of elections. Courts and judges should be revered and respected. That they shall preserve this respect they should deserve it. When the ermine is dragged through the pool of politics it can no longer be the emblem of purity and justice. And I say, Mr. Speaker, not only that it is wrong and against public policy to subject the judges to such duties as are prescribed for them by this measure, but that it can not be lawfully done.

When a judge takes his oath of office he becomes a part of the judiciary. No functions except judicial ones can be given him by Congress; nor can duties other than judicial be imposed upon the court.

If anything is plain, it is that the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government are to be kept distinct.

The bill provides that the judges of the circuit courts of the United States shall, upon the call of the chief supervisor of elections, saying to him that "he has business to present to the court in respect to the next ensuing election," open the court and do and perform the many acts made incumbent upon him by the bill, such as appointing such supervisors of elections as the chief supervisor shall nominate, appointing a board of canvassers of the election returns, and other such acts. More than this, he is required to examine into a man's political faith to determine whether he is competent to be appointed a canvasser.

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish," says the Constitution. Not content with giving to Congress the power to establish courts, the framers of the Constitution saw fit to define and limit the subjects of judicial cognizance, evidently to confine the courts to their proper sphere, the adjudication of matters strictly judicial. Section 2 of Article III declares as follows:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising out of the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizen of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State, claiming lands and grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens or subjects.

This is the entire catalogue of subjects within the sphere of the United States courts, and it will be observed that they are confined to "cases in law and equity" arising out of the various subjects. I need not waste your time by showing what a case in law or in equity means. Suffice it to state a potent fact, that a case in law and equity presupposes parties and controversy between them as to some right in question. It implies also an adjudication of the question by the court.

This bill proposes to confer a jurisdiction of a different kind. Who are the parties? What is the controversy, and what is the judgment, and how is the judgment to be executed? This is not a new question.

The case of Hayburn, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and reported in 2 Dallas, 409, was where the Congress attempted to confer upon the United States courts the jurisdiction to investigate and pass upon the validity of claims of certain possessions of the Government.

The case of Ferreira, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, 13 Howard, 40, was where the Congress by an act directed the judge of the Territorial court of Florida to pass upon the claims of certain claimants for losses sustained.

In these cases the court decided that the acts conferring the jurisdiction were void, because the acts to be performed by the court were not judicial, and because powers were not enumerated in the Constitution conferring power upon the courts.

To the same effect are the cases of Yale Todd by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the case of Gordon vs. The United States, 2 Wallace, 516, the opinion of the court in which case will be found in 117 United States Reports, page 696.

The bill under consideration does not appoint the judge as an individual or as a commissioner to perform this work. It requires it to be done in court. It was the opinion of the court, expressed in the cases of Hayburn and of Todd which I have mentioned—

That as the act of Congress intended to confer the power on the courts (as it does in the measure now under consideration) as a judicial function, it could not be construed as an authority to the judges composing the court to exercise the power out of court in the character of commissioner.

Here, then, is an attempt to confer upon the courts powers not judicial, and not within the scope of the authority of Congress to confer.

You ask me upon whom would I confer this power, if not upon the courts? I answer, I would confer it upon no one. But if I stood in the place of the movers and promoters of this measure, and was determined to have this law, I would confer it upon some Republican high in the council, that he might do openly and boldly what the evident design of the bill contemplates.

The committee in charge of the bill inform the House "that they do not feel that it is necessary to enter into a detailed argument" "on the expediency and need" for such a measure as this. They do not enter into any argument at all, but remit the question to discussion in the House. The subject has had discussion, but the House is left without a single valid reason why this measure should become a law. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the author of the bill and of the report, has spoken at length. His speech covers, or may be supposed to cover, the whole ground. Does he give any reasons for the passage of the bill?

Evidently recognizing the principle that no measure should become a law unless a reason can be given for it, he attempts a justification of the measure. His argument is this, and only this: He assumes that frauds upon the ballot are practiced in some localities by which the colored vote is suppressed. He assumes this to be an evil of great magnitude, and assumes that this measure provides the cure for the evil.

To sustain these assumptions no direct or positive facts are submitted. The proofs consist of statistics of the votes at elections in the Southern States and a comparison of these votes with the votes in some Northern States, by which it is made to appear that Southern Congressmen are sometimes elected by fewer votes than Northern Congressmen. The conclusion from this, it is maintained, is that the votes in Southern States corresponding to the difference must be suppressed. In other words, votes not cast are suppressed.

For instance, in 1884, the year of a Presidential election, Georgia cast 143,543 votes. In 1886 27,619 votes elected her ten Congressmen, all Democratic. The cry is: Where are the votes of 1884? The gentlemen reply to their own question and answer: The negro votes were suppressed. The argument, if it proves anything, proves too much. To make it valid at all it must be shown, as the major premises, that all votes not cast are suppressed. This is not true, nor can it be shown to be.

It proves too much. For if it be true that the failure to cast a ballot is the evidence of its suppression, then the white votes are suppressed as well as the negro vote. Gentlemen from Massachusetts and from Illinois have indulged excessively in this false logic, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has made it the sole stock of his contribution to this discussion. If the syllogism is applicable to Georgia, it is likewise applicable to the States these gentlemen represent.

In 1884 Massachusetts cast 303,383 votes, Illinois 672,849, and Michigan 401,186. In 1886 Massachusetts cast 245,309 votes, Illinois 576,510, and Michigan 372,490. Massachusetts fell off 68,084 votes, Illinois 96,339, and Michigan 28,695. So you will find over the whole Union. Will these gentlemen apply their own logic and tell why these voters representing these several differences did not cast their ballots, or why they were not counted? Were they suppressed by fraud?

There is no law compelling a man to vote, nor is there any law to deprive a State of its representation because any number of its qualified voters fail to cast their ballots. Representation in Congress does not depend upon the number of votes cast at an election nor upon the number of voters. "Representation and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States * * * according to their respective numbers," is the language of the Constitution, and the qualification of electors for members of Congress are such as may be prescribed by the States. The only limitation on this power is that no discrimination be made "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

The qualifications may be different, as they actually are, in different States, so that two States having the same population and being, therefore, entitled to the same number of Representatives, do not necessarily contain the same number of qualified voters. The right of a citizen to vote depends absolutely upon the States by virtue of their power to prescribe qualifications. Yet, gentlemen here seem to think that the validity and value of elections, as well as the fitness and representative character of the member of Congress, depend upon the quantity of ballots cast, and cry fraud when the ballots cast in elections at the South do not equal the number of voters.

It is pretended that this measure is necessary for the protection of the negro in his right to vote. Is it regard for the negro that really prompts you? Then why do you not protect him in his right to cast his ballot in State elections which more immediately concern his interest? If what some of the Republicans on this floor say is true of the condition of the negro of the South and of the disposition of the whites to prevent him from using his ballot, is it not cruel for you to induce him to cast his ballot in Federal elections? Do you not suppose that to vote at such elections will give quite as much offense as to vote at State elections?

We do not believe that love for the negro prompts your action in this matter. I think the gentleman from Maine fully exposed the purpose and motive of the bill, in his noted article in the North American Review, when he stated, speaking of the negro vote, the question to be, "Whether the Republican party of the United States shall receive and have counted the votes which belong to it by virtue of the Constitution of the country." You assume that the negro vote belongs to the Republicans, and that therefore it must be counted for the Republican party. I have known for a long time that the Republican party claimed to own the negro; but I had not been advised before that the party claimed him by virtue of the Constitution.

I deny that the negro belongs to the Republican party or to any party, and that any people can improve his condition except the white people with whom he lives. The negro at the South realizes his condition and aspires to its improvement. The white man is his model and his help. Antagonism of the races will not come unless it be engendered by those who think they know him better than his neighbor and seek to use him for what he is worth to them.

It is said that this measure is a harmless one. That no one ought to object to a scrutiny of elections to be assured of a free ballot and a fair count.

If your bill was nothing more than that it would not be objectionable, except as a piece of intermeddling with the affairs of the States. But the bill is not for scrutiny; it is for business, party business. It provides for partisan strikers at the polls and in the homes of citizens by the term deputy marshals, to drag people to the polls or perhaps to keep them away. It provides for troops at the polls to do the bidding of the United States. It provides for partisan supervisors of election and for a partisan "returning board," whose certificate of election seats whom they will in Congress.

Besides the evil of taking from the people their constitutional right to elect their Representative and have declared the result of their will by the governor of the State, the chances of a corrupt and fraudulent return of election are many times multiplied.

To those who desire a strong and centralized government let me say that there is no Union except the Union of the Constitution, that every blow struck at the rights of the people of the States but weakens the Government of the United States in that it takes away the pillars that support and uphold it.

[Mr. BROOKSHIRE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. Mr. Speaker, throughout the length and breadth of this land the people are watching with trembling anxiety our deliberations upon this bill. They are fearful of the curtailment or the entire annihilation of their civil liberty. The North is equally disturbed with the South, as is indicated by the wide attention given by the press to the address which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read as a part of my remarks.

The address is as follows:

SOUNDING THE ALARM—DEMOCRATIC REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS TAP THE PARTY FIRE-BELL.—AN ADDRESS TO THE PUBLIC—IT IS ISSUED OVER THE SIGNATURES OF THE NORTHERN DEMOCRATS—THE LODGE BILL ANALYZED AND THEIR OBJECTIONS FORMULATED FOR THE INFORMATION OF THE PEOPLE.

The Northern Democratic members of the House of Representatives have prepared the following formal protest against the national election bill, now under discussion in the House:

The undersigned, representing in the Congress of the United States constituencies in States north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers, feel it their duty to their fellow-citizens to briefly call their attention to the extraordinary, dangerous, and revolutionary measure now proposed by the leaders of the party in power for passage in the House of Representatives.

Under a doubtful construction of the Constitution, this bill proposes to substantially take from the States and local authorities control of all elections at which members of Congress are balloted for, and hand the same over to United States judges appointed to office for life, and chief supervisors of elections.

If the power claimed resides in the Constitution, which we deny, the Republic has gone through the difficulties of the formative period, made heroic struggle against dissolution, triumphed and successfully readjusted itself to changed conditions without the exercise of such power by the Federal Government for one hundred years and over. Mr. Jefferson and the fathers of the Republic would have considered such a proposition as this as dangerous as an open attempt at centralization.

This bill is a purely partisan measure intended primarily to control the elections for Congress and Presidential electors in all the States, and to intimidate, hound, obstruct, and harass by political prosecutions in unfriendly hands the adverse majorities in the cities of the North. To this end it gives to the control of the chief supervisor of elections, a body of Federal police spies, who are authorized to make domiciliary visits, superintend the naturalization of our foreign-born citizens, place the citizen under strict scrutiny of these trusty and unprincipled Federal detectives for days both preceding and following an election, and in every way subject him to the power and control of paid party mercenaries of Government in a way at utter variance with Republican institutions and the great principle of American freedom, home rule.

To carry on this scheme of imperial government millions of dollars will be taxed from our people, and the judiciary of the United States prostituted to the basest partisanship in the management of elections. And these invasions of the liberties of our people will be left for safety to partisan juries in the Federal courts, composed entirely of the men of the party in power. A partisan returning board is proposed for each State, the object and purpose of which, as well as the general constitutional objections to the bill, are well stated by the minority of the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, and which we herewith quote:

"The final returns of elections, made by the district boards of canvassers to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, are to constitute prima facie evidence of election results, and the persons so returned by the canvassers as elected are to have their names placed upon the roll as members of the House. The returns made by governors of States are to be wholly disregarded, although they may contradict the returns so made, and show that different persons were elected. The Clerk of the House must accept the canvassers' returns and reject the others, or be subjected to severe punishment by imprisonment and fine."

But as the boards of canvassers act upon the returns and statements furnished to them by the district supervisors, and do not receive or consider the official returns made by the State officers, it results that the district supervisors, with the aid of their subordinate precinct supervisors, will virtually dictate the returns upon which members will be seated in the House. By the fourth section of Article I of the Constitution it is provided:

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators."

By this provision very clearly a primary and general power is conferred on the State Legislature to regulate in all respects the times, places, and manner of holding Congressional elections, and also a secondary and conditional power, in other words, a permissive and contingent power, upon Congress to make regulations for those purposes and to change them, and it is a necessary implication from the language of the text that the permissive and contingent power of Congress is to be exercised, if exercised at all, according to that provision of the context found in clause 18, section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, which provides that Congress shall have the power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers," etc.

Therefore, if the States shall have performed their duty and exercised the general power of regulating the question, the contingency upon which Congressional action depends will not have occurred.

In case a State shall have neglected to enact laws for the election of Congressmen by its own people or shall have enacted laws in hostility to the General Government, either to deprive its people of representation in Congress or to prevent that right from being exercised in a reasonable manner and at proper times, then Congress is permitted to intervene and to establish regulations which will secure representation to the people of such State.

What was given to Congress as the law-making power of the Government in this case was a defensive power against State hostility or negligence by which popular representation would fail, and the necessary power of the Federal Government would be impaired or paralyzed for want of representation in the House.

This view of the Constitution is not mere matter of opinion begotten by the necessities of debate, nor a novel view introduced to support a foregone conclusion dictated by party interest or passion. It is a view supported by the most decisive proofs drawn from the history of our country at the time of the making of the Constitution and the organization of the Government of the United States.

In most of the States opposition was made to the ratification of the Constitution because it was alleged that this particular provision was liable to perversion and dangerous construction, extending national power to interference with State elections. In other words, those opponents apprehended the very abuse of construction which is embodied and illustrated by this bill, but the friends of the Constitution met them in debate and gave to this provision the construction above stated, vindicating this construction by substantial and satisfactory reasoning which convinced our fathers and ought to convince us.

Without considering the questions upon the construction of this provision of the Constitution which have been heretofore debated in Congress and considered by commentators upon constitutional law, relating to the manner and extent to which Congress may act in case of State default or hostile action, we are prepared to say that this bill is plainly unconstitutional, because the States have not failed to pass laws for the representation of their people in Congress nor made laws hostile to such representation and to the Government of the United States in connection therewith. On the contrary, their legislation upon this subject by the States has been apparently enacted in good faith to this Government and to their people.

In view of the great danger to the rights and liberties of the people and to the principle of local self-government involved in this bill we respectfully appeal to American freemen, without regard to party, to enter timely protest by way of public meeting or otherwise against this consolidation of Government, the destruction of popular rights, and the very foundation of American liberty, for we indulge in no mere rhetorical flourish when we solemnly affirm on our loyalty as citizens and on our honor as Representatives that this vicious and unpatriotic measure is a most serious menace to the very life of the Republic.

The issue is, "Shall a political party elect itself and keep in power by paid agents who are to control the political elections in all the States?"

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 1, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Arctic Ice Company and others, of Tucson, Ariz., praying for the discontinuance of the use of Government property for the manufacture of ice in Arizona to be sold in competition with private enterprise and capital; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WASHBURN presented a petition of citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., praying that the duty on Portland cement be not increased; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I present a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture giving the general conclusions of an investigation which was ordered and for which an appropriation was made. The time limited for the general report as to artesian wells was on or about the 1st of July, and the information is important to have now for the use of the committee. I addressed a note to the Secretary of Agriculture asking him to transmit the general conclusions, which he has done, and I ask that it may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring such legislation as will provide means to prevent future overflows of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of Grange No. 66, of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, favoring certain rates of duty on imported farm products; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Rev. Samuel Strong and 14 other residents of Bucks and Montgomery Counties, Pennsylvania; the petition of S. F. Platt and 23 other residents of Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and the petition of Joseph Foulke and 38 other residents of Bradford County, Pennsylvania, favoring the passage of House bill 5978, concerning the transportation of liquor in certain States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2445) to increase the pension of William R. Lebert, First Iowa Battery Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2249) to provide for the construction of a public building at Baltimore, Md., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Doss, of Christian County, Kentucky, praying to be placed on the pension-roll, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself yesterday intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably; and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9580) granting a pension to Rebecca Tussey;

A bill (H. R. 5031) granting a pension to George W. White; and

A bill (H. R. 3477) for the relief of Niel Nielson.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1994) to increase the pension of Henry Sommers; and

A bill (S. 3550) granting a pension to Dora Benjamin.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. CULLOM June 25, 1890, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon; and the amendment was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE. I introduce, at the request of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States, a bill, which I ask may be read twice and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill (S. 4173) providing for a commission on the subject of the social vice was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COLQUITT introduced a bill (S. 4174) to authorize the construction of bridges over the Savannah, Ocmulgee, and Oconee Rivers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4175) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the indebtedness to the Government of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 4176) to limit the right of entry, under the pre-emption, timber culture, desert land, and homestead laws in Wyoming; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the second reading of the bill in full. The bill is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time, at length, if there be no objection.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc. That after the date of the approval of this act no person shall enter any of the public lands of the United States in the State of Wyoming under the laws providing for timber culture, or the irrigation of desert lands, or under the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States who is a bigamist or polygamist, or is living in what is known as patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or in violation of any law of this State or of the United States forbidding any such crime, or who in any manner teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law, or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, consents, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of said State prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the State.

And the Secretary of the Interior shall make all needful regulations to carry this act into effect.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire permission to say in offering the bill that, taking it intrinsically and apart from other surrounding facts and circumstances, I would not be in favor of the principles of the bill, but having admitted Wyoming without any reference at all in the constitution of Wyoming to Mormonism or polygamy or anything of that kind, and being about to admit Idaho with a constitution that prohibits the voting of Mormons in that State, I believe that we are opening a door of invitation to the Mormons and their wives to sell out their property in Utah, which they can do at a very high price, to go over into Wyoming, into that new State, where under its constitution men and women have the right to vote and can accomplish all that is to be desired by the Mormons in the propagation of their civil and religious establishment. There is nothing in the constitution of Wyoming to prohibit it, nothing to affect it in any degree. The acts of Congress disfranchise the Mormons in the Territory of Utah. The constitution of Idaho will disfranchise them in that State when it is admitted, and Wyoming, a neighboring State and said to be a very great one, stands there with open doors, and those people can sell their property in Utah and go to Wyoming and get homesteads or make timber-culture entries or any other entries under the laws of the United States under our standing invitation for them to do so, and I think the result will be that they will pull up stakes in Utah and move over to Wyoming.

Mr. PLATT. What does the Senator propose to have done with the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to make a single observation with reference to what has been said by the Senator from Alabama. We recently admitted four States, North and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, in the constitutions of which there was no clause relating to Mormonism.

Mr. MORGAN. And no female suffrage.

Mr. PLATT. There are very few Mormons comparatively in Wyoming, but I think the new State can be safely left to deal with the question of Mormonism, if the Mormons should attempt to go into that State. I think there is no reason why this law should apply to the settlement of the public lands in Wyoming which would not with equal force apply to the settlement of Mormons upon any of the public lands in the Western States or Territories. I thought that I ought perhaps to say that much in reply to the observations of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4177), to allow railroad companies in the United States to make special rates with theatrical companies when composed of ten or more persons; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COLQUITT introduced a bill (S. 4178) for the relief of Bedney F. McDonald; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3833) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

OKLAHOMA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. Yesterday I reported from the Committee on Public Lands a bill concerning school lands in the Territory of Oklahoma. I was instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to ask the Senate to consider it at once, but on account of the condition of business yesterday I did not. However, I will ask the Senate now that the bill may be considered, subject to objection if in the event, after it is read and the case is stated, any member of the Senate shall feel that it is a matter which can not be disposed of at once and without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Calendar, under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4171) to authorize the leasing of school lands in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes. The bill will be read at length as in Committee of the Whole, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 8 of section 2, before the word "school," the words "university and" should be stricken out. That was copied from the Arizona bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 8, before the word "school," strike out the words "university and;" so as to make the proviso read:

That until the Legislature of said Territory shall provide by law for the leasing of said school lands the governor is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to make the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to state that the bill is in practically the precise terms of a bill which passed here in the last Congress and became a law applicable to the lands in the then Territory of Washington. It is in substance the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and passed at the present session of Congress in regard to school lands in the Territory of Arizona.

There is, however, more warrant for the passage of this bill than there was for the passage of either of those, because in Oklahoma, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, to state the facts mildly, those who entered upon these lands were entirely ignorant of the fact that they were school lands. Every one knows who has read the public prints as to the occurrences which took place in Oklahoma a year ago last fall, that there was a great rush for lands in that Territory. Inevitably the persons who went in there seeking for lands did not have the opportunity, if they had the ability, to find out which were school lands and which were not. The result was that the school lands were all settled upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They did not know which were the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections?

Mr. PLUMB. Some of them did not know which were the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, and there was reason why they should not know, in that scramble for lands, which were the sixteenth and which were the thirty-sixth sections. There is practically no timber land in that Territory, and this bill does not open to the control of the Territorial Legislature the timber lands. It leaves those to remain intact. All the lands therefore which this covers are prairie lands, the occupancy of which by any one, whether that occupancy be a long time by cultivation of the land or otherwise, could in no wise disadvantage the land; that is, it could not depreciate its value. Whatever trespass there is is a mere naked trespass, without disadvantage to the fund which is finally to be provided for out of the sale of these lands.

I do not know in the whole history of the Government of more than one single instance in which the Department of the Interior has ever assumed the right or rather the duty of driving people off from school lands; but in this case it seems the Interior Department has sent two agents down to the Territory apparently specially charged with the duty of dispossessing the people who have entered upon these lands, and to their great disadvantage. I, myself, while in the Territory last fall, saw two of these quarter-sections in the occupancy of persons whom I happened to know, who had taken them bona fide, but who being upon them after they had got knowledge that they were on the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections did not feel that it was worth their while to leave them, and they had remained on them up to that time in the hope that at some future period they would be able to acquire title through the instrumentality of the laws of the State to be created out of that Territory.

Nearly all these people are poor people. I venture to say that in nine cases out of ten the entire possessions of these people are invested in improvements they have made upon these lands. They have not damaged the lands, and for the Government to interfere now and compel the destruction of the property of those people is, to term it mildly, an outrage. I have a letter written to me from Hennessey, Oklahoma, by a gentleman I very well know, who formerly lived in Kansas and whose statements can be relied upon, which I will read, omitting the caption. It was received this morning.

A special agent of the Interior Department named Green is canvassing Oklahoma and notifying settlers on the school lands to vacate.

I know that this means ruin to a good many poor people if this order is enforced. These settlers in most instances have built up comfortable little homes, and everything they have in the world they have staked on these lands.

I know two old soldiers who are living on these lands because they have exhausted their homestead right, that if they are driven off will become objects of charity.

What reason can there be for not allowing these lands to be improved and cultivated? All the other lands here are settled upon, and if the settlers on the school lands are driven off there is no place for them to go.

Can you not secure a modification of the instructions so that if the settler is not damaging the land he may remain upon it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that entirely confined to Oklahoma?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask whether there is any existing provision of the Territory on the subject or have they not yet had the opportunity to act?

Mr. PLUMB. There is no legislative authority in the Territory. The Legislature has not been selected; the Territory has not yet been divided into legislative districts. They have been awaiting the result of the census recently taken, and when that is obtained the governor will have authority to apportion the Territory into legislative districts and order the election of a Legislature. Judging from what I have heard, the Legislature will probably assemble in October.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This act can not operate then, I see, until the Legislature meets.

Mr. PLUMB. The governor is authorized to act until the Legislature meets, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

Mr. PLATT. We are about opening some new lands in Oklahoma Territory. Does this bill apply equally to those lands as to all?

Mr. PLUMB. It applies to all lands in the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. PLATT. Those lands are not settled upon as yet.

Mr. PLUMB. That is true, but unless qualified the bill will apply to all of them.

Mr. DAWES. Let me inquire if by "all of them" the Senator means those that are now being acquired from Indian tribes on their reservations.

Mr. PLUMB. It is broad enough to cover those.

Mr. DAWES. Then I should like still further to make an inquiry. Has it been customary in the Territories heretofore to permit the people to occupy the school lands until they are disposed of for the benefit of the State?

Mr. PLATT. There have been different customs in different Territories.

Mr. PLUMB. The custom has been unbroken to make no interference at all with the persons who did occupy the school lands, except in the case of Washington Territory, in which case the late Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Sparks, did what was then characterized as a great outrage and which Congress passed a law to meet. He exercised his authority to remove as trespassers some particular persons who had settled upon school lands in that Territory.

Mr. PLATT. Some of the Territories have more than permitted it to be done.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt they have practically conspired to let people occupy them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator from Kansas proceeds further, I hope he will pardon a suggestion from me. In reply to a question of mine he said that until the Legislature of the Territory does meet the governor is to exert the authority. I have looked at the bill, and I am a little afraid that the language employed does not accomplish it. It says that the governor may make rules and regulations; that is, lay down the law of operation. I would suggest that perhaps it ought to state in affirmative terms that the governor may proceed and execute the act until the Legislature acts. I am afraid, in point of law, the bill as it is will not work.

Mr. PLUMB. I accept the suggestion, and I want to make one further statement. This does not in any way displace the authority of Congress over these lands; and the Senator from Connecticut, who had to do with the framing of the bill for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, as well as the bills for the admission of the new States, will bear in mind that when we came to pass the act largely framed by him for the admission of the States of North and South Dakota at any rate, and I think also Washington and Montana, it was therein provided that these school lands should not be sold for less than $10 an acre. I only speak of this to show that while Congress by this act permits these people to remain upon the land it has reserved to itself complete authority to say at the proper time what they shall pay for the land in case it be purchased by them or by anybody else.

As part of the literature in this case, I will ask leave to insert in the RECORD the notices which I hold in my hand which have been sent to me, and one of which I will read to show the peremptory character of the orders issued by these special agents:

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY, June 16, 1890.

SIR: You are hereby notified to remove your family and effects from the SW. $\frac{1}{4}$ section 36, township 16, range 3 west.

The above-described land is school land, and there is no law authorizing settlement upon school land in Oklahoma Territory, and all persons settling upon school land in said Territory are trespassers, and if they do not remove will be prosecuted for trespass.

Your immediate compliance with this notice is expected.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. SCOTHOM,
Special Agent, G. L. O.

To E. W. BOWMAN,
SW. $\frac{1}{4}$ Section 36, Township 16, Range 3 West.

"G. L. O." means "General Land Office." This is right in the midst of the growing season, at a time when to remove a man from a piece of land of that kind will be his absolute financial destruction. This is of the date of June 16, 1890, and it is without parallel as to brutality, in my judgment, in the history of civilized government.

Mr. BUTLER. Where does that notice come from?

Mr. PLUMB. It comes from a special agent of the General Land Office. I have another one here which is to the same effect.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Oklahoma Territory, June 24, 1890.

SIR: You are hereby notified to remove your family and effects from NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ section 16, township 16, range 7 west. Said section is school land and there is no law authorizing settlement upon school land in Oklahoma Territory. All settlers upon school land in said Territory are trespassers, and if they do not remove will be prosecuted for trespass.

Your immediate compliance with this notice is expected.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. SCOTHOM,
Special Agent, G. L. O.

To ABRAHAM MEHEW,
NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ Section 16, Township 16, Range 7 West.

The next one reads as follows:

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY, June 24, 1890.

SIR: You are hereby notified to remove within sixty days from the date of the service of this notice upon you the post and barbed-wire fence with which you have inclosed the NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ section 16, township 16, range 7 west.

The above-described land is school land, and there is no law authorizing settlement upon school land in Oklahoma Territory.

The fencing of public lands not open for settlement in any of the States or Territories of the United States is made unlawful by an act of Congress approved February 25, 1885.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. SCOTHOM,
Special Agent, G. L. O.

To ABRAHAM MEHEW,
NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ Section 16, Township 16, Range 7 West.

I think, with due respect for everybody concerned, that the special agents of the Department might be engaged in better business. If it is to be done at all, there is such a thing as doing the wrong thing at the right time, and, as the Senator from Illinois suggests, in a mild way. I have no doubt that all this is being done without the immediate knowledge of the head of the Interior Department, but it to some extent illustrates the vice of having irresponsible persons traveling around the country and bearing the commission of the Government and authorized to do what they think is necessary without any special limitation upon them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are these lands surveyed?

Mr. PLUMB. They are surveyed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the sections ought to be known.

Mr. PLUMB. When these people went on them, you mean? So they ought to have known; but meanwhile the lapse of time has obscured many of the monuments or removed them, and in the next place the circumstances under which the Territory was settled made it impossible for a man to apply his ordinary knowledge as to the question of where he was going; there was such a general rush that a man was glad to get upon a piece of land without inquiring whether it was a piece of school land or not.

But even supposing they knew they could not get title except by the consent of the new State, and we have power to prescribe the conditions under which the new State shall give authority, and in the mean time some person without means wants to be upon these lands as a tenant of the Government or as a tenant of the Territory of Oklahoma or of the prospective State of Oklahoma, doing no damage to the land whatever, but in the mean time earning a living and keeping himself out of the poor-house, that surely does not constitute him a criminal and make him liable to prosecution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I shall vote in favor of this bill, but I am a little afraid that the end of it will be inequality in this procedure, but when the State comes to be a State there will be a claim made which will have some natural equity in it, that the farm-houses and buildings and fences and orchards and all the belongings of a well ordered homestead have become so sacred to the occupant that Congress, in admitting the new State, must provide that these school-lands thus occupied under lease shall remain the property of the lessee, and then the State will either be deprived of one of the most beneficent things that we can do for a new State, two sections of land in every township for the perpetual support of common schools or else we shall have to hunt around and make indemnity or find two other unoccupied sections to make it good, as we have in the case of some other States endeavored to make good the loss of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land appropriated to the State, sometimes under very remarkable circumstances.

I think the State of California when admitted had reserved for the use of the schools the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land, and then afterwards she got a very liberal grant of swamp lands for such objects as the State might choose to devote them to, though I have never seen any swamp lands myself in California, although there may be some, but those swamp lands enveloped in some instances the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. Then the State came back to Congress, according to my recollection, and asked Congress to reimburse her for the loss of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections that had been enveloped in her swamp-land grants and I believe she got it, and I rather suspect she got it twice. I hope this will not result in that way, but as to the present measure there seems to be great force in what the Senator from Kansas says.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Vermont need not have any fear upon that point. In the first place, the Territory of Oklahoma will not have any swamp land, and it is not within the purview of the grant for that purpose. In the second place, as Congress would not yield to the blandishments of any of the occupants of school lands in the Territory of Washington and did provide that the school lands should never be sold at less than $10 an acre, thereby not exhibiting any astonishing bowels of compassion towards the occupants of the land, I think Congress may be relied upon to do the wise thing for Oklahoma when the time comes. Under the operations of the grant of lands for school purposes to the State of Kansas, that State provided in its constitution that none of those lands should be sold at less than the appraised price and none at less than $3 an acre, and then it further and wisely provided also the settlement provision and enacted that, where a person had actually made a home upon the land and that was definitely established, that person might become a preferred purchaser at the appraised price of the land.

I speak of that as the administration of the law by a State which was given these lands to do with them as she pleased, and I beg the Senator to observe that if there is any one thing that the Western people have at heart more than another it is education and if there is any one thing they can be relied upon to do better than any other it is to administer a trust in favor of education. I am sure that no question of sympathy will ever dictate an interference with any proper proceeding for the purpose of determining the value of the lands at the time when they came to be sold; and in the mean while Congress has the power to say, as it did in the case of Washington, that these lands shall be sold at a certain minimum price, thereby preserving the school lands of the State for what they are reasonably worth.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand, then, that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands means that he and the committee do not intend that these lands shall be separated from the uses for which they are designed.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is only temporary occupancy and nothing more.

Mr. PLUMB. That is quite correct, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 11 of section 3, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert "and to make such leases as are in this act described;" so as to read:

That until the Legislature of said Territory shall provide by law for the leasing of said university and school lands the governor is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to make the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act and to make such leases as are in this act described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. STEWART it was Ordered, That the petition of Daniel Ruggles be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. PUGH it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the claim of Ira Lampley and heirs of John M. Lampley, no adverse report having ever been made thereon.

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the claim of Laura S. Cowles, no adverse report having ever been made thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1633, being Senate bill 3823.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3823) in amendment of and supplementary to the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, entitled "An act to amend section 5350 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes."

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator to yield that I may make a conference report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will allow the bill to be taken up first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the request of the Senator from Vermont, who asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been stated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] yields temporarily, with the consent of the Senate, that I may make a conference report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. G. CANNON,
W. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the report be accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report does not require any acceptance.

Mr. STEWART. What is the report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the committee are unable to agree.

Mr. DAWES. I will state the result of the conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are the papers, here or in the other House?

Mr. DAWES. The papers are here. The Senate is fully aware of what the difference is between the two Houses, which was submitted to this conference. The conference met, and the conferees on the part of the Senate found those of the other House unwilling to make any concession whatever. The Senate conferees made various propositions in reference to an attempt to agree upon some common ground, somewhat different from the amendments of the Senate, but they were met with the declaration that it was impossible to bring the other branch to an agreement different from the text of the bill as it was sent to the Senate.

We met this singular proposition, that the House conferees were unwilling to agree that the Senate should require its committee clerks and Senators' clerks to be annual clerks, even if they were paid no more than is paid to session clerks. We were met with the assertion that the House was justified in saying that the Senate, without reference to the cost or expenditure, should not say that its clerks should be employed during vacation. There was no proposition as to the amount of compensation beyond that fixed in the House bill that met with any corresponding concession on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator in connection with that, what do they say in all the cases of annual clerkships which have been created on the order of the Senate, and for which appropriations have been made from year to year without any question?

Mr. DAWES. Their answer to that suggestion was that they had gone as far as they were resolved to go; that they would agree to what they had agreed to in the bill that they sent to the Senate, but that they would not at this session make any change, even the change that the Senate might desire to have their clerks annual clerks, at the same compensation that they would have if they remained session clerks.

With that condition of things nothing was left to the conferees on the part of the Senate but to surrender at discretion or to report back to the Senate a further disagreement.

The Senate now has before it the question whether it will recede from its amendments, whether it will permit the House of Representatives to say to it, "You shall not even say yourselves how long your clerks shall serve, without regard to any increase of expenditure, or lose this bill."

Mr. President, I have, myself, no motion to make upon the subject. I should desire, if the Senate wishes a further conference, that the subject may go into new hands.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if, in his judgment, the House conferees will agree to any composition of this difference?

Mr. DAWES. I am bound to believe that they are sincere. There was the utmost good feeling and there was no temper in the conference, and I must say that if they are sincere—and I have no doubt they are—a further conference is hopeless.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts submit any motion?

Mr. DAWES. I do not submit any motion. The case is in charge of the Senate. I feel as if the conferees have maintained the position of the Senate as far as they were able. They will, of course, if this matter should be committed to them again, maintain the will of the Senate, but I express their views when I say that, so far as a further conference is concerned, it seems to me that it will be hopeless.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator—

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to make a motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to make a motion myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator from Missouri is a member of the Committee on Appropriations I will yield to him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to make a motion that the Senate insist upon its disagreement, if that is in order, and I apprehend it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senate insist upon its amendments?

Mr. COCKRELL. Insist upon its amendments with an amendment reducing the amount to $1,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can not do that. You can instruct the conferees.

Mr. COCKRELL. With instructions, then, to the conferees to agree upon $1,500.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will indulge me. I believe I experienced the fact that that was out of order yesterday. That proposition was presented to the conferees on the part of the House, and was met like all the others with the statement on their part that they felt bound by what they believed to be the almost unanimous opinion of the House that they should make no concession whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. But I make this point, that the instruction of the Senate to that effect has not been presented to the House nor considered by the House; and that was what the Committee on Appropriations reported to the Senate, $1,500, and the Senate will remember that the increase to $1,800 was made on motion in the Senate, and not at the instance of the Committee on Appropriations.

I think we ought to present that question fairly, and I therefore make the motion that the Senate insist upon its amendments and instruct its conferees to yield so far as to fix the amount of pay at $1,500 instead of $1,800 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference, with instructions to its conferees to make the amount of compensation $1,500 per annum for the annual clerks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to interfere with the management of this bill in conference as long as the Committee on Appropriations proposes to insist upon these amendments. The other day, when the only question of difference left between the two Houses was as to the compensation of employes of the Senate, it seemed to me the duty of the Senate to recede, but when the committee desired a further conference I yielded at once and supported them. So yesterday, when this subject was debated, especially upon the persuasive argument made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], I felt like standing by the Senate and insisting upon our fixing the rates of pay of our own employes. But still it is a parliamentary rule that no proposition ought to be ingrafted in the law unless it has the free consent of both Houses. It can not be said that either House has a right to force the other to agree to any measure or any proposition that is obnoxious to it.

That is the only basis upon which the two Houses can get along, and therefore it has been the uniform custom since the foundation of the Government when a proposition of an amendment is made in one House and the other House says, "No, we can not agree to that; that changes the law; it is not to carry out the law, and we do not approve of that change of law," that the House making the proposition must recede.

There is no other way in parliamentary proceedings except that. The same thing exists in Parliament every day. It is the understood rule of parliamentary law, and is laid down as a part of the fundamental rules of all parliamentary systems, that no coercion must be brought upon either House to consent to any proposition. There must be a free conference. The very words "free conference" mean that each House must be at liberty to decline any proposition made by the other, and when that proposition is final, after insisting and insisting, as the House proposing may do until it is tired, at the end the House making the proposition must abandon it unless it is agreed to by the other House.

I think we have come to that point here. Here is this legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, involving all the appropriations for the legislative, the executive, and the judicial departments of the Government, covering a great multitude of the employes of the Government. Now, ought that bill to be delayed or postponed merely to enable the Senate to insist upon a claim for these Senate employes that the other House does not accede to, however reasonable it may be? However strong may be the grounds of the claim, it seems to me the time has come when we ought to say to the House of Representatives, "While we insist upon this proposition and maintain that we are right, that we ought to have the right to make reasonable appropriations for the compensation of our employes, yet as that can not be done except by a change of the law and you refuse to grant the change we will recede, meaning to insist upon it hereafter when the opportunity comes."

That, it seems to me, is the dignified way as between the two Houses. I will not interfere with the motion of the Senator from Missouri if he thinks any good can come from it, but I think the dignified and proper way for the Senate is to recede, stating, however, that we shall insist upon these amendments on any proper occasion hereafter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it applies to this bill and quite a number of others. There are quite a number of bills, the regular appropriations, that have not become laws, so that there can be no harm from the delay involved in another effort, and we are not changing any law in this case at all. There is no statute law, as I understand, fixing the number or compensation of the clerks as we have them now. The annual clerks are established by resolution of the Senate, and they are appropriated for by this appropriation bill, and that is all the law there is about it.

It seems to me that when we fix this salary at $1,500 it is a very small sum over and above what the clerks now receive as session clerks, but it makes them annual clerks, so that they will perform service for Senators during the entire year. I think it is so reasonable that the House of Representatives ought certainly to yield to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill ought now to be a law. The new fiscal year begins to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. I apprehend there is no danger from delay in the passage of this bill. I understand a joint resolution has already been passed making the appropriations for the last fiscal year applicable to this until the appropriation bills for this year are passed. There are quite a number of appropriation bills which have not yet become laws, and it is usual, and it has always been usual when an appropriation bill was not passed by the beginning of the fiscal year, that a resolution should be passed continuing the appropriations of the preceding year; and such a resolution as that, I think, has already passed; at least it has passed one body of Congress, if it has not passed both.

Mr. TELLER. It has passed both.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection, if the Senator thinks there is any chance for an agreement, to voting for a further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DOLPH. On that I demand a division of the question.

Mr. DAWES. May I inquire what the motion of the Senator from Missouri is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to state it, that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and instruct the managers on the part of the Senate to agree to a compensation of $1,500 for the annual clerks.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire how that would be "a full and free conference."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is within the power of the Senate to make the order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is "full and free" in every parliamentary sense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] asks for a division.

Mr. DOLPH. A division of the question. I want a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state how he desires it to be divided?

Mr. DOLPH. I desire the vote as to the clerks to be taken separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposed there was no objection to the part asking for a further conference and insisting still further upon the amendments.

Mr. PLATT. I think we had better have a vote on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon agreeing, then, to the motion that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference thereon, Senators in the affirmative will say "ay;" those in the negative, "no." [Putting the question.]

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate be instructed to agree to fix the compensation at $1,500 for the payment of the annual clerks.

Mr. DOLPH. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BERRY. Would it be in order to move that the Senate recede from its amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion would take precedence.

Mr. BERRY. Then I move that the Senate recede, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate recede from its amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order now, for the Senate has voted to insist.

Mr. BERRY. The Chair has ruled that it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had forgotten for the moment that the Senate had already agreed to insist. Therefore a motion to recede is not now in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Arkansas can move to reconsider the vote on insisting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly, the vote can be reconsidered.

Mr. BERRY. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill and asked for a further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate insisted upon its amendments and asked for a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to inquire whether the Senator voted in the affirmative on the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That never has been considered necessary when the yeas and nays were not taken.

Mr. BERRY. I simply wish to state, Mr. President, that I do not think there is a necessity for continuing this contest. I do not think, in the first place, that the Senate has any right to force a measure upon the other House and insist on their agreeing to that which they do not believe to be right in making appropriations for employes.

I do not believe that an appropriation bill is the proper place to legislate as to whether clerks shall be paid $6 a day or $1,800 a year. In addition to that, I believe that $6 a day is sufficient for any clerk to a Senator, and that you can get first-class clerks for that sum who can do all the business that is required by a Senator.

I am opposed to increasing the salary. I am opposed to putting it upon an appropriation bill and trying to force it through in that way, and I see no necessity for further insisting upon that which we can not accomplish. Therefore I have moved to reconsider the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to further insist on its amendments, and to ask for another conference.

Mr. DOLPH. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. I do not see him present, and I withhold my vote unless it shall be necessary to make a quorum by and by.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], but believing and knowing that he would vote "nay" on this question, if present, I record my vote in the negative.

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. PIERCE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], whom I do not see in his seat, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and withhold my vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but the pair does not extend to a question of this character, and I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but I am satisfied he would vote "nay" on this question, if present, and therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. CALL] is absent with the consent of the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—5.
Berry, George,	Hale,	Hawley,	Reagan.
NAYS—47.
Aldrich, Allen, Allison, Bate, Blair, Butler, Cameron, Carlsie, Casey, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt,	Cullom, Davies, Dixon, Dolph, Farwell, Faulkner, Frye, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Higgins,	Hiscock, Ingalls, Jones of Arkansas, McMillan, Manderson, Moody, Morgan, Pasco, Payne, Plumb, Power,	Ransom, Sanders, Sawyer, Sherman, Squire, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Vance, Washburn, Wolcott.
ABSENT—32.
Barbour, Blackburn, Blodgett, Brown, Call, Chandler, Daniel, Davis,	Edmunds, Eustis, Evarts, Harris, Hearst, Hoar, Kenna, McPherson,	Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Pettigrew, Pierce, Platt, Pugh, Quay,	Spooner, Stanford, Turpie, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Iowa, Wilson of Md.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to instruct the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to a portion of the motion, for, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, if adopted, the conference will not be a free and full conference.

There is no necessity for the Senate to offer to trade with the House of Representatives. It will be time enough, when the Senate conferees bring such a proposition back to the Senate, for us to consider it, and then I shall not be in favor of it. The principle involved is the same under which the Senate claims to be allowed to fix the compensation of its employés as that by which the Senate should be allowed to determine what employés it shall have.

In my judgment, a competent stenographer and clerk who can perform such duties as are required of him by a working Senator in this body is entitled to $1,800 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], as stated before.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I should vote "yea" but for my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. DAVES. My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is absent on account of illness. If he were here, I am sure he would vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. HIGGINS (after having voted in the negative). I did not observe when I voted that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] was out of the Chamber. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—23.
Bate, Berry, Blair, Butler, Cockrell, Coke,	Colquitt, Davies, Faulkner, Frye, George, Gibson,	Gorman, Gray, Ingalls, Jones of Arkansas, Moody, Morgan,	Pasco, Payne, Plumb, Reagan, Sawyer.
NAYS—28.
Aldrich, Allen, Allison, Barbour, Cameron, Carlsie, Casey,	Dixon, Dolph, Farwell, Hale, Hampton, Hawley, Hiscock,	Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Pettigrew, Platt, Power, Ransom, Sanders,	Sherman, Squire, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Vance, Washburn.
ABSENT—33.
Blackburn, Blodgett, Brown, Call, Chandler, Cullom, Daniel, Davis, Edmunds,	Eustis, Evarts, Harris, Hearst, Higgins, Hoar, Kenna, McPherson, Manderson,	Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock,k, Pierce, Pugh, Quay, Spooner, Stanford, Turpie,	Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Iowa, Wilson of Md., Wolcott.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the Chair appoint the conferees.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DAVES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

ELECTIONS, ETC., IN UTAH.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill informally laid aside will now be read at length as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3823) in amendment of and supplementary to the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, entitled "An act to amend section 5350 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes."

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the existing election districts and apportionments of representatives concerning the members of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah are hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the governor, Territorial secretary, and the board of commissioners mentioned in section 9 of the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, entitled "An act to amend section 5350 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy and for other purposes," in said Territory, as soon as practicable after the result of the census of said Territory to be taken in the year 1890 shall be made known, to redistrict said Territory, and apportion representatives in the same in such manner as to provide, as nearly as the same may be, for an equal representation of the people, excepting Indians not taxed, being citizens of the United States, according to numbers, in said Legislative Assembly, and to the numbers of members of the council and house of representatives, respectively, as now established by law; and a record of the establishment of such new districts and the apportionment of representation thereto shall be made in the office of the secretary of said Territory, and such establishment and representation shall continue until Congress shall otherwise provide.

SEC. 2. That the offices of Territorial auditor, treasurer, commissioners to locate university lands, probate judges, county clerks, selectmen, assessors, recorders, and superintendent of district schools in the Territory of Utah are hereby vacated; and all such officers shall hereafter be appointed by the governor of said Territory, by and with the advice and consent of the board of commissioners mentioned in section 9 of the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, entitled

"An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes;" Provided, That where any officer above named shall now hold his office by virtue of appointment or commission from the President of the United States for a definite term the provisions of this section shall not apply until the expiration of said term.

SEC. 3. That the board of commissioners mentioned in section 9 of the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," is hereby authorized and empowered in its discretion to cause the new registrations of voters in said Territory of Utah, or any part thereof, to be made instead of revisions of previous lists, as now required by the laws of said Territory; and said board is also hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States for the conduct of registrations and elections in said Territory.

Mr. PLUMB. There is an understanding between the Senator from Vermont and myself, and, on account of that, I now ask that the report of the committee of conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend from Kansas is entitled, according to the course of the Senate, and at this time of the year, to finish that conference report if he may, and, therefore, I yield to him for that purpose.

Before this passes away, however, I wish to say that as against all other things, except the Idaho matter which is up, I shall feel it to be a duty on all proper occasions to ask the Senate to take up and dispose of this bill. It ought only to take a little while, but I feel it a duty to give way now. The Idaho matter will come up, I suppose, as soon as this conference report is disposed of, and it is hardly worth while to go on to-day with the bill which was taken up on my motion. It, therefore, may go back to the Calendar.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3711) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

The Secretary will report the amendment under discussion when the conference report was last under consideration.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4. That any street railroad company operating its lines in the District of Columbia which during the calendar year 1889 earned, declared, and paid dividends on its capital stock exceeding 10 per cent. upon the face thereof, shall hereafter sell to all persons eight tickets for and at the price of 25 cents, each ticket to be good for one continuous passage over its entire line and to entitle the holder thereof to passage on any line within the scope of this section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think it a duty briefly to recur, in discussing this section, to the point of order that I made yesterday, which the Chair overruled, and from which decision I did not appeal, as I always have a very large respect for the opinion of the present occupant of the chair upon such matters. I felt that the Chair was in error, but, as it was not a matter of any great consequence then, I took no appeal, and would have had no opportunity then to recur to the history of these matters. But, lest this should be drawn into precedent, I think it right say a few words.

I feel some confidence in affirming that for now the period of three hundred years it has been a part of parliamentary law that the conferees appointed by either house anywhere where there are two parliamentary bodies have no jurisdiction to deal with any matter that the two houses have not submitted to them—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair agrees fully with the Senator upon that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that, having no jurisdiction, it is a part of parliamentary order and law that when the attention of the body is brought to it the occupant of the chair should enforce that parliamentary law accordingly.

I think the reason of that is perfectly obvious, for otherwise any two committees of conference of the two Houses, at the end of a session, by an arrangement among their friends, could put on to any pending bill any measure that they thought fit, it not having been introduced in either House, not having been considered, not having been read, as the rules of both Houses require, and they always do, where there are two houses, the first, the second, and the third time, not having been reported by a committee, but sprung upon their respective bodies of a sudden and put through into a law without any of the safeguards and checks which the laws of parliamentary bodies and their rules require to avoid hasty and unconsidered legislation.

I take it to be clear that if a committee of this body should report upon a subject not confided to it and entirely out of its jurisdiction, the point being raised, it would be the duty of the Chair to say that the report could not be received, just as it is when a member of a committee undertakes to make a report on a matter that has been referred to a committee, but that the committee has not authorized him to report upon, the point being made, the law of the body is to be enforced. It is not a matter of legislative discretion, but it is what is the law, and the law must be enforced by the presiding officer, subject, of course, to the judgment of the body upon an appeal.

This became the common law of parliamentary bodies by an order of the House of Commons after they apparently had been led, or attempted to be led, into something done by their conferees with the House of Lords that they had not confided to conference. So in the year 1580 the Commons made the following standing order:

It is ordered that such persons as shall be appointed by this house at any time to have conference with the lords shall and may use any reasons or persuasions they shall think good in their discretions—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I read from Cushing's Manual.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What page?

Mr. EDMUNDS. In this edition, page 389, section 844:

so as it tends to the maintenance of anything done or passed this house before such conference had, and not otherwise; but that any such person shall not in anywise yield or assent to [at] any such conferences to any new thing there propounded until this house be first made privy thereof and give such order.

I was under the impression yesterday that the matter had arisen in the Senate, but I could not recall a particular incident.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I do not interrupt the Senator—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not in the least.

Mr. SHERMAN. I remember a case very well where the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe], chairman of a conference committee, agreed to some matter in a report of the committee of conference which had not been discussed in either House. It was discussed here at considerable length and finally by a very decisive vote—I do not know whether any point of order was made; probably it was submitted by the Chair to the Senate—but by a very decided majority, almost unanimous, much to the injuring of the feelings of Judge Howe, whom everybody respected, it was held to be out of order and was excluded from consideration, and I think by common consent the matter was recommended to the committee and dropped out. It was not a matter of very great importance, but it was something that had never been proposed in either House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think besides there was still later an instance, within a few years, where the point of order being made it was submitted to and the report immediately withdrawn; but I do not remember the instance.

I have found one, however, Mr. President, a notable instance on a notable occasion where the point of order was made by my colleague [Mr. MORRILL] on the salary-grab bill, as it was called, and the then Vice-President was Mr. Colfax. He overruled the point of order, not upon the ground that it was a question for the discretion of the Senate, but on the amendment proposed, to which my colleague had made the objection as out of order on the ground that it was not pending between the two Houses, Mr. Vice-President Colfax, who we all know was a distinguished parliamentarian, held that that question was one of the very questions which were pending between the two Houses. I will read, if I do not take up too much time, this very point from the proceedings of the 3d of March, 1873, where, as I say, it was on the bill increasing the salaries of Members and Senators, and where in an earlier stage of the proceedings, I think it was, I had the honor myself to occupy the chair for a few moments.

It was moved to instruct the Senate conferees to recede from their amendment raising the salaries, and the then occupant of the chair, myself, held that motion to be in order. A point of order having been made against it, an appeal was taken to the Senate and the Senate, by almost exactly the same majority that it was in favor of increasing the salaries, reversed the decision of the Chair, and particularly on a very powerful argument made by the then Senator from Illinois, Mr. Trumbull. The matter was afterward examined and it was found that a few sessions before Mr. Trumbull himself, then a Senator, had made exactly such a motion to instruct conferees, and a point of order was made that the conferees could not be instructed, and the Senate by a perfectly decisive vote sustained the ruling of the Chair that it was in order to instruct conferees. I believe the only instance in which it has been held in this body that it was not in order to instruct conferees was when the pending question was the increase of our own salaries.

Now I come to this point. The report of the conferees on the salary bill being presented, Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, rose to a point of order—

That the committee of conference have transcended any matter that was committed to their jurisdiction in this: that whereas the House had fixed the salaries of members of Congress at $6,500, the Senate rejected the proposition almost unanimously, but two voting against its rejection; that there was no matter of difference between the two Houses except the difference between the present salary and $6,500. I, therefore, make the point of order that they have transcended their jurisdiction, and that the report should be rejected.

Mr. Carpenter, who made the report, rose and said:

The Senator from Vermont in stating the facts of this case overlooked one very important fact, and that is, that the Senate voted down the proposition to concur upon the ground as expressed by at least half a dozen Senators who spoke on the subject, that the sum fixed by the House was too small. I rose in my place and inquired of the Chair whether, if the matter was sent to a committee of conference, the committee would have power to raise as well as decrease the sum, and I was informed that undoubtedly such power existed. That took place in open Senate while we were discussing the question of concurring in the amendment of the House.

Thus it will be seen that Mr. Carpenter, who himself had been or was afterwards the President of the Senate and a very accomplished parliamentarian, made no suggestion that it was not a proper point of order to make if the fact would warrant it. He contended that the case was the very thing that was open, and that therefore the point of order was not good for that reason, but suggested no other. Then the Vice-President said:

The Chair overrules the point of order. The House of Representatives sent to the Senate an amendment to this bill changing salaries in various ways. The Senate refused to concur. They also refused to strike out the provision in regard to the salaries of members of Congress. They refused to strike out all of the amendment except that portion relating to the salary of the President. They therefore left the salary question an open question and referred it to the conference committee. It may be a good argument against voting for the conference report that the salaries are not in accordance with what the Senator from Vermont thinks they should be; but to restrict the conference committee in a free conference to the differences between the present salary and the salary fixed by the House of Representatives under their amendment, the Chair thinks, would be limiting the conference more than conference committees have ever been. Therefore the Chair decides that the report is not subject to the objection and the point of order made by the Senator from Vermont.

I read this to show that, there then being a great deal of feeling and a great strife over the question and every point that could be considered presented to get rid of this increase on one side and to hold it on the other, two very distinguished parliamentarians, one the President of the Senate and the other Mr. Carpenter, in opposing this point of order, made no hint or suggestion that it was a matter to be voted upon if the point of order was well founded in point of fact, and the Vice-President in ruling upon it holds that the reason why the point of order is not good is that the matter was within the jurisdiction of the conferees.

I respectfully submit to the Chair and to the Senate that I should hope the ruling of the Chair yesterday would not be taken into a precedent without further consideration, for I am persuaded that the only safety of legislation and the only way to get on correctly under parliamentary law is that when any committee, be it a conference or other committee, transcends its power and the point of order is made in time it is a matter that the law of the Senate deals with, and the Presiding Officer is in the first instance the administrator of the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Although this question is not directly in controversy, the Chair takes occasion to say that he distrusts his own judgment when he differs with the Senator from Vermont; but the Chair retains his opinion expressed yesterday that the amendment proposed by the committee of conference is not subject to a point of order in the Senate.

A committee of conference is the joint organ of the two Houses. The difficulty will be apparent when the suggestion is made of what might occur if the point of order should be raised in each House and ruled differently in each. We should then be subjected to the embarrassment and practical difficulty of having an amendment held to be in order in one House and out of order in the other.

The Chair still retains the opinion that the law as stated by the Senator from Vermont is entirely correct. The Chair also agrees with the Senator from Vermont in believing that the committee of conference have transcended their just powers in reporting this amendment; but the Chair believes that the only remedy is for the Senate either to reject or to agree to the report of the committee of conference.

The question recurs upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas who has charge of this bill his construction of the last line of the fourth section. It provides:

Shall hereafter sell to all persons eight tickets for and at the price of 25 cents, each ticket to be good for one continuous passage over its entire line—

It is this clause that I desire to call the Senator's special attention to—and to entitle the holder thereof to passage on any line within the scope of this section.

As I construe that—and I do not think there can be a difference of construction—the allusion to “any line within the scope of this section” means any line of railroad that is paying a dividend or has paid a dividend of 10 per cent. upon the face value of its capital stock. If so, and you purchase, for example, eight tickets for a quarter upon one line and then desire to be transferred to another line which has no connection in its corporate franchise with the one on which you bought the tickets, you would have the power under this section to be transported free by that line regardless of the fact that you pay no compensation whatever for your transportation on the second line.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is the clear construction, as I think, of the section as it stands.

Mr. PLUMB. That would simply entitle the holder of tickets to the passage on one line or on the other; that is to say, the ticket would be good on the line of any other railroad coming within the scope of the section, that is to say, having declared these dividends. In other words, a ticket purchased of the Metropolitan line, for instance, supposing that to have paid these dividends, would be good for passage on the Washington and Georgetown line, supposing it also to have paid these dividends.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose it had not paid the dividends, would it still be good on that line?

Mr. PLUMB. No, it would not.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then my construction is correct, that if you bought the eight tickets on the Metropolitan line or the Washington and Georgetown line, which also paid a dividend of 10 per cent., you would have a right of transfer from the Metropolitan to the Georgetown line without any payment of transportation to the Georgetown line.

Mr. PLUMB. There is no question of transfer involved; but a person being on the Metropolitan line with a ticket of the Washington and Georgetown line in his pocket, purchased eight for a quarter, would have a right to discharge his obligation to the company by giving one of those tickets to the Metropolitan line. There is no question of transfer involved. It can not be, because, as the Senator will see, there are no apt words there referring to the question of transfer from one line to another.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then what provision does the Senator make for a settlement between the Metropolitan and the Georgetown lines in reference to these tickets?

Mr. PLUMB. That is a question they will have to settle for themselves as to the tickets they have outstanding. They will have to make that arrangement for themselves just as they do now. A ticket on any one of the railroad lines is good by arrangement or under law on all the other lines. My impression is that there is a statute requiring it.

Mr. FAULKNER. But I will state to the Senator from Kansas that at present all of these lines sell tickets at the same price. Now, if we make one sell eight tickets for a quarter and allow the others to sell six tickets for a quarter, how are they going to settle between themselves?

Mr. PLUMB. There will be nothing of that kind, Mr. President. The ticket which is good for traveling upon a line which has made this dividend is not good upon any other line which has not made the dividend; but where there are two companies or more which have made this dividend and are consequently within the scope of this section, the tickets of one shall be good upon the other, not for transfer, but for passage initiated and concluded upon that line.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then, as I understand the Senator from Kansas, he proposes to change the whole present system of the use of tickets between the different lines and the Herdick line, and limit the tickets bought to lines that pay the 10 per cent. dividend, to those particular lines, and not to be used upon any other line.

Mr. PLUMB. This only applies to the lines that pay that dividend. I understand there is now an arrangement for the transfer of tickets. I had the impression until recently that it was the result of law. My impression is that a bill to that effect passed the Senate some years ago, but it did not finally become a law. However, by an arrangement between the companies, a ticket now bought on one line is good on all the other lines, and they themselves in the management of their own financial affairs agree upon the question of the redemption of tickets. In other words, it amounts merely to the exchange of tickets. That is what it amounts to practically. In other words, it is some sort of a clearing-house, whereby the tickets taken in by the Metropolitan line, or the Belt line, or by any of these other lines are exchanged for the tickets of the other lines which the Washington and Georgetown takes, and so on.

That is an arrangement which exists now by volunteer agreement of the companies and is not interfered with by this provision at all.

But there is a compulsory requirement in this provision that if there are two companies here of the same class, having made these dividends, the tickets of one shall be good upon the roads of the other for, of course, a passage begun, initiated, and concluded upon that line.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the language of the provision, and I am satisfied that, as good a lawyer as he is, there can not be a difference of opinion between us. The section provides:

Each ticket to be good for one continuous passage over its entire line—

You do not use the disjunctive, but you use then the conjunctive—and to entitle the holder thereof to passage on any line within the scope of this section.

What, then, is to prevent a proper construction of this act to mean, using the conjunctive instead of the disjunctive, that if you get upon a line which has paid 10 per cent. dividend upon the face value of its stock, and surrender your ticket there, and come then to a line not under the authority, or direction, or control of that main corporation, but another one that has paid also 10 per cent. dividend upon its stock, you shall then entitle the holder of that particular ticket to a passage upon that line, because it is clearly within the scope of this section? By not using the word in the disjunctive, I think clearly it would give that authority, and, if so, it would be a great injustice to any railroad, I do not care what its dividend is, because every road has a right to a fair compensation.

With that view of it, I shall vote against agreeing to the fourth section of this conference report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it is now apparent on all hands that this subject was never considered in either House; that it involves the reduction of the entire gross income of every company which it affects to the amount of one-quarter or more, and that one-quarter is more than all the dividends paid by that company and all the interest on its bonded debt, because now the expense of all these companies is more than four-fifths of the entire receipts, and the reduction made by this bill to any company to which it applies will be more than the entire amount it is now able to pay to its stockholders, even if it pays 10 per cent., and more than all the interest it pays on its bonded debt, as I showed yesterday. This amendment has not been fully considered, and is made at a time when these railroads are expected to go on and substitute for their very inferior accommodations now the best accommodations possible, and it will practically disable them from doing it, if not entirely bankrupt them. This matter has never been considered in either House where these parties could be heard or before any committee of either House. It appears now that there is a difference of construction as to the meaning of the language used in the report.

I hope that my friend from Kansas will allow the matter at once to go to the committee just upon a formal disagreement, and I will then, when the proper time comes—I can not do it now—move to instruct our conferees to request that the fourth section be dropped from the bill, which has no relation whatever to the third. The third section, I think, is pretty severe upon the companies. I do not know whether they can comply with it; but as that is the judgment of the committee, and as that matter was referred to the committee, I have no objection to what they think is right. As to this fourth section, it ought to be stricken out.

I move, therefore, that the Senate disagree to the report of the committee of conference, with a view to making the subsequent motion I have indicated.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, this appropriation bill, making provision for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, came here at a very extraordinary time, on the 9th day of January last. It came evidently without very much consideration; at all events it was so imperfect that it required the undivided attention of the subcommittee who had charge of it (and I am not a member of that subcommittee, and therefore I speak with some freedom) up to the 22d day of April before it was passed by the Senate. The bill was passed by the Senate on the 22d day of April. It was practically making a new bill. It was more difficult than framing a new bill. It resulted in one hundred and sixty-five amendments to the bill, which were adopted in the Senate. Since then it has been in consideration elsewhere and in conference.

Yet it is complained, I will say to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], that we are asking too much when we want a sufficient number of officials here to examine all these matters coming to us as they do in this improper way. But there was an object, so stated in the public press, of setting an example to show what could be done in a body that ought to be legislative, by rushing these great appropriation bills through. The result is this most imperfect measure. Attached to the bill was an amendment referring to the street-railway companies of the District of Columbia, an amendment which was not reported by the Committee on Appropriations. That legislation was not recommended by the committee.

There it is. It was found imperfect and impossible to agree to it by the conferees on the part of the Senate and House without the additions which we find in the conference report now before the Senate.

It is just possible, Mr. President, that the fourth section as reported from the conference committee may be a little harsh, but the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who has given District affairs great attention so far as the appropriations are concerned, stated the case yesterday, I think, fully and amply. So if there happens to be by the amendment some injustice to one corporation, for I think it only applies to one, that can be corrected at the next session. It is not so material.

As has been suggested, that company is amply able to bear this tax for the time being. Its dividends last year were $100,000 on $500,000 of capital. It is the most valuable line probably in the city, and escapes, as the legislation has gone, the 4 per cent. tax upon its gross receipts which we now apply to all the other street-railroad corporations in the city.

I, therefore, for one, hope that there will be no disagreement to this report, that it will be adopted and let the act go into operation, and then for the first time we shall have the company which has a charter granted many years ago with extraordinary privileges, with an immense revenue, come to Congress and come to the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses and present a full and fair statement of their affairs. If it is then found that an injustice is done them I shall be very glad to remedy it. I do not believe that there is, but it will be the first time in the history of legislation since that company was incorporated that we shall have an opportunity to get exactly at the status of that company. I therefore hope that the report will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to have the question taken on agreeing or disagreeing to the report?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care which.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then recurs upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes have it.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 28; as follows:

* YEAS—20.

Allen,	Casey,	George,	Moody,
Allison,	Cockrell,	Gibson,	Payne,
Bate,	Coke,	Gorman,	Plumb,
Berry,	Dawes,	Hale,	Ransom,
Butler,	Frye,	Hampton,	Stewart.

NAYS—28.

Barbour,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Blair,	Farwell,	McMillan,	Squire,
Cameron,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Stockbridge,
Carlisle,	Hawley,	Platt,	Teller,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Power,	Vance,
Dixon,	Hiscock,	Reagan,	Washburn,
Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,	Wolcott.

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Eustis,	Manderson,	Sanders,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Blodgett,	Gray,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Brown,	Harris,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Call,	Hearst,	Paddock,	Veale,

Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pierce,	Walthall,
Daniel,	Keena,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Davis,	McPherson,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.

So the Senate refused to agree to the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the matter be again referred to a new committee of conference with instructions to our conferees to request the House conferees to agree to strike out what is called the fourth section.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose that ought to follow the appointment of the conferees. I move that the Senate ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate request a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. To that I wish to add instructions to our conferees to request that the fourth section be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he allow this conference to go untrammelled. I think the vote of the Senate is a disagreement practically to the fourth section.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection, and I withdraw the motion.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

DEFICIENCY IN PAY OF MEMBERS.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report by title the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4562) to provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, if there be no objection, it being now one minute to 2 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] yields to me that I may procure action on a bill that will only take a moment. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report without amendment the bill (H. R. 11223) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for compensation of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HALE. It is a little deficiency in reference to the mileage of certain members of the other House, and there is a month's pay due one of them, owing to the election of a new member in the State of Kentucky. This is to square the accounts for the fiscal year which has just expired.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know whether any other deficiency bill has recently come to the Senate, the general deficiency bill providing for the deficiencies for the fiscal year just ended.

Mr. HALE. Not within a few days. We have had, as the Senator knows, several during the session.

Mr. COCKRELL. Urgent deficiencies?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. But there has been no general deficiency bill?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; that will come later, of course.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Senator any assurance that such a bill will come to us?

Mr. HALE. I have not any doubt that it will come.

Mr. COCKRELL. For if we have no assurance that such a bill will come to us from some other source, I am in favor of placing the provisions for such deficiencies upon some other bill, because there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars due to former officers, who are now out of office by the change of administration, and the money is justly due them and ought to be paid.

Mr. HALE. There is no doubt that a general deficiency bill will come. The House committee is engaged at work on it now. It will be here in the course of a week or so.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply wanted to know, because it is a matter of justice and right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the message from the House of Representatives on the agricultural appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10716) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1891, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

ADMISSION OF IDAHO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4562) to provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill for the admission of Idaho into the Union as one of the States thereof for the following reasons:

It does not seem that the preliminary proceedings of that Territory, the calling of its convention and the submission of the work of that convention to the vote of the people, was had by any legal or proper authority.

In the next place, it does not appear from the statistics that that Territory has at the present time population sufficient to entitle it to one Representative in the other House.

In the next place, it does not appear that the constitution which has been formed there and under which they propose to come into the Union is in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in that it prescribes and disfranchises men for their religious opinions.

In the next place, the apportionment of its legislative districts is so notoriously unfair and one-sided that it ought not to receive the sanction of fair and honest men in the Senate of the United States.

As I am informed, sir, the people of the Territory of Idaho did not proceed in any manner prescribed by the laws of the United States for the admission of States into the Union, but that the governor of that Territory, an appointee of the President of the United States, of his own motion called a convention for the purpose of framing a constitution and asking admission into the Union; that in response to that call, in which he also apportioned the election of the delegates among the inhabitants of the State, so-called elections for delegates were had, and those delegates voluntarily came together in accordance with this voluntary and so-called and unauthorized election and framed a constitution which they submitted to the people for ratification in the same way.

I believe, sir, that in all cases heretofore of the admission of new States into this Union there has either been an enabling act or the initiatory movements have been inaugurated by the legislative authority of the Territory. But here it was nothing but the invitation of the governor, acted upon in response by a series of what might be called mass-meetings over the Territories. For that reason I think it is due to the dignity of this body and to the legal and orderly course of our proceeding in reference to the great privilege of admitting new States into this commonwealth of the States, this great confederated nation of States, that there should have been at least the sanction of the authorities of the Territory itself, if no more, before these proceedings should receive our sanction.

These objections were commented upon by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in a very forcible speech delivered to us the other day. I say also that there is lacking the proper and necessary evidence to convince us that this is the bona fide work of the people of the Territory of Idaho. In the next place, I contend that the constitution which has been formed there, which has been submitted to us for our approval, is not in conformity with the Constitution of the United States.

But before I dwell upon that I want to mention the second objection in the order which I announced my objections to this bill, that there is not the necessary population to entitle the people of that Territory to admission into the Union on a footing of equality with the other States.

The highest estimate I believe made by anybody connected with the Territory, or having authority over the people of the Territory, or having the means of knowing is that made by Governor Shoup, of 113,000 people. If you will take the vote of the people of that Territory in 1880 and make the usual calculation of the number of non-voters that attend every voter, according to the ratio of increase which the vote from year to year discloses, that estimate of 113,000 must be very greatly in excess of the truth.

But even suppose that there were 100,000 people entitled to be counted as inhabitants in order to make up the number to entitle them to admission into the Union, then they have but little over two-thirds of the total amount according to the census upon which our present representation in Congress is based. If you consider what is the actual population of the United States at this time and what the actual ratio of representation is under our increased population, it will then be but little over one-half of the ratio of representation.

But in that population of 113,000, estimated at the highest figure, it must be remembered that there are 25,000 Mormons or persons in affinity with the Mormon Church who are disfranchised entirely by this constitution, and that there are 7,000 transient Chinese who are not citizens in any sense of the word, and therefore not entitled to be considered in estimating the ratio of population. That would leave 81,000, I believe, which is about half the present population which is required to entitle it to a Representative in the other House.

As a matter of course, I suppose it will not be contended that these disfranchised men are to be counted in order to swell the number and to give a Representative in Congress when they are not counted for any other purpose whatsoever. The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution provides for that by requiring that wherever male citizens are disfranchised or in any way prevented from exercising the right of suffrage the representation of that State shall be reduced in proportion, and under that provision of our Constitution I presume that it will not be contended by any fair men that we must count the disfranchised men in order to give us the requisite number, and then stand them aside and not allow them to vote or do anything else except to have the privilege of paying taxes.

Now, Mr. President, to the other objection. The Constitution of the United States forbids the establishing of any religious test for the holding of office in the United States:

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

The very first amendment which was added to the original Constitution, Article I of amendments, says:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

Under that we claim the very broadest privileges for the liberty of conscience I admit, and all men admit or should admit that when a man's religious opinion or any other kind of opinions or beliefs breaks forth into action and that action violates the law of the country or becomes in any sense a crime as defined by the laws of the country, then the guaranty provided by this Constitution does not apply. No man must violate the law under pretense of religious liberty, but for mere opinion the very broadest immunity is claimed.

For mere opinion's sake, sir, it matters not what that opinion may be; it may be the opinion of an infidel, it may be the opinion of a deist, it may be the opinion of a Buddhist, it may be the opinion of any character of religionist of which we have any knowledge, so long as those opinions do not break forth into action in violation of any law of the land, we claim that under the Constitution of our country he has a right to maintain them, and it is despotism and tyranny to disfranchise him on account of them.

Now, this constitution of the proposed State of Idaho which is submitted to us provides in section 3, Article VI, that any man who belongs to any organization, meaning the Mormon Church, who gives any aid or encouragement or in any manner aids or encourages any other person to enter into a state of bigamy or justifies such person who enters into such a state, shall be forever debarred from holding office, sitting upon juries, or from voting for any officer in the proposed State of Idaho. Perhaps I had better read the exact language, so that there may be no mistake about it:

SEC. 3. No person is permitted to vote, serve as a juror, or hold any civil office who is under guardianship, idiotic, or insane, or who has at any place been convicted of treason, felony, embezzlement of the public funds, bartering or selling or offering to barter or sell his vote, or purchasing or offering to purchase the vote of another, or other infamous crime, and who has not been restored to the rights of citizenship, or who, at the time of such election, is confined in prison on conviction of a criminal offense, or who is a bigamist or polygamist, or is living in what is known as patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage—or in violation of any law of this State or of the United States forbidding any such crime, or who, in any manner, teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law, or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of this State prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the State; nor shall Chinese or persons of Mongolian descent, not born in the United States, nor Indians not taxed who have not severed their tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilization, either vote, serve as jurors, or hold any civil office.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator, rather interrogatively than otherwise, to the fact that the clause in the constitution and the amendment of the constitution which he has read apply only to Federal and not to State action. In other words, they are prohibitions upon laws to be enacted by Congress.

It has never been held, as far as I know, that a State may not enact religious tests; and we have the fact that the State of New Hampshire for many years (I do not know when it was changed, but it has been changed, I understand, recently) excluded Catholics from holding office in that State. It has always been held, as I understand, that it was within the sovereignty of the States, however unjust it might be in our opinion, to prescribe religious tests and to have religious establishments, if they desired to do so.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. VANCE. I will hear what the Senator from New Hampshire has to say, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. As allusion has been made to the State of New Hampshire, I will say that the constitution was changed in that regard in 1878, but for many years, I do not know for how long, it had been a dead letter and Catholics had held office. Certainly I sat in the Legislature of New Hampshire with an Irishman and a Catholic side by side in the same seat, and a Democrat, too, as far back as 1866. So the constitution had in that regard been unobserved for a great many years previous to its amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not understand me as raising an objection to any provision in the constitution of New Hampshire. I was simply stating, in illustration of my position to the Senator from North Carolina, that the principle of American constitutional law has been so thoroughly established in this country that up to within a very short period, 1878, as the Senator says, it was part of the constitution of New Hampshire that no Catholic should hold office.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I was quite aware of that. It has not been more than fifty-five years since that provision stood in the constitution of my own State. It was stricken out in the convention which we held in that State in 1835. I did not mean to say that the Constitution of the United States, as I understand it, prohibited a State from making these religious tests for its own officers, if that is what the Senator means.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I mean.

Mr. VANCE. But I say that a State coming in which seeks to do that and does do that is not forming a constitution that is in conformity with the Constitution of the United States; not that it is in violation of the Constitution, but it is not in conformity with its spirit, and it is not in conformity with the great principle which we all profess, whether with reference to our national action or to our State action.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me again?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. My understanding of the position which the party to which I belong and to which the Senator from North Carolina belongs has always been this: That Congress had no right to prescribe any conditions in the constitution of a State applying for admission into the Union except that its constitution be republican in form.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator from Mississippi will notice, if he paid attention to the reading of this clause of the constitution of Idaho, or if, mayhap, he has read it himself, that for nearly every one of the crimes which are mentioned in this section as disqualifying from the right of suffrage a trial and conviction precedent to the disfranchisement is required, except in this instance:

No person is permitted to vote * * * who has at any place been convicted of treason, felony, embezzlement of the public funds, bartering or selling or offering * * * to sell his vote, etc.

The whole catalogue of crimes which will disfranchise a citizen are required to have been established by conviction before the punishment of the disfranchisement follows; but in this instance the mere belonging to the Mormon Church, although the citizen may not himself practice bigamy, although he may not believe in the doctrine of bigamy or that it is justified by the Bible, although he may have only one wife, or no wife, as the case may be, and in every other respect conducts himself as a good citizen, yet if he belongs to this church, which is said to teach that the doctrine of plural marriage is derivable from the Bible, if he belongs to that church, without a judge or jury, ipso facto, he is disfranchised and rendered forever incapable of holding office, or of voting, or of sitting upon a jury. That is the principle which I protest against.

It is not necessary, sir, for me to remind Senators of the great value of the principle that there must be a trial and conviction before punishment; that from the days of Magna Charta down the great cry everywhere of liberty has been that men should not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. We see here these pious men in the mountains of Idaho who can not look upon sin with any degree of allowance, who undertake to prescribe that because a man belongs to the Mormon Church, no odds what his conduct may be, no odds what his opinions may be, if he drops a nickel in the slot after preaching or gives any kind of aid, contribution, encouragement, or support to that church he is to be forever disfranchised, and can neither hold an office, nor sit upon a jury, nor vote for any position from the greatest to the least in that godly land which they are establishing out there.

Just think of it, Mr. President. If alive to-day Moses, the great law-giver in Israel, could not be the mayor of a cross-roads town. The patriarchs could not sit in his town council and assist him to promulgate an ordinance for winding up the town clock and for keeping hogs off the street. King Solomon in all his glory could not issue a warrant for 50 cents, and King David, the man after God's own heart, could not serve the warrant. The rabbis of the temple could not sit upon the jury to try that case. The prophets of God could not be overseers of the highway along which they tramped with sandaled feet to deliver divine messages to sinful cities.

All of this out there in the wild woods of Idaho, where they would exclude all those men whom we have been taught to regard as our exemplars! The deist, who denies the divinity of the Son of God, and the infidel, who denies God Himself, may both sit in the seats of judgment and in the high places of that delectable Israel! There never has been anything like the concern they are making out there by establishing this godly oasis of righteousness, surrounded by the wild waste of a wicked world. At the same time that they are establishing such a standard of righteousness that human flesh can not hope to attain to it, and mocking God by these hypocritical ordinances and provisions with one hand, as a matter of course with the other hand they are stealing the rights of their fellow-citizens, and the apportionment of that Legislature is a fitting commentary upon this pretended godliness!

Let me read the vote of that Territory for Delegate in 1888. It stood as follows: For the Republican candidate, 8,151; for the Democratic and Independent candidates, 7,862; giving a Republican majority of 289. And, yet, Mr. President, if you will look at the constitution which I have here before me, the apportionment for the coming Legislature as soon as we shall admit them, and which is to send two Senators here, is as follows: In the senate, 15 Republicans and 3 Democrats; in the house, 31 Republicans and 5 Democrats; total Republican vote 46 on joint ballot; total Democratic vote on joint ballot 8.

That is just what you might have expected from men who were too good to live [laughter], from men who were too pious to endure Moses and the prophets for any possible moment of time.

The Mormons are Democrats, nearly every one of them, and vote the Democratic ticket, and therefore they disfranchise a portion of their Democratic enemies in the name of God, and they steal the honest representation of the others in the name of the Republican party! [Laughter.] That is the feast to which we are invited!

Let us see how it will operate. There is a little county in that Territory called Bear Lake. It has a population of 5,900 souls. Every man, woman, and child in that county belongs to the Mormon Church except one hundred and fifty, who, according to the disclosures made before the committee of the House, consist of about eighty men and their families, employed on the railroads that run through this county of Bear Lake. Every one of the Mormons under this constitution is disfranchised. They own every dollar's worth of property in the county. They went there, according to the testimony of Governor Stevenson and of the United States officials who have been out there, at an altitude of more than 6,000 feet among the snows and the glaciers of those great mountains, and by the most unwearied and toilsome and unremitting industry they have irrigated the mountain sides and made it a land of verdure and prosperity. They built churches and houses, handsome houses, many of them ornamental houses, all over the land, and every dollar's worth of property and every foot of land, every single solitary particle of culture and progress and prosperity and thrift in that county is due to the men who belong to the Mormon Church, except these eighty men and their families who are employed upon the railroad.

Now the county election comes off for sheriff, county commissioners, treasurer, and all the other officers of the county, and members of the Legislature. These 80 men furnish all of the candidates because nobody else can hold office; these 80 men furnish all the votes because nobody else can vote; these 80 men sit on all the juries when court comes around because nobody else can sit on them, and there are 5,750 people, more than 1,000 voters, owning all the property, who are subjected to the government, whatever that may be, of these 80 men who are there temporarily engaged as laborers upon a railroad.

They spend all the money, they levy all the taxes, hold all the offices, and these other men can not help themselves; and Senators of the United States sit here and say that is right, and that these people who display such wonderful powers of justice and of government must come in upon equal terms and help us govern the country!

Mr. President, when I was a child, so small that in the country churches to which I was taken by my parents my heels would not reach the floor when I sat upon the bench, I heard the venerable men of God in that mountain country in every sermon and in every prayer thank God that they lived in a land of open Bibles and of civil and religious liberty, and they would talk until the tears would run down the cheeks of the old men who listened to them about the old times of persecution when the fires of martyrs were lighted and when men could not worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. And then they would recount the thrilling story and tell about what our forefathers did and endured, and how they established a great Government, through their blood and wisdom at the close of the Revolution, in which every man was allowed to worship God in the manner most pleasant to his own conscience.

What would one of those men say now if he could go to Idaho and go to the county of Bear Lake and see the men who had built the churches, who had built the highways, who had irrigated the mountain sides, and who had covered the land with verdure, and are industrious and frugal and honest, as everybody testifies, turned away from the polls and refused permission to vote by a bumper so full of whisky that one could see the head standing in his eyes and hear it slosh in him as he trotted up and down, and hear that theologian discourse upon the doctrines of the Mormon Church and say, "Sir, you are unfit to vote because you believe the Bible teaches that a man may have more wives than one at the same time," and perhaps that same fellow who turns him off from the polls and reminds him of the degradation which the constitution of his State imposes upon him by the aid and by the help of the great Senate of the United States—perhaps that same fellow may have married in the course of his life forty wives, one after the other, just as fast as he could divorce them according to the most approved Chicago methods.

Now, why will you do this? Why will you not remand this constitution to the people of Idaho and say "Wipe out these proscriptive features; give every man a chance notwithstanding his religious opinions provided his conduct is good, and if there is any crime for the commission of which a man ought to be disfranchised provide first for his trial and conviction; give the man who happens to belong to the Mormon Church and whose crime is only that, the same rights and the same consideration that you do the red-handed murderer or the midnight burglar, the swindler, or thief, or any other violator of the law." Let them provide that when you are convicted of this thing, when you are convicted after trial of the heinous offense of simply belonging to the Mormon Church, then we will keep you from voting. But in the name of all that is just and honest, and in the name of everything that is free, of everything that is of good report according to our Anglo-American traditions, do not without a trial and without a jury consign this large portion of the American people to the ignominy and degradation which follows absolute disfranchisement.

What is the hurry about admitting Idaho? What interest is there that is suffering if she should wait until she could learn some toleration and form a constitution that would furnish freedom to her people? What would go to pieces and be destroyed if this Congress should pass an enabling act directing the people of that Territory to go along the beaten path in the usual way?

There is nothing, Mr. President, that I can see except one thing. To put it on the ground of political purity or of morality is an insult alike to the intelligence of men and to the omniscience of God. It is simply because the tide is rising and coming in, it is simply because you know, Senators, as well as you know anything in the future, that there is a time coming, and not very far distant, when you will be swept from power in these places. This is the real reason. This Senatorial machinery for grinding out new Senators, which has been running now for six months, is a simple effort to fortify yourselves in this position in the Senate, and when men seek fortifications and begin to throw up breastworks we know that they dread the encounter in open field.

But let me say to you that you can go on, you can add outrage to outrage, you can bring in new States without qualifications, you can bring them in rightfully or wrongfully, you can strengthen your members here, you can build breastworks in this Chamber mountain high; but let me tell you there are no works which can be erected by the ingenuity of man that the people in their wrath can not storm, and let me tell you more, too, in the fulfillment of the language of the great apostle who said that to those who sin willfully after they have received the knowledge of the truth there remains no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and a fiery indignation that shall consume the adversary; and when you have committed these injustices so far as you are allowed to go, the avenging spirit of outraged freemen will visit you, and as it comes you will behold in its outstretched hands the flagellum with which shall be fulfilled that other sentence which says the servant that knoweth his master's will and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). If there be no amendment proposed to the bill, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the bill (S. 658) to provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.

Mr. PLUMB. On last Saturday the Senate passed a Senate bill which confirmed the title to certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie in the State of Michigan. A House bill to the same effect, in the same language, has since been passed by that body. It is a small matter involving simply the relinquishment of the title of the United States to 2½ acres of land now used for cemetery purposes in the village of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands may be discharged from its further consideration of the House bill and that it be put upon its passage in order that we may have legislation and not simply the concurrence of the two Houses in the passage of bills which do not become laws for the reason that they are not finally acted upon by both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. 9048) to confirm the title to certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The Chair suggests to the Senator from Kansas whether it is not desirable to recall the Senate bill.

Mr. PLUMB. That probably would be proper, although not necessary. I will venture, however, to make the motion that the Senate request the House of Representatives to return the bill of the Senate, and that when it be returned it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, unless there be objection.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1109.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3738) to place the American merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade upon an equality with that of other nations.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from Maine does not propose to ask for the consideration of that bill this afternoon. I have not the slightest objection to taking it up if he desires to address the Senate upon it, but I have just returned to the city and would like to have this bill and the one connected with it to go over until to-morrow. These are what are known as the subsidy bills, and they are very important measures.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say, Mr. President, that this seems to be about the only opportunity for the consideration of these two bills. The first one that I have called up is known as the Farquhar or tonnage bill. The second one is known as the subsidy bill. I desire to have the first one up as the unfinished business, at any rate. I did not expect it would be disposed of this afternoon.

Mr. VEST. Let it go over until to-morrow. I do not want to make any factious opposition, but I did not expect the bill would come up to-day. I have just returned, and I would like to have some time to look into both bills. They come from a committee of which I am a member and of which the Senator from Maine is chairman, and he has charge of the bills.

Mr. FRYE. I will ask unanimous consent that this bill may be taken up immediately after the morning business to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the bill named by him be taken up immediately after the morning business to-morrow morning.

Mr. REAGAN. I have been seeking for a day or two an opportunity to submit some remarks upon a bill of very great importance. I desired yesterday morning to do so and again this morning, but on account of the bill for the admission of Idaho I have not asked to do it, and I do not wish to be postponed to another day.

Mr. FRYE. There is the balance of the afternoon, from 3 o'clock until 6.

Mr. REAGAN. If I can be allowed to occupy a portion of this afternoon I shall be satisfied.

Mr. FRYE. I am simply asking unanimous consent that this bill may be taken up to-morrow morning after the morning business, and the Senator then has this afternoon in which to make his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House adhered to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the message from the House of Representatives may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives; which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 1, 1890.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives adheres to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the House of Representatives having declined to further confer with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes, the only alternative left to the Senate is either to let the bill fail or to recede. I move that the Senate recede from its amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that?

Mr. DAWES. A message has been received from the House of Representatives that they adhere to their disagreement to the amendments and they do not accede to our request for a conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the legislative bill?

Mr. DAWES. On the legislative bill. So, Mr. President, I see no alternative but for the Senate to choose between the failure of the bill and receding from its amendments. I move that the Senate recede.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will not recede.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate recede from its amendments to the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that question debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say about it myself, although I have not taken any part in the debate heretofore, that I believe the rule laid down by the Senate that the employes who are engaged for service with reference to individual Senators, or Senators' clerks rather, should be employed by the year in order that the benefit to be derived may be the greatest possible, and that if it were possible to secure the adoption of a plan of that kind it would be wise to continue this controversy. But the Senator from Massachusetts says it has got to a point where to continue it would result in the failure of the bill.

I wish to say one other thing. I think the proposition as reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate was wise, and I believe if that had been left alone, and if we had not tempted the House further by putting on a large number of other employes and by increasing the salaries of these secretaries to $1,800, the House would have concurred. The House feel to a certain degree that they can not at some point escape responsibility, that they can not always go on saying that the Senate shall fix the number of its own employes and their salaries, because they could not be paid upon the vote of the Senate alone, but only upon the vote of the two Houses combining, and of course with the concurrence of the President, whereby a law is made, and that the country will hold them to some responsibility, at any rate, for the overloaded condition of the expenses in and about the Senate.

I hope that when we come to the consideration of this question another year we shall be able to adjust our force, not only as to its numbers, but as to its compensation, in such a way as to justify ourselves not only to the House but to the country, and by this means do that which is really essential, the thing having been entered upon, and that is to give to all the Senators who do not otherwise have clerk-hire provided for them an employe who will be at their service during the entire year.

I believe that the common sense of the country has now come to the conclusion that as a rule a plan of that kind ought to be adopted. But the Senate has endeavored to saddle that upon an already overgrown force, a force too large and a force overpaid, conspicuously so, and the exhibit has been made in the House whereby the House has come to a final determination, rather than yield to the Senate, to let this bill go. It has been stated there that there are three employes for every Senator in this body, and that the Senate force costs about $60,000 a year more than the House force, and that has not only convinced the House, but it has got to a point where the House can afford to stand, not only as a matter of public policy, but as a matter of quasi hostility to the Senate, upon ground that can not be shaken, and I hope when this subject comes up again we shall be able to temper this matter in regard to clerks by an exhibit of at least a reasonable degree of economy in regard to the force.

Mr. DAWES. While there is a good deal of truth in what the Senator from Kansas says, yet, confining ourselves to this particular conference, it is due to the Senate and it is due to the country to state that this has ceased to be a question of extravagance and unjustifiable expenditure.

When the Senate conferees offered, on the question of compensation, to reduce the amount, first, to $1,500, then to $1,200, and then to precisely the sum that would be paid for session clerks, they were met by an absolute refusal to permit us to make our clerks work during the vacation, and it ceased to be a question of expenditure and it became simply a question whether the House shall dictate to the Senate the manner in which it shall employ its clerks, and it should be known to the country that nobody can pose before this country as an economist on this question.

It is not a question of economy. It is a question whether the Senate has a right to say how it shall employ its clerks, and not what it shall pay its clerks, for the conferees on the part of the Senate tendered to the House the fixing by itself of the compensation for these clerks, reserving only the privilege of saying that these clerks should be annual clerks, so that their services might be rendered to the Senate and to Senators during vacation as well as during the sessions; and nobody can go before the country charging the Senate with an attempt in this regard to saddle unjustifiable or unnecessary expenditure upon the Treasury. The House of Representatives go before the country solely upon the question of whether they or we shall say how our clerks shall render their services to us.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I hope this motion will not prevail. I consider that there is a matter of principle involved which has been stated before. It is the right of this body to determine what employes it shall have and what compensation it shall pay them.

So far as the general expenses of the Senate and the House are concerned, although the House is a much larger body, aside from the secretaries to Senators, I can not conceive why the House should require very many more employes than the Senate. Of course, the provision for the payment of the secretaries of Senators makes an increased expenditure on the part of the Senate; but, so far as I am concerned—and I believe that to be the case with every member of this body—if the House shall deem it necessary that members of the House shall be provided with secretaries for the transaction of public business, for the transaction of business required of them by their constituents, I shall vote with pleasure to pay them a reasonable compensation.

This country is not so poor that it is necessary that members of Congress should pay for the transaction of the public business required of them out of their salaries. Every one knows who knows anything about the transaction of business in the Senate that it was absolutely essential for a working member of this body to have a secretary, and it is almost as necessary for a Senator to have a secretary during the recess of Congress as it is while Congress is in session. Some of us would not be physically able to even take care of our correspondence without a competent secretary, without a secretary who is a stenographer and a competent clerk, and who ought to be able to earn at least $1,800 per year salary.

There is no comparison between the business of the Senate to-day and the work which the Senate performs to-day and the work of the Senate in the early days of our history. I am told by an employe of the Senate who has been in the Senate many years that in 1861-'63 there were only six hundred bills introduced in the Senate at both sessions of Congress. There were during the Fiftieth Congress introduced in the Senate some four thousand bills. There have been introduced at the present session of Congress up to this time in the Senate four thousand one hundred and seventy-five bills and one hundred and eight joint resolutions.

If you measure the business of the Senate by the number of bills that have been introduced, which must necessarily be considered in committees and in the Senate, the business of the Senate is constantly increasing. Everybody knows that most of the Senators in this body are required to be at committee meetings here at 10 or half past 10 o'clock in the morning almost every day in the week, and after attending committee meetings they are expected to attend the sessions of the Senate from 12 o'clock until 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening. In addition to that they must take charge of a large correspondence. There are Senators here who have forty and fifty and sixty and even one hundred letters a day which have to be answered.

Besides that, there are the errands, if I may call them such, the business that Senators are called upon to transact for their constituents before the Departments, and many a Senator who has led a busy life before he entered the Senate in some profession or in some business knows that the duties of the Senate are quite as exacting as the duties of his profession were before he entered the Senate. I say it is a miserable policy, and it is no economy whatever, for Congress to refuse to provide such help as may be secured by competent secretaries to Senators, who shall be annual secretaries and whose compensation shall be annual.

I for one hope this motion will not prevail, and let the House of Representatives take the responsibility of defeating this bill if it is to be defeated.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have never on any occasion attempted to pose as an economist. I am sorry to say I have not practiced it very much in my private matters, but I believe that the public business ought to be transacted by the public servants of the people under the same rules as they would transact their own business as business men. Any other rule is dangerous, wrong, and unjust.

Mr. President, I see in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for I have been absent for a day or two, a statement made in another portion of the Capitol that every Senator here has three employes at his disposal. I should like to know the basis for that statement. I have been a member of the Senate for eleven years. I am now the chairman of a select committee, having lost the regular committee of which I was chairman after the party to which I belong lost control of the Senate in 1881.

I have never had any employe at my disposal except my secretary after the rule was adopted by the Senate furnishing each Senator with a secretary, the chairmen of committees having the clerk of the committee to act for each chairman in that capacity as secretary. I have not now, and, as I stated, I have never had since the party to which I belong lost control of the Senate, the control of any messenger.

I have heard it stated—and there is the vice of this whole thing—that there are Senators here who have two secretaries, that is to say, two clerks of committees under their control, and three messengers. If the statement is true that each Senator has in the ratio of three employes at his disposal, I should like to know how that comes about. So far as my experience goes, it is not true.

Before this rule was adopted which gave to each of us a secretary I found it necessary to employ a secretary at my own expense. He transacts my business. Now, under the rule of the Senate, he does it for $6 a day, but when the session ends his relation to me as secretary terminates, although he resides in this city and during the vacation attends to such matters as are absolutely necessary and to which he can attend, but every Senator knows that the largest proportion of his business must have his own individual and personal attention and that the duties of a secretary, so far as my experience extends, are simply those of an amanuensis, a type-writer, and a short-hand writer. I believe that $6 a day to the secretaries of Senators and to the clerks of committees during the session of Congress would be just and right.

Now, sir, it is useless for us to disguise the fact that the whole face of the earth is filled with young men entirely competent as type-writers and short-hand writers thronging these streets and asking employment. The curse of the country to-day is that the young men of the country are not engaged in the ordinary pursuits of skilled laborers, but that they are devoting themselves to the lighter forms of labor, type-writing, short-hand writing, and clerical work, and for that reason this sort of labor is found in an abundance and superfluity which is to me sometimes appalling.

Why, sir, there is not a Senator here, if he desires a secretary or a clerk of a committee at $6 a day during the session of Congress who would not be overrun, not with incompetent men, not with men who could not be trusted, but with young men of capacity and integrity, just as good as those whom we employ to-day. The vice of the whole thing is that there are committees here that need absolutely no clerks, or, if they need them at all, not more than one or two hours during the week, and they have got annual clerks. The abuse has grown up until it has become crystallized, and it has become a matter to a large extent of personal favoritism.

If the statement be true which I saw in the RECORD and which has been published broadcast in the newspapers, that each Senator here has in the proportion of three employes, it has come from this abuse which has given to committees, that do not need them, annual clerks who really have no employment for one-half or two-thirds of the whole year or even for a longer time than that, and which has given the Senators with two chairmanships two secretaries, and two or three messengers to be appointed by them.

I was not present the other day when I understand a statement was made from my own side of the Senate that this was a matter for the Senate to determine. I am compelled to say that I accede to no such proposition. If this were a question for the Senate alone to determine, it would be unnecessary for us to ask conferences with the House of Representatives. It is not a matter individual and isolated as to the Senate. It is a question for the House of Representatives as much as for us. If the House proposed to furnish each one of its members with a secretary, we should claim the right to pass upon it. They are as much a portion of the legislative power—and that goes without saying—as we are. They are as much responsible for any joint resolution or bill which takes money out of the Treasury, no matter for what purpose, under the Constitution as we are. And, sir, I can not appreciate the justice or the truth of the statement that the Senate of the United States is alone to determine what officers or what force shall be employed by the Senate for the use of its members.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire of the Senator if he does not think it is for the Senate to determine whether one officer shall stand at a door and another one at the desk, and that one shall be a recording clerk, and another a journal clerk, and another a messenger? Is it not for the Senate to determine those things? Is it not for the Senate to determine whether its clerks shall be employed during the vacation or not?

Mr. VEST. It is for the Senate to determine just such matters as under the Constitution and law are left alone to the determination of the Senate. Wherever the Constitution or the law requires the joint action of the House of Representatives, they are just as much responsible as we are and just as much entitled to be heard in regard to it.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri if the proposition which the Senator from Massachusetts has advanced is literally adhered to whether it would not permit the Secretary of the Treasury or the head of any other Department to determine for himself exactly what was required in the way of the number of clerks and employes and their functions in the various Departments.

Mr. VEST. I take it for granted that it is the same sort of comity, for it is nothing but a comity to which the Senator from Massachusetts appeals, a sort of legislative comity between the Houses. But when you come to legislative power and legislative responsibility the House of Representatives is just as much involved as we are.

Mr. DAWES. This has not been reduced to a question of expenditure of money on the part of the Senate, but it has been reduced to a question of whether the Senate shall prescribe what its officers shall do.

Mr. VEST. I take it that if the Senate creates a number of superfluous and unnecessary officers, and then appeals to general legislation for means to pay them, by that very appeal we make the House of Representatives as much responsible for the act that takes the money out of the Treasury as we are.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me, it has not become and it is not a question of whether we have too many officers or not, for the House of Representatives has indorsed this number of clerks precisely—not one less nor one more, but precisely this number of officers. It is not a question whether we have too many or not, but it is a question whether the House shall prescribe the duties of our officers, because they said to us it is not a question how much these officers shall have, but whether they shall be made annual or not.

Mr. VEST. I thought the question was whether all these secretaries should become annual employes or not. That was the issue between the two Houses.

Mr. DAWES. That is it exactly.

Mr. VEST. We ought to be perfectly frank with each other about this whole matter. When the movement was first made to give secretaries to Senators, which was absolutely just and proper and necessary, it met with great opposition on the part of the House of Representatives. We were then involved in a long and protracted contest through a conference committee as to whether we should have secretaries at all. Finally we succeeded, after a protracted contest, in securing secretaries at $6 a day during the session. That was right. They ought to be paid for the time when they are actually acting as secretaries, and not one minute longer.

If I were disposed to go into the amount of work done for the compensation, I should startle some of the critics and the newspapers of this country by saying that there is not a Senator in this Hall who does not work for less compensation in proportion to his labor than anybody else in this country, and considering the class of labor a great deal less. Still, as a matter of course, it is fashionable to deride all public men and to criticise them and to attempt to create the impression on the country that we are a privileged class. This is a "millionaires' club," as my friend from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] suggests—individually I wish that were so—that we are all rich, and that we do nothing but spend our time here in languor and indolence and luxurious living. We know—those of us who attend to our duties, and I hope we all do and I believe we all do—how false that is; and we know there is not a man worthy to be in the Congress of the United States, who attends to his duties at all, who could not with the same labor and the same talent, if he devoted himself to money making, secure twice or three times the same amount of income during the year.

But I simply proposed to discuss the real issue before the Senate, and that is whether we should recede now from what I considered an injudicious movement the other day, one that touched the House of Representatives upon a tender point, and upon the question that we have had a great deal of difficulty, whether we shall recede from the proposition to make all these secretaries annual. My judgment is that we should recede.

I resent as much as any one these demagogical attacks upon the Senate of the United States, because constitutionally its rank is a little higher than other branches of the Government; but, at the same time, we should not go beyond the limit of what is just and proper; and if any of us were to-morrow engaged in the employment of a secretary to do our work during the sessions of Congress we would pay him only for the time he was engaged. What is to become of the salaries of these clerks after the short session, when we remain here four months and then the Senate does not meet again from spring until the first of December? Is it right that these secretaries, no matter how worthy they may be, shall draw the money of the tax-payers of the country for nothing?

It is said that these secretaries can work for Senators while they are absent. My experience is they can do no such thing. When I am in my State, all that my secretary can do for me here is to attend to some little routine business in the Departments, but as to anything of importance, as to the large mass of Senatorial duty, I am the sole judge, and I care not who he may be, how competent he may be, he can not do the work which absolutely devolves upon me as a member of this body.

Every Senator here knows that, practically, the duties of a secretary terminate with the session of Congress, and it is only right and proper to pay him for that time, and $6 a day is enough. If we were to put the salary down to four or three dollars a day we would be overrun with applications for these places. There is too much of that sort of labor in the country.

For the reasons I have stated I hope the motion to recede will prevail.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he knows of any Senator who has two clerks, or a secretary and a clerk. I should not like that impression to go out.

Mr. VEST. I do not, personally. I stated at the time that I had heard it, but I was told by a brother Senator that it was so.

Mr. DOLPH. I know of none.

Mr. VEST. I have never had my attention called to it before. I was speaking in regard to a public statement contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I read yesterday as I came to this city, to the effect that every Senator had three employes at his disposal. I simply said if that were true it was wrong and should be remedied.

Mr. DAWES. Did not the Senator know enough about the business here to know that that was not so, and that the statement came from dividing the number of employes of the Senate by the number of Senators, and it made three?

Mr. VEST. I suppose so.

Mr. DAWES. And the man who made that statement—I do not know who he was—thought that that gave to each Senator three employes at his disposal, and he could not see the difference. I am surprised at the Senator himself making the statement.

Mr. VEST. I supposed that the calculation was made in that way, but when it was supplemented by the information to me that there were Senators here who were chairmen of two committees and had two secretaries—that is, two clerks of committees—who were at their control, and three messengers, I was astounded at the statement, but had no reason to contradict it.

Mr. DAWES. That is the very reason why the Senate appoints its own chairmen of committees, and the Senate has passed a rule that every chairmen shall have a clerk.

Mr. VEST. I am not talking about the rule; I am talking about a fact.

Mr. DAWES. I know it, and I am suggesting to the Senator what the fact is.

Mr. VEST. I simply wanted to say that if there was any such ratio it was unevenly distributed, and, so far as my personal experience goes, it is not an equal and just distribution.

Mr. ALLISON. I think before we act upon this question it is well enough for us to call to mind that the expenditures of the Senate as now organized are not in excess of the expenditures of the House of Representatives. It is true that if the increased expenditure proposed for clerks to committees who are employed during the session, and for clerks to Senators who have no committee chairmanships, should be added to the present outlay of the Senate, our expenditures would then be beyond those of the House of Representatives; but in this bill, which is now before me, the aggregate expenditures of the Senate as proposed by the House of Representatives are $329,768, to which we added nearly $100,000, chiefly made up of the additional compensation to the clerks of Senators and to the clerks now being employed by the committees. If we recede from these amendments, the expenditures of the Senate of the United States will be less in the aggregate than the expenditures of the House of Representatives. Therefore I do not want it to be understood that our expenditures hitherto have been in excess of the expenditures of the House of Representatives.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] quotes from some record in another place that we have three employes to each Senator. We certainly have one to each Senator, because every Senator who is chairman of a committee has a clerk as chairman, and every Senator who is not a chairman of a committee has a clerk of his own. There is one employe to each Senator in that way, and that is not true of the House of Representatives.

Now, when you come to the force at large in this body the expenditures, I think, are not greatly in excess of what they ought to be. I have not examined them with care with a view to comparison, but I am certain that the expenditures of the Secretary of the Senate and his office are not as large as the expenditures of the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the employes in his office. We have a larger number of messengers and we pay them a greater compensation than is paid for the like service in the House, but our messengers perform a greater service relatively than do the messengers in the House of Representatives. In the first place, we have not only the legislative business of the Senate, but we have executive business, and Senators know perfectly well that the employment of additional help or additional messengers is necessary for the executive business of the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, having stated this, I want to say one thing further respecting this bill. The Senate Committee on Appropriations reported this provision for annual clerks to committees not now having annual clerks and annual clerks to Senators at the rate of $1,500 per annum, which, taking the Congresses together, would be an increase of compensation to the extent of probably $600 per annum for this class of clerks. I believe that that is a just and fair compensation, not only for clerks to committees, but for clerks to Senators, and, so believing, I concurred in the report of the committee which reported this bill. When it reached the Senate the judgment of the Senate was that the compensation proposed by the Committee on Appropriations was too small, and it was increased $300 per annum. Whatever there may be with respect to that, it is certain that the House of Representatives has the right to criticize the expenditures of the Senate, as it has the right to criticize the expenditures of any of the Departments of this Government; and whilst we can employ as many persons as we choose, we certainly can not pay them out of the public moneys without the consent of the House of Representatives.

The difficulty lies in the fact that the House of Representatives does not provide clerks for its members, and therefore it has criticised and does criticize the employment of clerks to Senators; but in this bill the House has finally yielded that question, as it did, I think, two years ago, allowing the Senators to have clerks and providing for their compensation at the rate of $6 per day.

I feel sure that this matter can be composed in the future in the manner proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], by readjusting our force where it can be readjusted, and by arranging in some way for the compensation of the employes of both Houses.

I rose, however, principally to say that, in my judgment, we have arrived at a point in this bill when we ought to recede from these amendments, no matter what our judgment may be as respects the rights of the two Houses and no matter what our judgment may be as respects the compensation that ought to be allowed to our own employes. We have reached now the beginning of the fiscal year 1891 and have run into it nearly a day. This appropriation bill contains appropriations for every department of this Government. By a joint resolution passed yesterday and signed by the President the appropriations of last year continue for thirty days. But shall we continue this contest with the House of Representatives as respects, not the number of our employes, because, as I understand from the Senator who has charge of this bill, the House has agreed to every employe that we have asked it to agree to in detail, so that whatever our number may be here, the House of Representatives has yielded that question wholly in this bill? Are we to allow this bill to fail on the first day of the fiscal year because the House does not allow us to pay our employes such rate of compensation as we think ought to be paid to them? That is the only question involved here. This is a controversy that we can renew with the House of Representatives from time to time, and, for one, I give them notice that we will renew it in the future in such form as we may think best when another appropriation bill of this character shall come before us.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator state whether the House of Representatives agrees to everything else except the compensation of clerks?

Mr. ALLISON. The House agrees to everything that is proposed in this bill, save and except that it declines to agree to the additional compensation proposed for clerks to committees who are not annual and for clerks to Senators.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do they agree to the proposition made by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in the first place?

Mr. ALLISON. They do not agree to the increase proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I understand that the House of Representatives do not agree to the annual employment of clerks.

Mr. ALLISON. They do not.

Mr. PASCO. It is not a question of compensation simply, but it is a question as to whether the clerks shall be employed annually or not. That is the entire difference. Am I correct?

Mr. ALLISON. I stand corrected. As suggested by the Senator from Florida, the House of Representatives do not agree that the committee clerks who are now employed for the session or the clerks to Senators shall be employed annually, but they do agree to every other service proposed by the Senate in this bill and they do appropriate for the payment of clerks to committees who are not now provided for annually, at the rate of $6 a day during the session, and they also agree to pay the clerks to Senators for the session. Therefore the only difference, as I understand it now, is as to whether we shall kill this bill because the House of Representatives will not consent to the increased compensation which we have proposed here for clerks to committees and for clerks to Senators. I hope that the Senate will recede from its amendments in order that this bill may at an early day become a law.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator if on the other hand the only question for the House of Representatives is not to consider whether they will kill this bill because they can not dictate the compensation and the manner of employment of Senate employes?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course that is a question. The House of Representatives has taken its action. It has taken the last final step. It has adhered to its disagreement to our amendments. Therefore if we adhere the bill falls. If we recede the bill passes.

Mr. BLAIR. Could they reconsider their vote to adhere?

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps they could.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I want to say a word about these clerks. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in discussing the question of clerks, forgets or leaves out of the consideration one matter. The Senator and his colleague have all the business connected with legislation outside of their seats that all the Representatives from Missouri have. They two have just as much to do as fourteen Representatives from Missouri; and there falls upon my colleague and myself, outside of our seats here, duties inseparably connected with our places as Senators that the twelve Representatives in the other branch have to do.

That is not taken into consideration for a moment. The House of Representatives while refusing to us that we might have our clerks annual without regard to the pay, yield to us, without a word, in consequence of the new committee-rooms we are compelled to engage, six additional messengers, three additional skilled laborers, three additional laborers, one assistant clerk, two additional mail carriers, six additional folders. All that they could yield to us without a word, but they could not yield to us that we should have our clerks during the vacation, clerks who, as I have said, discharge for two men what fourteen or twelve or twenty-one or thirty-six have to do outside, and they do not choose to vote themselves clerks.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. The Senator may be right, but I am speaking from my personal experience. I do not think that my secretary can do the work that devolves upon me as a Senator to the extent contemplated by the Senator from Massachusetts. All that my secretary can possibly do for me is to act as an amanuensis and to attend to some little routine matters in the Departments. But wherever it requires the influence of a Senator personally in a Department, and in ninety-nine cases, almost, out of a hundred where any discretion is to be exercised at all, I must do it myself, and he can not do it for me. If I could find that treasure that has never been seen even in the city of Washington, a young man who could examine authorities, prepare me for a debate, exercise judgment as to political exigencies, etc., that arise in every public man's life, then what the Senator from Massachusetts says would be entirely true and appropriate. But we do not find them.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not have to prepare for debate fourteen times as much as the Representatives from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I know, but the labor that devolves upon a Senator even in that line is much greater than that upon a Representative.

Mr. DAWES. No, it is not that at all. It is routine business that I speak of.

Mr. VEST. Well, as to the routine business, there is a large proportion of that which can not be done by a secretary. Every Senator in his experience knows that he frequently sends a secretary to a Department and then winds up by going himself because it is absolutely necessary to be there in order to bring the requisite influence and information to bear that will secure a successful result. There is the trouble in this whole matter. When the session of Congress ends I say that the functions of the secretary practically end. If any Senator here has a secretary that he can leave here to act for him, assume the full responsibility, and accept the result of his action, he is the most fortunate man I know of in public life. I have never found such a man.

Mr. ALLISON. A moment ago I stated that in my belief the expenses of the Secretary's office in the Senate were less than similar expenditures in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives. I have had handed to me a statement of the appropriations in this bill for the two offices—the office of the Secretary of the Senate and the office of the Clerk of the House. The expenditures in the Secretary's office are $64,000 per annum. The similar expenditures in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives are $24,000. Yet we have all the executive work to do in addition to the legislative work that is done.

So when in any place expenditures are compared between the House of Representatives and the Senate, I think in many respects our expenditures will compare favorably. Take that desk with its faithful and efficient employees in this body, and take similar employment in the House of Representatives. The Chief Clerk of the Senate receives a compensation of $3,000 per annum. A similar clerk in the House of Representatives receives $3,600 per annum, $600 more than is paid for this service in the Senate. So when you come to the Journal Clerk; in the Senate the Journal Clerk is paid $2,592 for the service rendered here at this desk. The Journal Clerk in the House, performing the same duties, is paid $3,600. So you may run along. Take the reading clerk in the Senate, who receives $2,592 per annum for service at that desk. They have two reading clerks in the House of Representatives, each receiving for the same service a compensation of $3,600, or more than a thousand dollars in excess of what we pay here at this desk.

So there should be some equalization on both sides of this Capitol if there is to be crimination and recrimination as respects the expenditures of these respective bodies. It is true that for a number of services rendered in this body the pay is larger than in the House of Representatives, but there are instances, and quite a number of them, which I have not called to mind, where the House of Representatives pays a larger compensation than is paid here.

But, Mr. President, I only repeat what I said before, that the House of Representatives is not willing to agree to these amendments, and therefore it is that in order to pass this bill I think it is our duty to recede from the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to recede from the amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 15, noes 16—no quorum voting.

Mr. DAWES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], but I am entitled to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. PIERCE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], but I think he would vote "yea," and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SANDERS (after having voted in the affirmative). I inadvertently voted. I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and I wish to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana withdraws his vote.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and withhold my vote.

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. McMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. As he is not present, I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan withdraws his vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. KENNA] is necessarily detained from the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. As I understand one more vote is needed to make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Cullom,	Payne,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Dawes,	Platt,	Sherman,
Berry,	Frye,	Power,	Squire,

So the Senate refused to recede from its amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. Is there anything now before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York appeals to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the Senator from Texas to yield to me to enter a motion to reconsider the vote just taken on the motion to recede from the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I could not hear what the Senator desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks the Senator from Texas to yield to enable him to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to recede from its amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. All right.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3711) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCOMAS, Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, and Mr. CLEMENTS managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

THE ZONA LIBRE.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senate for the purpose of addressing it on a subject of very considerable importance to the entire Southern border of the United States.

On the 6th of January last I offered a bill in the Senate which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (S. 1642) to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into the Republic of Mexico, and to restore that privilege whenever the Zona Libre along the boundary between the two countries shall be abolished.

Be it enacted, etc., That after thirty days from the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to transport any merchandise in bond through the ports or territory of the United States into the territory of the Republic of Mexico; and any person, firm, or corporation violating the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than $1,000, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 2. That if the Republic of Mexico shall at any time abolish said Zona Libre, and shall give notice of that fact to the President of the United States, he shall, upon the receipt of such notice, by proclamation restore the right to transport merchandise through the ports and territory of the United States in bond into the territory of the Republic of Mexico as now permitted by law.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. On the 8th day of January this bill was referred by that committee to Hon. William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury, with its request for an expression of his views on it, because of its relation to the question of the public revenues.

Subsequently the Secretary of the Treasury referred this bill to the Hon. James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, for his views, as it affected our international relations with the Republic of Mexico.

In some way parties in New York ascertained that this bill had been referred to the Secretary of State, and the following correspondence ensued.

I will ask the Secretary to read the letter which I send to the desk. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, March 1, 1890.

SIR: The undersigned, agents of the New York, Cuba and Mexico Steamship Line, have been informed that Senate bill No. 1642, Fifty-first Congress, first session, "to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into the Republic of Mexico," etc., has been referred to your Department for report thereon. We therefore desire to enter through you our respectful protest against the passage of said bill, and herewith to submit our reasons why it should not become a law:

1. The privilege of transportation of merchandise in bond is not so much a benefit to Mexico as to the people of the United States. Its abolition would affect Mexican interests to a very small extent, but would be a serious injury to various American steamship and railroad lines, which are now enjoying a considerable and profitable traffic, and which, under the provisions of this bill, would be transferred to foreign steamship and railroad companies. The undersigned are now transporting through the port of New York a large amount of European goods to Mexico, for which they give through bills of lading at Liverpool and other European ports, and which are transhipped at New York to our steamers and delivered in the Gulf ports of Mexico, thus furnishing us a profitable and growing traffic.

Owing to the cheap freight rates from Liverpool to New York we are enabled to successfully compete with French, Spanish, and British steamers running direct to Mexico, notwithstanding those lines receive subsidy and mail pay from their own Governments and some of them from the Mexican Government also, while our line receives no subsidy or pay from our own or any other Government. After long years of earnest effort, struggling with great obstacles, and without the aid of our Government, we have built up such a trade with Cuba and Mexico as has justified us in building in an American shipyard during the past few months three new first-class steamers to add to our former fleet of steamers. If the bill under consideration becomes a law, it will greatly restrict our carrying trade and seriously cripple our business. We had hoped that the present Congress would adopt some effective measure to encourage and strengthen us in our contest with the subsidizing lines of foreign nations, and certainly were not prepared for a measure whose only effect will be to cut off a large part of our traffic, as well as that of other large American interests.

2. Our acquaintance with Mexican affairs leads us to say that the object had in view would not be accomplished or promoted by the passage of this bill, namely, the repeal of the Mexican Free Zone. As already stated, Mexico has much less interest in the transit privilege than the United States, and its abolition would now have little effect in Mexico, as it has completed lines of railroad from several of the seaports reaching to the most remote States of its frontier. Its chief effect would be to irritate, if not affront, the Mexican Government. The Free Zone is a vexed question in the domestic politics of Mexico, and its abolition is just now agitating the political circles of that country more than any other subject. The passage of this bill would be construed in that country as a hostile act on the part of our Government, and would be likely to turn the tide of public opinion to the side of the advocates of the Free Zone.

In view of the foregoing, we earnestly hope that you will report that the passage of the bill would be inopportune and injurious to the interests of the United States.

Very respectfully,

JAMES E. WARD & CO.
By JOHN W. FOSTER, Attorney.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. REAGAN. On the 6th of March the Secretary of State made a reply to that letter, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Inclosure No. 3.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1890.

GENTLEMEN: I have to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of 1st ultimo, addressed to me on your behalf by Mr. J. W. Foster, attorney, in regard to the apprehended effects of Senate bill No. 1642 of the present session "to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into the Republic of Mexico," etc., should the same become a law.

The bill in question is understood to be pending in committee; and the subject to which it relates falls primarily within the purview of the Treasury Department. So far as the question affects the Zona Libre of Mexico, the last report of this Department on the matter is contained in the Executive Document of which I inclose a copy for your information.

Deeming, however, that the statements contained in your letter tending to show that the proposed abolition of the privilege of transportation of merchandise in bond in Mexico would injuriously affect various railroads and steamship lines of the United States may be of consequence to the Treasury Department, I have had the pleasure to communicate a copy to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

Inclosure: Executive Document No. 130, Fiftyth Congress, first session.
Messrs JAMES E. WARD & CO.,
New York City.

Mr. REAGAN. I also ask the Secretary to read a letter from Charles C. Beaman, counsel of the Texas-Mexican Railway Company and the Mexican National Railway.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Inclosure No. 4.]

OFFICE OF EVARTS, CHOATE & BEAMAN,
No. 92 Wall Street, New York, March 4, 1890.

SIR: I learn that there has been referred to you by the Secretary of the Treasury a communication from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate of the United States, with reference to Senate bill No. 1642, being a bill entitled "A bill to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into the Republic of Mexico, and to restore that privilege whenever the Zona Libre along the boundary between the two countries shall be abolished."

I am counsel for the Texas-Mexican Railway Company and the Mexican National Railway Company. The Texas-Mexican Railway runs from the port of Corpus Christi in Texas to a connection with the Mexican National Railroad at Laredo, in Texas, on the Rio Grande River. The Mexican National Railroad runs from Laredo to the city of Mexico. This Mexican National road has been built, and is operated to a very considerable extent, upon the reliance and expectation that it would be able to do considerable business in the carrying of merchandise imported at the port of Corpus Christi, and passing from there in bond over the Texas-Mexican Railroad to the Mexican line, and in that way delivered in Mexico.

The proposed bill introduced in the Senate of the United States, if it should become a law, would be a great damage both to the Texas-Mexican Railway and to the Mexican National Railroad. The Mexican National Railroad is a corporation organized under the laws of Colorado and has been built to a very great extent by the help of the citizens of the United States and the money of the citizens of the United States. The relations between the Texas-Mexican road and the Mexican National road are of such a nature that each road is damaged and diminished by anything that injures the other. The president of both these roads is now in Europe, and in his absence I write you in behalf of these two roads, calling your attention to the facts herein stated, and assure you that the proposed bill, if it become a law, will greatly diminish the value of the property of these two companies. I am not familiar with the reasons that would justify the passage of such a bill, but in view of the damage that is certain to be done to the citizens of the United States, I feel that Congress would hesitate a long time before making the bill a law.

I assume that the purpose of such a bill is to retaliate upon Mexico for certain action that it has taken. The effect will be that the goods that would have reached Mexico through a port of the United States will reach Mexico through a Mexican port, and the damage will be done to the citizens of the United States who own steamship and railroad lines which otherwise would have had the transportation of these goods to Mexico, but in the case contemplated will lose such transportation by reason of the act of Congress. In other words, the proposed legislation will injure citizens of the United States, but not Mexico or its citizens.

If you should wish any information as to the amount of the business, or of the merchandise that is carried in bond over the Texas-Mexican Railway, I could furnish the same.

Yours, very truly,

CHARLES C. BEAMAN,
Counsel of Texas-Mexican Railway Company and of the National Mexican Railway.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Mr. REAGAN. On the 7th of March the Secretary of State addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1890.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th of January last was duly received. An early reply thereto has been prevented by various causes. It seemed advisable to give to the important subject it presented careful attention, with a view to inviting, if necessary, conference between the two Departments touching the probable operation and effects of Senate bill 1642 of the present session, which is designed to prohibit the transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into Mexico, unless and until the Government of Mexico shall abolish the existing Zona Libre, and shall notify such abolition to the Government of the United States.

To understand the original institution in 1858 of a Free Zone along the border line of the Mexican State of Tamaulipas, I beg to refer you to a very full historical analysis of the system and its workings made by Mr. Romero, the present minister of Mexico at this capital, in the course of a debate in the Mexican Congress in October and November, 1870, he being then the minister of finance of Mexico, and also to a note addressed on February 10, 1888, by Minister Romero to my predecessor. Both of these statements are printed in Senate Executive Document No. 130, Fiftyth Congress, first session, a copy of which is herewith transmitted for your information. The recitals of Mr. Romero are entitled to the greater consideration, inasmuch as he was, in 1870, an advocate of the abolition of the Zone then confined to only a portion of the frontier.

To sum up—the peace of Guadalupe Hidalgo, in 1848, found a notable disparity in the condition of the populations on either side of the Rio Grande. On the northern side the Texans, but lately separated from Mexico, enjoyed comparative prosperity, freedom from internal-revenue taxation, and an abundant market of purchase and sale at low prices. South of the river was a depleted and impoverished territory, burdened with debt, taxation, a narrow market and high prices. This disparity was increased by the act of the United States Congress of August 30, 1852 (Statutes, volume 10, pages 37, 38), providing for the transit of goods in bond to the Mexican frontier and the establishment of bonded warehouses at San Antonio, Eagle Pass, Presidio del Norte, and San Elizario, and also at such other points as might thereafter be designated. As a consequence of this, the goods thus favored were withdrawn from bond, not only for the supply of Texan consumers, but also, as is asserted, for the purpose of being smuggled into Mexico. As Mr. Romero remarks in his note of February 10, 1888, this difference of circumstance either led to emigration from Mexico to Texas, or compelled the Mexicans to engage in contraband traffic.

On the 17th of March, 1858, the governor of Tamaulipas, under the extraordinary powers then existing, and with a view to remedying the "state of actual decadence" of the towns on the northern frontier of that State, promulgated a decree granting exemption from Federal customs duties to foreign goods destined for the consumption of Matamoros and other towns on the Rio Grande, Reynosa, Camargo, Mier, Guerra, and Monterey-Laredo, with the privilege of bonded warehouses. The trade between the towns named was in like manner exempt from federal duties. This decree ratified by the Mexican federal congress 30th July, 1861, initiated the Free Zone, which has since been extended as far westward as Nogales in Arizona.

Among the complex motives, therefore, which induced the establishment of the Zona Libre in 1858, the betterment of the condition of the Mexican population on the northern frontier, the removal of incentives to discontent and emigration, and the cessation of smuggling may be regarded as chief. And, while the conditions under which the Zona Libre affected the populations have very materially changed since our civil war, the markets on either side the border being now more nearly equalized and a condition of comparative prosperity and content prevailing along the Mexican border fostered by local development and by the through traffic along the railway lines now open, yet it is difficult to dissociate these modifying influences from the original impetus given to Mexican frontier progress in 1858, or to dislodge the belief prevalent in Mexico, that the content and prosperity of the Mexican border States is largely due to the especial conditions of favor under which the inhabitants of the Free Zone dwell.

From the Mexican point of view the Free Zone is regarded in widely variant lights. Many of the statesmen of that country view with concern the loss of federal revenue on foreign goods consumed in the Zone; the expensive and complex system of an interior customs line to prevent smuggling from the Zone into Mexico itself; and the doubtful constitutionality of an exemption from Federal burdens enjoyed by a part only of the territory of the Republic. It is probable, on the whole, that the retention of this complicated and burdensome system, whereby in effect the rest of Mexico is taxed to favor the inhabitants on the border, is due to a belief, felt rather than expressed, that the Zona Libre is at once the guaranty of loyalty and tranquillity along the Mexican frontier and a barrier to the encroachment of American influence among their people.

On the other hand, it is not at all clear that the abolition of the Zona Libre would induce a reversion to anything like the condition of inequality which existed when it was established in 1858.

Thirty-two years have brought about a great change in the relative conditions on either margin of the border. The spectacle no longer exists of a Mexican population on one side of an easily crossed river, impoverished, in the throes of political change and struggling under heavy burdens, confronted by a Mexican population on the other side recently emancipated by revolution and admitted by annexation after a bitterly contested war to the enjoyment of peace and plenty under the flag of the victors. In front of Mexico is now a homogeneous American nationality. The products of either country pass to and fro under reasonably equal conditions of price and in obedience to normal laws of supply and demand. So far as the inhabitants of the Zona Libre enjoy a privilege in comparison with other Mexicans, it is in respect of the foreign productions of Europe and other lands which they consume duty free, rather than as regards the staples of the United States.

Viewed from the American standpoint, the Zona Libre not only creates and stimulates an independent mercantile movement on the Mexican side, to the detriment of American markets of supply, but it affords opportunity for smuggling from Mexico into the United States. How far the latter consideration is weighty is a matter for examination and determination by the Treasury Department, for the facts of the case are immediately before it. It seems clear, however, that both of these considerations apply with major force to foreign products, and that the evils complained of most directly spring from the facilities for warehousing goods in bond along the frontier and for withdrawing them for immediate exportation or local consumption.

To the establishment of a system of bonded warehouses on the American side of the Rio Grande in 1852 the Zona Libre logically owes its origin. The privilege of transit in bond then ended with those warehouses. Now, however, a great change has been effected by the opening of the international railways. The bonded transit no longer ends at detached points on the Rio Grande. It passes beyond, and supplies the whole territory of Mexico with foreign goods. Nor are its operations confined to the inland border. By transshipment in bond in the ports of the United States foreign goods are carried to the Gulf ports of Mexico, whence by a rapidly extending net-work of railways they are distributed to the interior. Even now the territory of the Zona Libre is accessible by rail from Vera Cruz, and it is not difficult to conceive of its being more readily connected with Tampico by a transverse line of railways along the border.

The bill now before the Senate proposes to strike at the whole system of bonded transit to any part of Mexico. If that country were difficult of access by foreign goods except through the United States the step might be efficacious. But with a stretch of Gulf coast, connected by rail with the interior, it is probable that the immediate result would be the comparatively normal diversion of European trade with Mexico to lines of travel almost equally convenient with those now so largely followed by way of the territory and ports of the United States. On its face the measure is avowedly one of compulsion, its declared object being to procure the abolition by Mexico of the Zona Libre. Its effectiveness in this direction is at least open to doubt.

Operating directly and, at the outset, unfavorably against the whole of Mexico, and not against the particular limited area whence our grievance springs, the obvious hostility of the measure might readily provoke retaliation in equal or greater degree on the part of Mexico, and arouse a national sentiment in that country quite the contrary of that intended by the framers of the bill. The immediate stoppage of the large operations of bonded transit which have grown up since the opening of the international railways would be almost inevitably followed by diversion of that traffic to other channels from which it is doubtful if it could ever be completely restored to its original ways. Experience shows that a trade once lost is regained with difficulty, if ever. Moreover, we can not offer to Mexico the products of the United States in full substitution for those of other countries. The natural, axiomatic tendency of mankind is to buy in the cheapest market. One effect, and not a very indirect one, either, of the proposed enactment would be to invite an increased competition of foreign supplies, while perhaps at the same time creating obstacles, by the operation of national prejudice or through repressive retaliation on the part of Mexico, to trade in the productions of the United States.

It seems to me inexpedient to court retaliation and obstruction of mutually beneficial traffic at a time when the wisest counsels look to an enlargement of our commercial relations with Mexico and the initiation of greater intimacy in all of their operations of exchange. I can not but regard the commercial treaty negotiations of 1883 as merely dormant, and I should hesitate to advise any course which would prevent their revival at a fitting time. A measure (House resolution 73) has been recently introduced "to promote greater reciprocity in the commercial relations between the United States and Mexico." And I can not lose sight of the fact that in the absence of commercial treaty stipulations Mexico is free, under the influence of whatever provocation may seem to her sufficient, to decree at pleasure almost any obstruction to her material intercourse with the United States.

Viewing the Zona Libre as an objectionable incident in the relations of the two countries, of local operation and effect, and discerning also among Mexican statesmen a disposition to question its necessity and value, I am not without hopes that its abolition may be accomplished as part of a wholesale adjustment, by a comprehensive treaty, of the commercial relations of the United States and Mexico. If, however, positive measures of attack are necessary, I should preferably advise those which are as local in their effect as the evil of which our citizens of the border States complain. I can perceive no sound reason for interfering with the through bonded traffic of the United States with places and ports outside of the Zona Libre itself. It would seem more discreet, and equally practicable, to surround bonded transit for immediate or warehouse exportation to the free towns of the Zona Libre with suitable restrictions, and to greatly limit the privilege of bonded warehousing in our towns on the border.

I incline, therefore, to regard the bill, in its present form, as needlessly sweeping in character, and certain to interfere with a valuable established traffic, besides being likely to introduce injurious complications into our commercial relations with Mexico. I moreover doubt its effectiveness toward accomplishing the particular end in view.

Since the above reply to your inquiry was outlined I have received from Messrs. James E. Ward & Co., the agents of the New York, Cuba and Mexico Steamship Line, a letter under date of the 1st instant, in regard to the pending bill. I inclose a copy thereof for your information, together with my reply, in which I inform them that their letter has been communicated to you for consideration, inasmuch as the matter of which it treats comes primarily within the purview of your Department. In like manner I transmit copy of a letter dated 4th instant, addressed to me by Mr. Charles C. Beaman, of New York, in behalf of certain railway interests which, it is alleged, would be injured by the proposed enactment.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

The Honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Inclosures: 1. Senate Executive Document No. 130, Fiftieth Congress, first session. 2. From James E. Ward & Co., New York, March 1, 1890 (copy). 3. To James E. Ward & Co., New York, March 6, 1890 (copy). 4. From Charles C. Beaman, New York, March 4, 1890 (copy).

Mr. REAGAN. On the 11th of March the Secretary of the Treasury returned the bill under consideration to the Committee on Commerce with a letter addressed to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the chairman of the committee, which I request the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1890.

SIR: Referring to the communication from the clerk of your committee of the 8th of January last inclosing for an expression of my views thereon a copy of Senate bill 1642, to prevent the transportation of imported merchandise in bond through the territory of the United States into the Republic of Mexico so long as the so-called Zona Libre continues to be recognized by said republic, and to a communication from him of the 3d ultimo, to which I replied that it was thought proper to obtain the views of the Department of State thereon before reporting on the merits of the bill, I have the honor to reply that a communication has now been received from that Department, a copy of which is herewith inclosed.

It is probable that the passage of the bill might work to the advantage of those of our citizens living upon the immediate borders of the Zona Libre, but it is considered that this local advantage would be more than counterbalanced by serious injuries to the larger business interests of our citizens, and the not unlikely introduction of injurious complications into our commercial relations with Mexico.

In view of these considerations and the opinion expressed by the Secretary of State in the communication referred to, I doubt the wisdom of the proposed legislation.

Respectfully yours,

W. WINDOM, Secretary.

HON. WILLIAM P. FRYE,

Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I have given this correspondence to the Senate so that the reasons for opposing the passage of this bill may be fully before the body.

Before presenting the facts which caused me to present to the Senate the bill under consideration I desire to state that it seems to be somewhat singular that it should have been assumed by the Secretary of State, and, as he informs us, by Mr. Romero, the Mexican minister to the United States, that goods in bond in our custom-houses might be withdrawn from bond for consumption in the State of Texas, and so enable parties to smuggle them into Mexico, under the authority of the act of Congress of August 30, 1852, referred to by the Secretary of State, when in truth they could only be withdrawn from bond under that law for exportation to Mexico.

And it is not less surprising that the Secretary of State and the Mexican minister should assume that the act referred to caused discriminations against the interests of Mexico by allowing merchandise to pass through the ports and territory of the United States into the territory of Mexico free of duty. The effect of withdrawing such goods from bond was to allow them to pass into Mexico free of duty, except such as that republic might impose. And it does not appear to have occurred to the Secretary of the Treasury, who has charge of customs matters, to correct these erroneous assumptions.

The law did not allow such merchandise to be put upon sale in Texas or elsewhere in the United States without the payment of the customs dues. And if this act gave rise to smuggling, as it undoubtedly did, it was to the smuggling of the goods so allowed to pass free through our custom-houses and over our territory, back from Mexico into the United States, to be sold in competition with the goods of our own merchants, who had paid the required customs dues on their imported goods, so that instead of this legislation giving cause of complaint to our Mexican neighbors it inured to the special advantage of that country.

And when it is remembered that at that time duties on imports into Mexico had to be paid, except as to those exempted by our legislation, and that the same merchandise was again taxed in its passage from one Mexican State to another, it will be seen that the advantage our law gives the frontier States of Mexico, by allowing goods to be taken there free of duty, was very great, and was a special relief to those frontier States against the policy above referred to which then prevailed in Mexico.

This Free Zone, Zona Libre, covers the entire line of the frontier between the United States and Mexico from the mouth of the Rio Grande up that stream to El Paso, and along the southern boundary of New Mexico and Arizona to Lower California, some 2,000 miles in length, including the border cities and towns of Brownsville, Hidalgo, Rio Grande City, Carrizo, Laredo, Eagle Pass, Del Rio, and El Paso, and other towns in Texas, and Nogales and other towns in Arizona and New Mexico; several of these cities and towns are places of considerable population and business; and it covers the northern borders of the Mexican States of Tamaulipas, Nuevo Leon, Coahuila, Chihuahua, and Sonora, to Lower California, as shown by Senate Executive Document No. 130, first session, Fiftieth Congress, page 67, article 312. And the same page and article show this Zona Libre to be 20 kilometers wide, equal to a little less than 12½ miles, English measurement; to be exact, 12 miles and 755 yards. And Mr. Sutton, our consul-general on that border, estimates the Mexican population in that zone at about 100,000. (See page 27 of the document above referred to.)

After the war with Mexico and the annexation of Texas to the United States the duty on imports into Mexico were high, and added to this was the additional tax on merchandise carried from one Mexican State to another. And at that time the duties on imports into the United States were low, and there was no tax on merchandise passing from one State to another in this country. This made goods cheaper on the American than on the Mexican side of the boundary between the two countries.

This circumstance produced the condition of things referred to by Mr. Blaine in his letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, which I have read, which either "led to emigration from Mexico into Texas, or compelled the Mexicans to engage in contraband traffic." And this enabled the Mexican authorities to take advantage of our laws, authorizing the transportation of goods through our custom-houses, and over our territory into Mexico, to establish their Free Zone, and to admit such goods into it free of duty, while goods so transported into other parts of Mexico were required to pay import duty to the Mexican Government. And this enables the Mexicans in the Free Zone to sell goods which pay no import dues cheaper than citizens of the United States who had to pay import dues could sell like goods. This caused the increase of trade on the Mexican side of the border and its decrease on the side of the United States.

It caused the growth and prosperity of the Mexican towns in this Free Zone, while it produced languishing and decay in the towns on our side of the border. And, as I shall show more fully as I proceed, it enabled and induced Mexican citizens in the Free Zone, and unscrupulous citizens from the United States and other countries who went there for that purpose, to engage in smuggling goods into the United States and into the Mexican States beyond the Free Zone.

In the mean time the commercial legislation and the commercial condition of the two countries have greatly changed. Mexico has liberalized her policy by prohibiting, as I understand, the taxing of commerce going from one State to another, and rendered internal commercial intercourse there much less expensive than it was formerly; and the United States has adopted the illiberal and restrictive policy of imposing greatly higher duties on imports than were then required.

These conditions, in conjunction with the existence of the Free Zone, have made it impossible for our citizens on this boundary of about 2,000 miles along the borders of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona to engage successfully in commercial pursuits, having to pay duties on their imported goods, with the people of the Free Zone, who pay no duties on their imported goods. And it is impoverishing the people on our side of this national boundary, while it is enriching those on the Mexican side.

It is also a standing inducement to smuggling, immorality, lawlessness, and crime to the people on both sides of that boundary. It is contrary to a just public policy; it is contrary to sound morals; in its consequences it is injurious to the best interests of both countries, and ought no longer to be allowed to discredit the statesmanship and pollute the morals of people of both countries.

I have before me very many letters from responsible citizens on the Mexican border and many newspaper articles showing the great wrong that is being done to our merchants and people by the existence of this Free Zone. I request the Secretary to read a letter from Messrs. Lightbody & James, a respectable business firm at El Paso, Tex., inclosing to me a petition of bankers, merchants, and citizens of that city. I ask the Secretary to read both the letter and the petition.

The Secretary read as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., January 9, 1890.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find a copy of protest signed by the merchants and business men of El Paso; also a clipping from the El Paso Times, taken from the Sacramento Record-Union. Having been in business here since before the establishment of the Zona Libre (or free port of entry), we can assure you from bitter experience that our misfortune is not overstated. One instance will show this. Last summer an agent for a Japanese firm opened his samples at the Grand Central Hotel, and brought the merchants from across the river and sold them $14,000 in silk handkerchiefs, etc., while we were the only merchants on this side who bought, and our purchase was only about $200, and that was too much. If the Free Zone is to be permanent we will have to move across and let our customers smuggle back. El Paso will be principally a collection of grocery stores and huckster shops if we do not get relief, and we must look to our representatives for it. Hon. C. R. Morehead has already written you about this matter.

We earnestly hope you will succeed in your efforts to assist us in this matter. With kind regards, we are, very respectfully,

LIGHTBODY & JAMES.

I expect to be in Washington in February, and will be glad if I can call on you and represent this matter more fully.

W. M. JAMES,
Chairman Board of Trade.

Senator REAGAN,
Washington, D. C.

EL PASO, TEX., 20th December, 1889.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizen tax-payers of the United States, herewith most respectfully and urgently represent that the establishment of the Free Zone by the Mexican Government along the northern frontier of Mexico opens all the Mexican towns along said border to the importation, through the United States, of all classes of merchandise from foreign countries upon which no duty is paid either to the American or Mexican Governments. Said act creates a rendezvous where merchants from foreign countries are landing their free goods, take their time and opportunity to smuggle, or sell them to those who will smuggle, them into the United States.

Merchants from Vera Cruz and other foreign cities have opened large stock of foreign merchandise in convenient places in Paso del Norte for the purpose of supplying the American trade. They are advertising their advantages in our papers, and are pushing their wares throughout our country.

All other points in Mexico along this free border, as well as Paso del Norte, where there are railway facilities, have become harbors for smugglers, and every day's delay works a loss to the commerce of our country and revenues of the Government.

The reasons assigned for this act are admitted by the Mexican people to be, that it will build up their border towns, and check the growth of the American towns, thereby strengthening their border and weakening ours.

Therefore, it can not be possible for the merchants on the American side, as well as the jobbers and manufacturers in our large cities, to compete for the growing trade of Mexico, as against the jobbers and manufacturers of Europe.

We desire especially to call attention to the fact that a reciprocity treaty with Mexico without a special clause abolishing the Free Zone would not do away with the damaging effects to our merchants, manufacturers, and the revenues of the Government, for the reason that the merchants in the Free Zone could still buy their goods in Europe and place them in that territory without paying duty to either Government, whereas the merchants on the American side in case they bought their goods in Europe would have to pay the duty imposed by the United States or buy goods at home protected by our tariff.

Our manufacturers would be compelled to make extra discount over and above the prices charged home merchants, as some of them now do, in order to get their goods into the interior of Mexico, and could only sell a few articles in a limited way to the merchants in the Free Zone.

By the abolition of the Free Zone the merchants in said territory would have to pay the Mexican duty on their goods, which would be a bar against smuggling them into the United States.

We, as American citizens, feeling that we have the right to claim the consideration and protection of our Government, therefore pray, in case any treaty with Mexico is made, that they be required to abolish the Free Zone. If none is made, and in any event, we demand that an ample force of inspectors be placed along our border and kept there day and night, sufficient to suppress all smuggling into our territory, so that we may at least enjoy the legitimate trade of our own country to which our laws entitle us.

Hass, grocer; Rio Grande Pharmacy, wholesale and retail drugs; Ellis & Kingsbury, clothiers; Richard Caples, mayor of El Paso.

Mr. REAGAN. I also ask the Secretary to read two extracts from the El Paso Tribune newspaper.

The Secretary read as follows:

ON TO THE CAPITAL!—THAT IS THE CRY OF OUR MEXICAN BORDER MERCHANTS.

Just at present "On to the City of Mexico!" is the popular cry of business men residing on the Mexican side of the border along the entire length of the United States boundary line; and the proposed abolishment of the Zona Libre is the cause of the excitement. Every Mexican community in the Free Zone is hurrying off delegates to the City of Mexico to protest against any action looking toward the abolishment of the Zona Libre being taken by the Mexican Government. An Eagle Pass special to the San Antonio Express, says:

"The Zona Libre is attracting a good deal of attention in both republics at present, the desirability of its abolition being urged upon the United States Congress by merchants in cities on this side of the Rio Grande, whose interests, however, are not likely to be considered by the Mexican Government. A report was current to-day that a committee of the Mexican Congress had the subject under advisement. The fact seems to be, as indicated by a telegram received to-day, that the Mexican Government had asked the governors of the States interested to furnish information on the question. A meeting convened under the auspices of the board of trade (which most people supposed defunct), and consisting of leading merchants, will be held in Piedras Negras to-night, the idea being that each city interested should appoint one delegate and that the delegation wait upon President Diaz to urge upon him the importance of maintaining the Free Zone. This course is suggested from Paso del Norte."

[El Paso Tribune, January 30, 1890.]

A SMUGGLING CASE THAT DID NOT PAN OUT AS WELL AS ANTICIPATED.

Pete Zimmerman, who was to make a balloon ascension at the base-ball park on Sunday evening, met with an experience last evening that he did not anticipate. Pete was a hack-driver for M. A. Dolan, and went across the river with a load of passengers yesterday afternoon. Somehow or other, during his stay in Juarez, he managed to get sixteen boxes of cigars and a silk-dress pattern into the "boot" of his hack, and on returning to this side, about 7:30 o'clock, was stopped by the inspector at the bridge and asked if he had any goods on which duty should be paid in the hack, to which a negative reply was made, and the hackman was allowed to drive on. Pete proceeded on his way, and on reaching the city proper he drove to a prominent saloon and ordered some drinks for two women who were in the hack. While the bar-tender was mixing the drinks a mounted inspector rode up and searched the hack, finding the smuggled goods mentioned above. Zimmerman, seeing he was in a "bad hole," made his escape and has not been seen since, while the inspector proceeded to confiscate the goods and the hack also. The women, when questioned, denied any knowledge of the goods being in the hack, and were released, while the cigars and dress pattern were taken to the custom-house and the hack to the transfer stables.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not tax the patience of the Senate by reading the many other letters and extracts from newspapers which lie before me illustrative of what I have said on this subject.

The statement I have made of this case shows that it is the duty of Congress to take such action as will protect our people against this intolerable wrong.

The Secretary of State seems to apprehend that the passage of the bill under consideration might disturb our friendly relations with Mexico. That would imply that we could only have the friendship of that country by submitting to gross wrong. I think such an assumption as unjust to Mexico as to our own country. It is to the interest of both countries to cultivate the closest reciprocal relations of friendship, amity, and commerce.

This great purpose can only be successfully accomplished by each being just to the other. It would be a gross breach of friendly relations for either to demand as a condition of friendship that the other should submit to an injustice so flagrant and gross as is the existence of this Free Zone to the interests of the people of the United States.

I have seen extracts from the Two Republics newspaper, published in the City of Mexico, in which it was assumed that the bill before us was introduced in a spirit of hostility to Mexico. Nothing could be further from the truth, so far as I am concerned. I have none but the most friendly feelings for our sister republic. Some years ago when the desire to acquire territory from Mexico and Central America by filibustering was rife in this country, and seemed to be almost general in the part of the Union where I lived, I risked my political fortunes by opposing and denouncing it as wrong to those countries and unjust and immoral.

I do not think Mexico has had, or now has, a better friend in this country than I have been and am. And what I seek to do by this bill is to remove a cause of disturbance of these friendly relations and to cement and perpetuate the friendly relations between the two countries by the adoption of a measure which shall lead to the removing of this obstacle, and remove the cause for such complaints of injustice as now come to us in relation to this Free Zone.

We are furnished by the Secretary of State with the letter of James E. Ward & Co., of New York City, written by Mr. Charles C. Beaman, of the firm of Evarts, Choate & Beaman, counsel of the Texas and Mexican Railway Company and of the Mexican National Railway, in which it is alleged that—

This Mexican National road has been built and is operated to a very considerable extent upon the reliance and expectation that it would be able to do considerable business in the carrying of merchandise imported at the port of Corpus Christi and passing from there in bond over the Texas and Mexican Railroad to the Mexican line, and in that way delivered in Mexico.

And it is alleged in this letter that if this bill should become a law it would be a great damage both to the Texas-Mexican Railway and to the Mexican National Railroad.

The Secretary of State has also forwarded with his letter a letter from James E. Ward & Co., of New York City, "agents of the New York and Mexican Steam-Ship Line," protesting against the passage of the bill under consideration. In this letter it is assumed in substance that the withdrawal of the privilege of transporting merchandise in bond into Mexico "would affect Mexican interests to a very small extent, but would be a serious injury to various American steam-ship and railroad lines."

It should be held in mind that this bill only proposes to withdraw the privilege of carrying goods in bond into Mexico until this Free Zone shall be abolished, and that then the President of the United States shall issue his proclamation restoring the privilege "as now permitted by law."

These letters, in effect, ask us to assume that if we will not consent to the violation of international comity and to the sacrifice of the rights of the American people by the perpetuation of this Free Zone Mexico will inflict on her people the injury of refusing to allow the taking of merchandise coming through our ports into her territory in bond. I do not think it too strong a statement to say that the assumption is preposterous and that argument is not necessary to refute it.

Another assumption of these letters, in effect, is that this Government must abandon the duty of protecting the rights of the American people along a line of some 2,000 miles of frontier, the whole southern border of the United States, and allow the people on the Mexican side of that border to prosper by sacrificing the interests of our own people, as a means of promoting the supposed interests of two railroad companies and one steam-ship company. This assumption is so monstrous that I can not suppose it will receive the sanction of the Senate.

The injury done to the people of that border from year to year is no doubt vastly greater than the amount of business these companies do in the transportation of such merchandise, leaving out of view the duty of the Government to protect the rights of its own citizens and the standing inducement this Free Zone offers to the citizens of both Mexico and the United States to engage in smuggling and kindred crimes.

The business done by these railroads and this steam-ship company with the people of the Free Zone bears no just comparison to the injury inflicted on the people on the American side of that line. And the suggestion that the rights of the people there should be sacrificed for such a purpose is unreasonable, selfish, and unpatriotic.

It is suggested in the letter of the Secretary of State, in substance, that this bill should be local in its effect; that is, that it should be limited in its effect to this Free Zone, so as not to interfere with the through bonded traffic to other parts of Mexico. This is a valuable suggestion, and I will lay before the Senate a substitute for the pending bill, limiting its effect to prohibition of the transporting of such merchandise into the Free Zone, but not interfering with such transportation into other parts of Mexico.

I beg at this time to present a bill as an amendment to the original bill, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and appended to my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The substitute bill is as follows:

A bill to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into the Zona Libre along the northern border of the Republic of Mexico, and to restore that privilege when said Zona Libre shall be abolished by the authorities of Mexico.

Be it enacted, etc., That after thirty days from the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to transport any merchandise in bond through the ports or territory of the United States into the Zona Libre or Free Zone of the Republic of Mexico; and any person, firm, or corporation violating the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than $1,000, and to imprisonment to a term not exceeding one year. But this act shall not be construed to prohibit the transportation of such merchandise into any part of the territory of Mexico where duties on imports are required to be paid by that country. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That if the Republic of Mexico shall at any time abolish said Zona Libre, and shall give notice of that fact to the President of the United States, he shall, upon the receipt of said notice, by proclamation restore the right to transport merchandise through the ports and territory of the United States in bond into any part of the territory of the Republic of Mexico as now permitted by law.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, together with the substitute which I have submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 2, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 1st day of July, 1890.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 1, 1890.

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some understanding in regard to the time which shall be allowed for debate on the several amendments which may be offered to this bill. A number of members upon this side of the House and upon the other who are opposed to this bill desire to have certain amendments submitted and to have a yea-and-nay vote upon them before 3 o'clock to-morrow; but if the debate is to be unlimited upon any particular amendment or amendments we can hardly have those votes.

Gentlemen on this side of the House, I understand, have three or four important amendments that they desire to submit in addition to the one that is pending. If possible, I would like to have an understanding as to the length of time that is to be allowed for debate upon each one of those amendments, and for the purpose of reaching that result I ask unanimous consent that fifteen minutes upon each side be allowed for debate on the pending amendment, and that then a vote be taken, and that thereafter, when an amendment is offered by the minority of the committee, only fifteen minutes' debate shall be allowed on each side, after which we shall have a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the five-minute rule still to govern?

Mr. SPRINGER. The five-minute rule still to govern.

Mr. LODGE. Say twenty minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will accept that.

Mr. LODGE. But that is to apply only to the pending amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will submit the request separately with reference to the pending amendment in order to have that settled first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment shall be closed after twenty minutes have been occupied in debate on each side.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew the request that upon subsequent amendments debate shall be closed after twenty minutes have been occupied on each side.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I object. If you will only give other members a chance to be heard there will be time enough for all.

Mr. SPRINGER. You mean this side of the House?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. No; you individually. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not consumed two minutes upon this question. The record will show it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is to be addressed as "the gentleman from Illinois," and that personal dialogues are not strictly parliamentary, though sometimes indulged in on the floor of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire before the debate begins to ask consent that the bill be reprinted with the amendments of yesterday, as I find there is a demand for it in that form.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why not let the reprint cover also the amendments of to-day?

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be reprinted as it stands at the close of the day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MILLS. What is the understanding, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the debate on this amendment? I understand that it is twenty minutes on either side and then a vote.

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes on each side and then a vote.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the time be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on the one side and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] on the other?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already promised that he would give the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] five minutes, and hopes that that arrangement may not be interfered with.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I shall be glad, so far as I am concerned, to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the fourth section of Article I of the Constitution is as follows:

The time, place, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed by each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Under this clause of the Constitution of the United States it is claimed by the friends of the pending bill that Congress has the constitutional power to enact it into a law and enforce its execution.

It will be seen that the power of Congress under the foregoing provision is exactly the same to "make or alter" regulations in a State for the election of Senators as for the election of Representatives, "except as to the places of choosing Senators."

It is clear that Congress, under this clause of the Constitution, can prescribe the time when Senators and Representatives shall be chosen; that was done years ago; practically Congress could not "make or alter" regulations as to the place of holding elections for Representatives. That of course has never been and never will be attempted. Congress has already by law made "regulations" as to the "manner" of electing Senators and Representatives, and has prescribed as to the election of Senators, with reference to the vote in the two houses and of the vote in the two houses in joint session, that in the election of Senators the vote of the members of the Legislature shall be viva voce and the vote of the people in the election of Representatives shall be by ballot. Congress has also prescribed by law that Representatives shall be elected by districts, and not on a general ticket. These are all manifestly "regulations" as to the "manner" in which Senators and Representatives shall be chosen. No one disputes the power of Congress to prescribe such regulations, for the section above quoted clearly contemplated such regulations.

But the question, in part, presented by this bill is, can Congress not only prescribe rules as to the procedure in these elections of Senators and Representatives, but through its own agents take charge of these elections and decide and declare the result; organize returning boards in the Legislatures and Congressional districts of the several States? This is certainly a new and startling question after more than a century of government under the Constitution of the United States. This clause of the Constitution gave rise in a large degree to the heated opposition which the Constitution encountered when it was originally submitted to the States for ratification. It was contended by the enemies of the Constitution that it conferred on Congress the power to regulate and control the election of the Representatives in Congress in the several States.

The friends of the Constitution, on the other hand, contended that this fourth section of Article I only conferred on Congress the power to "regulate the manner of holding the elections of Representatives," not the power to hold the elections through agents designated or provided for by Congress; that the "holding" of the elections was to be under the exclusive control of the respective States, but Congress might, by law, prescribe the "manner" in which the election should be held; for instance, whether the voting should be "by ballot or viva voce," whether by general ticket or by districts; also as to the form of the certificate attesting the result of the election; and it is absolutely certain that the Constitution was adopted upon that interpretation of this section.

It is equally certain, judging from the records of that important period of our history, that if it had been understood by the several States that under this section Congress was to be invested with the power to enact laws under which the Federal Government should, through its own agents, hold the elections of Representatives and control them and verify the result in derogation of the rights of the States over their local affairs, the Constitution would never have been adopted. The reason is obvious; the men of that period were jealous of delegated power, intensely vigilant in the maintenance of all of their rights of local government, and implacably hostile to any tendency to consolidate Federal power.

It is an instructive fact that for more than half a century after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States no attempt was ever made by Congress to interfere in any manner whatever with the election of members of Congress. Judge Story, the eminent jurist, in his Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, on this clause and the possible improper use by this power of regulation, says:

The most that can be urged, with any show of argument, is, that the power might, in a given case, be employed in such a manner as to promote the election of some favorite candidate, or favorite class of men, in exclusion of others, by confining the places of election to particular districts, and rendering it impracticable for the citizens at large to participate in the choice. (Volume I, paragraph 820.)

It never occurred to the eminent judge that the power of Congress might "be employed" in actually taking charge of elections for the benefit of "a favorite class of men."

This eminent jurist saw no danger of an arbitrary attempt of Congress to wrest the words used in this clause of the Constitution from their ordinary meaning to an improper purpose, and he exults in the fact that up to the time when he wrote his great work on the Constitution no such attempt had ever been made. He says:

A period of forty years has since passed by without any attempt by Congress to make any regulations, or interfere in the slightest degree with the election of members of Congress.

The States now regulate the time, the place, and the manner of elections in a practical sense exclusively. (Volume I, paragraph 826.)

The first attempt of Congress to exercise any power under this fourth section of Article I was in 1842, when, on the 25th of June of that year, the following provision became law, being the second section of the act to apportion the Representatives among the States on the basis of the census of 1840.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in every case where a State is entitled to more than one Representative, the number to which each State shall be entitled under this apportionment shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory, equal in number to the number of Representatives to which said State may be entitled, no one district electing more than one Representative.

Even that provision requiring Representatives to be elected by districts encountered fierce opposition on the ground that it was an impertinent interference of Congress in the affairs of the States, and it was adopted by the close vote of 101 to 99. The two greatest men of that House (Twenty-seventh Congress), John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, and Nathan Clifford, of Maine, the two greatest men either of those States have as yet produced, the one afterwards Senator and candidate of the Free Soilers for President, the other afterwards Attorney-General and a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, voted against it.

While the measure was originally pending in the House, Mr. Atherton, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Ferris, of New York, and many other members, denounced the measure as an impertinent intermeddling by Congress with the local affairs of the people.

These speeches expressed the ground on which the measure was opposed. Gentlemen will understand the spirit which animated the House of Representatives at that time against the interference of Congress in the local affairs of the States when it is remembered that many of the States were then electing their Representatives by districts instead of general ticket; and this measure was adopted only to secure uniformity in the elections.

New Hampshire, Georgia, and other States refused to obey this order of Congress and elected their Representatives to the next Congress (the Twenty-eighth Congress) on general ticket. When the Twenty-eighth Congress met an attempt, of course unsuccessful, was made to exclude the Representatives so elected, and a protest was made against the legality of their election. The following extracts from speeches made in the House express the spirit of the public men of that period and their indignation at any attempt of Congress to meddle with the local affairs of their States:

John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, said:

He and his colleagues had come here in virtue of the laws of New Hampshire, laws which had been in force ever since her government had been established; and he had never been able to find any law of that State to divide it into districts for the election of members of Congress. To be sure, she had seen in the legislation of Congress an act commanding her Legislature to divide the State into districts, but New Hampshire has not been in the habit of looking to Congress or any other body under God's heavens to ascertain what her legislation should be. Standing here, then, under the guaranty of the Constitution, and bringing with them the same evidence of their rights to their seats as was brought by other members, all that they asked was that the House would not take the extraordinary course of entertaining an argument against him (referring to the protest) which he was not allowed to reply to; that it would not even by implication prejudice this question, but would leave it open for fair and manly discussion.

Andrew Kennedy, of Indiana, a famous Congressman of that day, from the Fort Wayne district of the State, who was a member of the preceding Congress, said:

The Twenty-seventh Congress, of which I was a member, attempted a law directing the States how they should elect their Members of Congress and Senators.

He said "attempted," because there never was any such law that had any binding effect. The Congress of the United States had no power to pass any such law. It was a nullity; and he declared when it was passed he should so treat it. He had occasion in the last Congress to give his vote on this law, and he then said that he hoped he should live long enough to spurn it and trample it under his feet. He came from a State that elected her members of Congress by districts—and this was very proper, because it was her pleasure to do so; but if she had elected her members by the general ticket system, and had, in obedience to that command of Congress, adopted the district system, he would have scorned to hold a seat here.

There was one view of this question which was of no little importance. The people throughout the country had looked at that mandamus act and had put the seal of condemnation upon it; and nowhere, he believed, was it more odious than in his State. Of the members then in Congress from Indiana, solitary and alone he voted against that law, and solitary and alone of that number he came back to this Congress. Those from his State who had voted for it had been left at home in oblivion. Much as he had cause of rejoicing for the success of his party and his principles, he could truly say that it gave him more joy of heart than anything else that he had the privilege of seeing that law set aside.

Indiana then had seven Representatives in Congress.

These speeches, and there were many of them, simply show the hostility of the people and their Representatives in Congress forty-eight years ago to any intermeddling of Congress with matters local to the States. As a matter of fact the States at that time were rapidly adopting the system of selecting their Representatives by districts. Indiana and the greater number of the States had already done so, and New Hampshire and the other States would undoubtedly have soon adopted that policy, for it is manifestly the better policy, holding the Representative to a closer responsibility to the people who elected him and securing a juster representation of every section of the State; it was a "manner" of electing Representatives over which Congress clearly had the power of supervision under the fourth section of Article I of the Constitution. It was the unnecessary and impertinent interference of Congress that called forth the vigorous protest.

The passage of that act of 1842 by the Congress which came into power with President William Henry Harrison was one of the measures that hastened the downfall of the Whig party, a great and honorable party and valuable to the country in all else than a tendency to enlarge the Federal power at the expense of the just and constitutional rights of the States.

Now, sir, Congress has fixed as a rule (with some exceptions) the time when Representatives in Congress should be elected; also the "manner" of voting; that is, by "secret ballot." This seems to exhaust the power of Congress over the subject except that Congress, as to such matters of regulating the "manner" of electing Representatives in Congress, may in its discussion modify, alter, or repeal any of its acts of regulating the "manner" of such elections heretofore enacted.

Congress has gone further. By the acts of 1871, as parts of the "reconstruction measures" now incorporated into the Revised Statutes of the United States under the title of "The Elective Franchise," Congress has authorized a "supervision" over the election of Representatives in Congress by a chief supervisor, by supervisors, and by deputy marshals, but the powers conferred do not extend to any control of the elections. The general drift of those acts of Congress are expressed and restricted by the following two sections:

SEC. 2028. No person shall be appointed a supervisor of election or a deputy marshal under the preceding provisions who is not at the time of his appointment a qualified voter of the city, town, county, parish, election district, or voting precinct in which his duties are to be performed.

SEC. 2029. The supervisors of election appointed for any county or parish in any Congressional district, at the instance of ten citizens, as provided in section 2011, shall have no authority to make arrests, or to perform other duties than to be in the immediate presence of the officers holding the election and to witness all their proceedings, including the counting of the votes and the making of a return thereof.

These provisions have at least the merit of requiring the supervisors and deputy marshals to be voters of the neighborhood where they exercise their authority, and simply in that case report to the chief supervisor what was done. I admit that in some of its provisions the law is more arbitrary than this; yet on the whole it is simply inquisitorial, and does not attempt to take control of the election, ignore the officers authorized by the laws of the State to conduct the election, and make a final decision as to the result.

At the time this law was enacted the country was just fairly emerging from a great war, the colored people had been enfranchised, and the dominant section of the Union would naturally acquiesce in any legislation intended to carry out the radical changes that had been made in the political and domestic affairs of the region of country then recently in revolt against the Federal Government. Under any other circumstances or conditions those acts of Congress would have aroused the fierce indignation of the whole people. They have never been enforced in a Northern section of the Union without exciting the resentment of the people.

Those former acts of Congress of the reconstruction period, arbitrary as they are, at least have the merit of leaving the elections in the several States and the ascertainment and certification of the result under the control of the States. I have thought the foregoing statement necessary to a fair understanding of the pending bill.

THE PENDING BILL—WHAT DOES IT PROPOSE TO DO?

The pending bill, No. 11045, "to amend and supplement the election laws of the United States and to provide for the more efficient enforcement of such laws, and for other purposes," proposes an absolute and complete change in our system of government. For over a hundred years our government has been administered upon the theory that the people themselves were the only safe depository of political power, that the people themselves in their townships, villages, towns, counties, parishes, and States should control all public affairs which could, under our system of government, be brought within their reach. Hence, for more than a hundred years all elections, local and Federal, have been under the control of the people of each community, exercising their authority under the laws of their respective States.

All this is to be reversed by the pending bill if it becomes a law. The Federal Government, by its agents, is to take charge of the elections. A separate system of the Federal Government, where members of Congress are to be elected, is to be established and the people in their primary organizations completely ignored. And a system as remote from the people as can be devised is to take the place of a system which brought the affairs of Government as nearly under the control of the people as possible.

Let us see. Under this bill a circuit judge appointed by the President and holding his office for life will appoint in each of the several States of his circuit a chief supervisor, this chief supervisor to hold his office for life. This chief supervisor, whenever requested to do so by "one hundred persons claiming to be citizens of the United States, and residents and qualified voters in the city or Congressional district," or by "fifty persons claiming to be citizens of the United States, and residents and qualified voters of any county or parish of any Congressional district," shall notify a United States circuit judge of his judicial district, no matter in what State the judge may live, "that he has business to present to such court in respect to the ensuing election," and the judge shall open such circuit court "at the most convenient place in such judicial district, and keep it open until the day succeeding the election."

And the election shall be guarded, scrutinized, and supervised in the manner herein set forth. With the circuit court of the United States in continuous session this chief supervisor of the State shall certify to the court lists of persons for appointment as supervisors of elections, and the court shall appoint "such number as the chief supervisor shall believe to be sufficient." No limit to the number! But the number of these supervisors shall not "be less than double the whole number of supervisors which each such city, or town, county, or parish, or entire Congressional district is entitled to the service of."

Then the chief supervisor assigns these supervisors to their field of operation. Three are to be assigned to each field of duty, "but two of whom shall be of the same political party." Of course the third may be of any political party, Democrat, Mugwump, Prohibitionist, Labor Reform, or of any other political party that may best suit the purposes of the chief supervisor; but the chief supervisor may at any moment in his discretion suspend any supervisor and fill his place by another. He names the chairman of the three supervisors, who is in fact invested with absolute control. He finally announces the result of any given count of voters in the election.

In addition to this autocratic power conferred by the bill on the chief supervisor in the selection of supervisors to do his bidding, he may require the United States marshals to appoint a number of deputy marshals to aid him in controlling the elections in his State only limited by his will. The provision of the bill in this respect is as follows:

Special deputy marshals, when required by the chief supervisor of elections, shall aid and assist the supervisors of elections in making the house canvass provided for by this act; the number of special deputy marshals who may, under any provision of law, be appointed for election purposes shall be determined from time to time at conferences between the marshal and the chief supervisor of elections, and no other or greater number of special deputy marshals shall be appointed than the chief supervisor of elections shall from time to time certify to be in his opinion necessary to observe the manner in which the election officers [of the State] are discharging their duties to enforce the election laws of the United States and to prevent frauds and irregularities in naturalization.

Despotic government could hardly go further than this bill does in investing irresponsible power in a satrap. The United States circuit judge shall appoint as many supervisors as he may deem necessary, and the United States marshal shall appoint as many deputy marshals as he may deem necessary, and these supervisors and deputy marshals are under his absolute control.

Before the elections they are to be employed in overhauling and correcting the registrations in States where the registration of voters is required and in overhauling the records of the naturalization of foreign-born citizens and in watching the proceedings of the courts in cases of naturalization. Spies and public informers in the discreditable work of finding technical defects in the naturalization of citizens to deprive them of the right of suffrage! A mean, petty system of espionage on the citizens of our country! See how elegantly this system of spies and informers, this debasing espionage on the courts of justice, is expressed:

Fourteenth. To observe and scrutinize the manner in which naturalizations are made and to aid the court in the matter of preventing fraudulent naturalizations, and for these purposes to have at all times free access to all rooms where such proceedings are being conducted.

Has any government, no matter how despotic, ever before appointed spies to watch the proceedings of its courts of justice?

How steadily history repeats itself. The Know-Nothing crusade of 1854, the most infamous incident in our history, came from New England, and now in a new form and under the sanction of law proposes to renew its old-time proscription and intolerance of persons of foreign birth. It will be interesting to see how gentlemen representing large constituencies of foreign birth, who by an invitation have come to our shores and have become citizens of the Republic and upheld its flag in the late war with invincible courage, will vote on this question.

When this machinery to control the elections is fully organized except as to the returning board, this chief of supervisors of the elections shall, "on or before the 1st day of September next following this act, cause a judge of the circuit court of the United States in his judicial district to be informed in writing that it is necessary that the circuit court should be opened;" and it shall be the duty of the circuit judge "so informed" to open a court in his judicial district on or before the 1st day of October next following, and he shall hold a court in his judicial district at a place "most convenient for him," and shall appoint "three persons of good standing and repute," "residents of the State," "who shall be known as the United States board of canvassers of the Congressional vote within and for the State for which they shall be appointed."

They shall hold their office for life and not more than two of them shall be of the same political party. The third, of course, will be a Mugwump, Prohibitionist, Reformer, Democrat, as the chief supervisor shall determine. "Each shall receive a salary of $15 per day" and "$5 per day for their personal expenses," with a clerk at $12 per day. They shall convene at such place in their State "as shall be most convenient for them," but at a place where a circuit court of the United States shall be held, so that in Indiana this returning board would sit at Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, Evansville, or New Albany, being the four places in Indiana where a circuit court of the United States is held.

The returns of the supervisors of each election in the cities, towns, counties, and parishes or districts, as the case might be, and their count of the vote at the election under their charge, in which "they shall conduct" said elections "as provided by the laws of the State in which the election is held, save when the same are modified, annulled, or changed by the laws of the United States," shall ultimately go through the clerk's office of the United States of the judicial district to this returning board, sitting at such place where a circuit court is held "most convenient to them."

This returning board shall at their leisure ascertain the result, and shall, among other things, declare and certify their decision as to who was elected to Congress by the given district under their charge to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and then this extraordinary bill proceeds as follows:

SEC. 16. Upon the receipt by the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the declaration and certificate of any United States board of canvassers of the Congressional vote as to the election of any Representative or Delegate in Congress it shall be the duty of that officer to open and file the same in his office. If by such declaration and certificate it shall appear that another and different person has been elected as a Representative or Delegate in Congress than the person certified as elected by such officer or officers of the State in which such Congressional district is situated, whose duty it is by the laws of the State to make such certificate, then the person so certified as elected by the declaration and certificate of the United States board of canvassers shall be, by the said Clerk of the House of Representatives, placed upon the rolls of persons elected as Representatives or Delegates in Congress, and the provisions of existing law respecting the names of persons who shall be placed upon the roll of the House of Representatives by the Clerk thereof are modified to the extent herein provided, and to such extent only. Any Clerk of the House of Representatives who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to place upon the roll of Representatives and Delegates elect the name of any person entitled to be placed thereon as provided by the laws of the United States, shall be liable to arrest, and upon conviction of such neglect, failure, or refusal, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall be forever disqualified from holding thereafter any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

This bill bristles with extraordinary and arbitrary provisions as, for instance, in the case of the challenge of a voter, referring to a "statutory" oath (whether Federal or State is not stated), the chairman of the supervisors is to proceed as follows:

Seventh. To require the statutory oath or oaths to be immediately put to any voter whose right to vote shall be challenged, and in case the State, Territorial, or local election officers shall neglect or refuse to immediately put such oath or oaths, and to at once pass upon the qualifications of any such challenged person, then it shall be the duty of the chairman of the supervisors, or in his absence the duty of either of his associates who may be present, to, without delay, put such oath or oaths, whereupon the supervisors of election present shall promptly pass upon the qualifications of such person.

I will not enter into further details of this bill of seventy-two pages of complicated and arbitrary provisions, overriding State laws and placing the ballot-box under Federal control, an unexampled instance of the distrust of a great party of the capacity of the people to control their own affairs.

It is the most outspoken expression of "Federalism," a distrust of the people to carry on their own government, that has appeared in Congress since the "alien and sedition laws" were enacted—laws which the people at the earliest opportunity branded as monarchical and infamous.

Instead of keeping political power closely under the control of the people, it organizes a power above and beyond the people, irresponsible to the people, to control and regulate their most important affairs—the election of men to carry on their Government.

Does any man believe that a chief supervisor of elections, appointed for life by a circuit judge appointed by the President for life, with power to appoint subordinates with ample salaries without limit, is a safer repository of power than the people in their primary organizations of towns, cities, counties, parishes, and States? If so, republican government is a failure. Does not every man know that this scheme of Federalism would riot in dishonesty and corruption from the very beginning?

It is claimed by the Republicans that our States of the North will not be humiliated or dishonored by this system of Federal elections being applied to them. But why not? The mercenary motive offered by this bill may, in the early future, put it in operation in every State in the Union. There are, unfortunately, in all our States people whose sense of public virtue would hardly resist these salaries, ranging from $5 per day to $20 per day, and the great salary in fees and perquisites which this bill proposes to pay to the autocrat of our elections, the chief supervisor.

It is said that this Federal interference in elections is necessary to protect in the right of voting the colored people of the South. But will this Federal interference be beneficial to the colored people? We meet almost daily in this city with colored people from the South who give us assurance of the prosperity and progress of their race in the Southern States. According to official statistics they are gradually becoming property-owners to a greater or less extent in every Southern State, to a much greater extent than in the States of the North, numbers considered. Now, why should we by Federal interference imperil and interrupt the progress of the colored race in the South? Their destiny is interwoven with the white race. You only provoke a war of the races by your selfish partisan policy. The progress of the colored race in the South during the twenty-five years of their liberty is simply wonderful, considering that they have so recently emerged from the slavery of centuries. Will you interrupt this progress and create fierce antagonism between the races to obtain a mean partisan advantage?

There are, unfortunately, inequalities in the representation of our people in almost every State. In Maine, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and many other States the Democrats, by a system of unjust and dishonorable districting of the States for the election of Congressmen, are absolutely excluded from any participation in the affairs of the Federal Government. During the last thirty years the Democrats have for more than half the time been absolutely excluded in Massachusetts by a crafty system of districts from any voice in Congress. All men must see that these inequalities in representation can only be corrected by the growth, always going on, of the sentiment of justice and honor in the people of the several States of the Union in matters pertaining to partisan contests. Federal interference will not advance, but will delay, the hour when all citizens will be fairly represented in the Congress of the United States.

How can you excuse or justify this conflict between the States and Federal Government in control of the elections at this particular period? A suspicion will arise that you have seized upon this occasion to defeat the valuable reforms the States have inaugurated during the last two years to purify the ballot-box. Two years ago, in the election of President and members of Congress, the corrupt use of money to influence the results of the elections was well known to all men. That vast sums of money, collected in sections of the Union where capital had been enormously increased by the special protection of its industries by acts of Congress, were used in other sections of the Union to corrupt the ballot-box, is known to all men. To arrest this system of corruption has been the special effort of many of the States since the election of 1888.

There is not one paragraph in this bill which even attempts to correct that evil in our elective system, but the bill as a whole renders abortive all of these worthy efforts of the States to secure honest elections. A horde of mercenaries are to supervise and control our elections, and all these efforts at honest elections are to be defeated. And all this on the dishonest pretense of securing to every man the right to vote and have his vote counted. "O, Shame, where is thy blush?"

This bill, this wretched combination of federalism and know-nothingism, both outgrowths of the politics of New England, both of which isms have heretofore received the merited condemnation of the American people, may become a law. No period in our time has exhibited such a subservency of the majority controlling the House to its leader as the present. Both federalism and know-nothingism were condemned by the American people long ago, because both were destitute of true patriotism and both were un-American. The bill seeks to revive federalism and know-nothingism as forces in our political system, the one condemned and rejected early in the present century by our fathers, the founders of the Republic, the other in more recent years by the enlightened judgment of the American people, as unpatriotic, un-American, and unfriendly to our republican form of government.

This bill if it shall pass the House will be passed under the dictation of a few party leaders, animated by the mean hope of a party advantage. It may become a law and remain the law for a time, for in contempt of the right of the people to govern it makes appropriations absolutely permanent for the pay of the horde of mercenaries it will call into the Federal service, but if it does become a law the future historian will write that it struck a deadly blow at the free institutions of the American Republic and was only unsuccessful in its purpose because it was ignominiously ignored by the people or because they indignantly commanded its prompt repeal.

Mr. Speaker, the proposition now pending does not seem to be an unreasonable one if this bill must become a law. The genius of our system of government is against special, partial, and class legislation, and if it is proper for this measure to become a law and to be enforced at all it ought to be made applicable to the whole Union. Then the character and effect of the measure would be understood by the whole people and a just public judgment pronounced against it.

But, sir, judging from the expressions already heard in the House, there is no justification of this measure. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. EWART], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. COLEMAN]—honorable men, and Republicans, and others of the South—the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER], Mr. ALLEN and Mr. BURROWS, from the State of Michigan and others, Republicans and honorable men, away up in the North, all insist that this measure shall not be applicable to their districts, and no gentleman has yet risen on the floor of the House and admitted that this measure, if it should become a law, should apply to his district.

Indeed, sir, from the nature of the measure no gentleman would be willing to make an admission that this bill if it becomes a law should be understood by his people as applicable to them; for this measure is arbitrary and insulting and its tyrannical provisions could only be justified on the assumption of the corruption of the people and their incapacity for government. It seems to embody two ideas in government, both of which have received the unqualified condemnation of the people of our country: the one, old-time federalism, which was signally struck down when the alien and sedition laws were repealed—a measure consigned to infamy by our fathers; and the other, the know-nothingism of more modern times, intolerant and tyrannical, the very memory of which is a national dishonor. This measure, a cross between the two, federalism and know-nothingism, is repudiated by every member of the House as to his own district. Those who have spoken from the South, as well as those who have spoken from the North, condemn with equal emphasis the application of this proposed law to their districts. Gentlemen from every section of the Union demand the right of the people of their districts to manage their own affairs. And, sir, of all the gentlemen present, Republicans and Democrats, I think I may safely say not one of you will rise and declare that he thinks this bill, if it shall become a law, should have any application whatever to his Congressional district.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. I rise to say that I want it in my district. Mr. HOLMAN. Well, there is one; and you will see to it that fifty or one hundred men—mercenaries, spies on the courts of justice, to watch over your naturalizations and control your elections, shall be furnished by Federal authority to put the law in operation in your district! I do not envy the gentleman. Who else of the three hundred and thirty members desires that this law of espionage upon your courts of justice in proceedings of naturalization, this bill which ignores your people and their local authorities, this measure which gives control of local affairs to a power not emanating from the people, shall regulate and control the affairs of his district? But one—one gentleman, "solitary and alone," of all the three hundred and thirty members of this House—announces that this measure of federalism and know-nothingism ought to be made applicable to his Congressional district. I do not envy the gentleman his position. And I predict that my friend's district, when he goes before it and informs the people there of the character of this measure, will repudiate him with signal unanimity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a person listening to the debate on this question for a number of days past would have gone away from the House with the idea that this measure was local, was being passed simply for one portion of these United States. I have read the bill carefully, studied its provisions, and I rise here to say that I support it because I want it for my district. I rise to say that I support it because I want it for the city a part of which I represent on this floor.

Mr. FLOWER. You need something. Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. The gentleman is right; we do "need something." And it seems the Democrats in the last campaign, when they were supporting their grand, free-trade, civil-service candidate for President, thought they "needed something;" for under the election law already on the statute-book they appointed nineteen hundred deputy United States marshals in Chicago. They seemed to favor this deputy-marshal law then. What has turned them against it now?

I say we do "need something" in Chicago. There never has been an election held in Chicago within my recollection when there has not been illegal voting and cheating at the polls. After nearly every election we have to arrest, try, and convict some persons for violating the elective franchise. And I will say to my friend from New York [Mr. FLOWER] that ninety-nine times out of a hundred it is a Democrat that is sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. BLAND. You do not prosecute Republicans, I suppose? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. The courts in my city are equally divided politically; one-half of the judges who preside over them are Democrats and one-half are Republicans; and the greatest Democrat that was ever sent to the penitentiary was prosecuted by a Democratic United States district attorney, tried and sentenced by a Democratic judge.

Mr. FLOWER. How will it be under this law? Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. We are trying to live up to the law there; we are trying to enforce it. While we need it in Chicago, I do not believe we need it in any other district in the State of Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Was not that same man pardoned by a Republican governor and turned out? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Yes; because, two days before, he served his time out; his four years had expired before he got the pardon.

Mr. WASHINGTON. They would have pardoned him sooner, I suppose, if they could have got at him.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. And while I am familiar with the working of the election laws in Illinois, I am also familiar with their working in one of the Southern States and with the government of that State—the State of Texas. I want to bear witness, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that I believe the State of Texas is as economically and well governed as any State in the Union. I want to bear witness that I do not believe the State of Texas needs this election law any more than the State of Illinois. There are places in Texas probably where it would be an advantage to put it in operation just as there are in Illinois. But there are other districts in Texas where they do not need it and where it would not be applied. Hence I am against the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Against the amendment? Why, I thought you were arguing in favor of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. I am against it.

Mr. MILLS. You spoke for it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. No; against it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that in Chicago, so ably represented by my friend across the way [Mr. TAYLOR] who has just spoken, the election law governing that city is entirely different from the law as applicable to any other part of the State, a special law having recently been passed applicable exclusively to that city in its elections. It is one of the most stringent and efficient laws that has ever been put in force upon the statute-books of the State of Illinois. It was passed by a Republican Legislature for the express purpose of securing honest and fair elections in that city. It has worked to the entire satisfaction of all of the people of the city of Chicago, without regard to party.

That law divides the city into voting precincts of not exceeding 400 voters in number, in each of which precincts the polls are to be closed at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, so that all persons can vote in daytime and have their votes counted before dark. I have not heard of the frauds to which the gentleman alludes as having taken place under its operation. I do not believe that frauds have taken place under that law. There were some frauds alleged last spring, but not committed under this law.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Why, the gentleman knows, or must know, that there were some twenty-five or thirty indictments for illegal voting.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well, then I stand corrected upon that point. That was an election for town officers and other local officials, and indictments were found for alleged fraud against two Democrats. A jury was empaneled for the purpose of trying them, which had on it nine Republicans, I think, and they scarcely left their seats after hearing the testimony in the case when they brought in a verdict of "not guilty."

Allusion has also been made to the indictments found against Mackin and Gleason for alleged fraud in elections. Mackin was tried, but Gleason, being a Republican, was allowed to escape on his own personal recognizance.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Why, the gentleman knows that Gleason is a Democrat.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; I do not know it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Gleason was always a Democrat.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, if he is a Democrat, why did you not punish him?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Why did not you punish him?

Mr. SPRINGER. You had control of the courts.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. You punished Mackin, and he got out on a technicality.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have stated the facts in regard to it—

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; he is not stating the facts.

Mr. SPRINGER. I state the facts as they are generally understood by the people.

On yesterday the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] stated that I had submitted a report in the case of Dean against Field, sustaining, substantially, the election bill now pending. The gentleman is entirely in error in that regard. That case was simply this: Under the laws of the United States, two supervisors were appointed in every election precinct. They met at all of the polls and in connection with the State officers of Massachusetts both agreed on returns of every precinct of the Congressional district, which, when aggregated, elected Dean by a majority of 5 votes.

The law required the returns to be counted in the presence of the supervisors of the precincts when the returns were made up. That was the law at that time. But, notwithstanding the existence of the law, the city council of the city of Boston took the returns and referred them to a committee of the city council, consisting of three persons, who took these returns into a private room, locked the door, and counted them by themselves, apart from the supervisors, and that count was brought here to the House of Representatives, and, although contrary to the national election law, it was sustained by every Republican in the House except General Butler, and he was read out of the Republican party for voting against sustaining that count. So that gentlemen who have claimed so much for the count by Federal supervisors here are the very persons who have themselves disregarded it and set it aside and put in its place a count of the board of aldermen of one of the cities of the country. I believe that the law of Congress was paramount in the case and that the count in the presence of the State officers and the national supervisors was superior in validity; the House of Representatives so held, and hence Dean was seated. The only question involved in the case being as to the validity of the different counts which were made, we held that the return made under the law of Congress was superior.

On yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] referred to illegal voting in Ohio some years ago. It so happened, Mr. Speaker, that I was chairman of the committee appointed for the purpose of investigating the alleged frauds in connection with that election. It so happened that there was arrested in connection with that a gentleman named Mullen—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio. A gentleman! A penitentiary convict.

Mr. SPRINGER. And he arrested one hundred and fifty negroes coming across the Ohio River at Covington to vote in the State of Ohio under the protection of your deputy marshals. It so happened, however, that of the whole number he arrested three of them happened to be residents of the city of Cincinnati, entitled to vote in that city, and hence he pleaded guilty as to them and was sent to jail, not to the penitentiary, for twelve months.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has exhausted his time, and one minute over.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, history delights in parallels and paradoxes, and sometimes the same act is both a parallel and a paradox. Saul of Tarsus, according to biblical lore, once had a great experience on his way to Damascus, as those on this side of the House will remember. [Laughter on the Republican side.] He saw a great light; he heard a voice from heaven saying "Why persecutest thou me?" "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" was the inquiry; and he fell to the earth with his mouth in the dust and asked, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" The Democracy of to-day in the past few hours have seen a great light. Perhaps the parallel will cease there. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

For several days it has been the business of the Democracy in this House to denounce and vilify this bill. They have searched the dictionary for words of vilification and condemnation. They have condemned it as unconstitutional, and the great constitutional lawyers on that side of the House have spent hours in trying to demonstrate its unconstitutionality. They have talked by the hour about the enormous expenditure that will be imposed upon the people of the United States. I hold in my hand the minority report carefully drawn by one of the ablest of the minority of the committee [Mr. BUCKALEW], in which the estimate is made of ten millions of dollars as the expense of this bill if enacted into law and put into operation.

What do we see to-day? After days and days of talking against this bill in every conceivable form, using every possible argument against it, we find them advocating its application, if enacted into law, not merely to a few Congressional districts, not merely to a few cities and localities where it is needed in this country, but to every Congressional district. The constitutional argument is forgotten, the great expense to the people of the United States is forgotten, all the arguments that they have used against this bill are forgotten for the time, and they are ready to fall in and adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] extending the operations of this bill to every Congressional district, making it not voluntary but compulsory, regardless of expense and regardless of constitutional law. I say a great light has fallen on the Democracy. Presto, change! The curtain lifts, the scene changes, and to-day the Democracy, that for days past have been talking against this bill as the abomination of abominations, stand shoulder to shoulder and arm in arm with the gentleman from New Jersey in support of it.

Mr. TRACEY. Not in support of the bill, but in support of the amendment.

Mr. HILL. And I suppose they will vote for the extension of this bill to every Congressional district. I say that may be either a parallel or a paradox, or it may be both. It remains to be seen. We have got to look behind the curtain, to look behind the scene and see what the object of these gentlemen must be in their ready and prompt espousal of this amendment, in putting this vast and unnecessary expense upon the people of the United States.

We all know, gentlemen, that the application of this bill is not needed in every Congressional district. We all know that it is not needed in many of the Congressional districts of the North.

It is needed in some few districts in the great cities like New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. It is not needed in my Congressional district, and I hope the time will never come when it will be needed there. But it is needed in many Congressional districts of the South, as well as in the great cities of the North.

Mr. Speaker, in the brief time at my command I shall not even attempt a defense of this bill. There is in my judgement no question as to its constitutionality. That is settled, not only by the plain provisions of the Constitution, but by the decisions of the highest court in the land. Even those who have argued here against its constitutionality have been obliged to admit that the question has been settled by the Supreme Court against them.

The only question left is, is this bill wise, is it expedient? To that question, Mr. Speaker, there ought to be but one answer. No candid man can deny that there have been great frauds on the ballot-box. The history of this country for the past few years, the records of this House, the results of contested-election cases, all demonstrate not only the existence, but the magnitude and extent, of such frauds. Not a member from the South has risen in his place to deny their existence. They are conceded by all. What, then, shall be done? Is there no remedy? Shall we let these gross frauds pass in the hope that at last they will die out of themselves, or shall we attempt their suppression?

Mr. Speaker, the American people believe in a "free ballot and a fair count." Upon that proposition rests the perpetuity of free institutions, the future of the Republic, black or white, rich or poor, foreign or native born, every voter must be permitted to cast one ballot for the candidate of his choice, and have that ballot counted. Fraud upon the ballot-box is a species of treason; it threatens the very life of the Republic. Wink at it, apologize for it, tolerate it, let it spread, and sooner or later this great Republic will totter to its fall.

I am for this bill. Do you say it will not cure the evil? Let us try it. The power of the Federal Government is great. The fear of punishment will deter the evildoer. Let us at least try what Federal power can do toward purifying the ballot-box and the suppression of intimidation, false counting, and ballot-box stuffing. [Applause.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the observations of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that if this bill is to be enacted into law it should be uniform. If there is to be an assault upon the State governments the disaster should be made general, and not sectional.

When Solomon, the great monarch of Israel, reared that splendid edifice which became the glory of his reign and the wonder of his age he put two brass pillars in the porch of the Temple. One he called "Boaz," the other "Jachin." They denoted support and stability, or, in mystic lore, symbolized the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, which guided the footsteps of the Jews through the dangers of the wilderness.

Upon the threshold of this Republic stand two majestic pillars, on whose white lintels the fathers laid the Constitution of the country. One they called "National Sovereignty," the other "State Sovereignty." Break, remove, undermine either, and this noble fabric of constitutional government, reared in the wisdom and cemented in the blood of the sages and warriors of the Revolution, will fall into decay and ruin, and its broken fragments will be scattered by the contending storms of ambitious strife and partisan passion.

Sir, we hear much talk of treason and traitors in these latter days. It is not an unusual thing to hear Representatives on this floor denounced as traitors for their participation in the great civil war thirty years ago. But I affirm it is as much a crime under the Constitution and against the Constitution to assault the authority and the sovereignty of the State as it is to assault the authority and the sovereignty of the nation. The men who, thirty years ago, upon the battle-fields yonder across the broad Potomac, with rifles in their hands and flashing swords, sought to destroy the autonomy of the nation were no more guilty of high treason than are the men who assemble here under the marble arches and swelling Dome of this Capitol and conspire to destroy the autonomy of the States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The men who by indirection, by covert plot, by extraordinary or extra-constitutional methods, adopted in cabinet or legislative council, seek to overthrow, subvert, or suppress the authority or the sovereignty, in their respective spheres, of State or nation, are no less traitors—damned, odious traitors—than are the men who seek upon an open field to strike an open blow amid the storm of shot and shell and saber stroke. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE], following up the same line of thought to which he has just given utterance will, upon the vote which is soon to be cast on this amendment, vote against it, because, as I understand the effect of this amendment, it makes the bill far more reaching in its provisions, in its character, and in its effect, than as it originally stands; and I shall look with disappointment upon his vote if it be found not to be in accord with the sentiments which he has just so eloquently uttered.

As this amendment, sir, emanates from the State I have the honor in part to represent, it is perhaps not out of the way for me to say that in our local affairs we do not have the uniformity for which my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] pleaded so eloquently yesterday and which he says he wants to secure by this amendment. As I have already said on this floor, our Congressional elections in the past have not been held in all portions of that State under the operation of the present law; in other words, in some districts the operation of that law was invoked and in others it was not. So far as the registration feature goes—and we know that that is the very initial proceeding in an election—for years it has been our law upon that subject in our State that the registration was confined to the cities, and did not take effect in the rural districts. And why? Because there was no necessity for registration in the rural districts, where every man knew his neighbor.

It was only necessary in the thickly settled portions and because they were so thickly settled, and therefore the people do not know each other so well. I want to say this one thing further with reference to this amendment. I am sorry that it emanated from this side of the House, because it does not tend to perfect the bill. If it is designed to harass and obstruct the passage of the bill; if it is designed to make the bill more costly in operation; if it is designed to make it more odious in effect, by forcing it where not needed, I can understand why the amendment was offered; but knowing the honest convictions of my colleague as I do and knowing his sterling qualities of heart, I can only believe that he was not aware of the effect of offering this amendment from this side of the House.

One other thing. I do not know but what I have done the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] an injustice awhile ago in asserting that if he would give some of the others of the members an opportunity of speaking they could be heard. He replied that he had not spoken more than two minutes on this bill. Since then, Mr. Speaker, I have taken occasion to examine the RECORD, and I find that on yesterday he addressed the Speaker or some member of the House just thirty-four times. [Laughter.] I want to pay him the compliment of saying he is the only gentleman upon this floor who could do that in two minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, the effort to get this discussion away from the real point at issue has been in some measure successful, and it is exceedingly important, if we are to cast an honest vote upon this part of the bill, that we should be brought back to the consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey. The proposition is to relieve the bill of that section which provides that this law shall be put into operation in certain districts of the United States upon the petition of fifty or one hundred citizens of the district, town, or city. But gentlemen on the other side say that this amendment is intended to make this law odious. I want to say, if it is so bad a law that you are afraid to vote for its general application all over the United States, why are you such cowards as to throw on fifty or a hundred citizens of any particular district the responsibility of putting into effect a law which is odious to the people of the United States?

We want to assume the responsibility of this law so as not to place it upon any limited number of people to say whether or not the people of that particular district, city, or town shall be put under its operation.

I want to insist further upon the fact, Mr. Speaker, that unless this law is made universal in its application there will be gentlemen upon this floor who will be seated here under the State law, others will be seated under the United States law, others will come here with every vote counted for them under the United States law if this bill goes into effect, and others will come here with every vote only which is cast and counted under the State law and counted for or against them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And some without any law.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Some parts of a district can be put under the operation of this law and other parts of it will not be put under the operation of the law, and there are some districts, or parts of districts, which can not be put under the operation of this law, even if fifty or one hundred inhabitants of the district shall petition for it to be put under the law.

Now, I want to say to gentlemen that if this law is good for one district it ought to be good for all and if it is odious for one district then it is odious to all; and it is neither fair nor just to vote down this proposition on the ground that it is odious to the people of the United States. Let us have the courage to assume the responsibility of putting this law on the statute-books and putting it into operation, or say it is not going into operation, and not shift the responsibility on to fifty or one hundred, who may know nothing about it and who may be the very worst men in the district.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Can not the gentleman see that there may be one district where it should be put into operation and that there may be another place where it should not go into operation; that the law proposes to leave that to be determined?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Who is to decide that?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why, the people of the district themselves.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is not to be decided by a majority of the people of the district, but by fifty or one hundred men who may be drawn from among the hungry politicians of the community who may take up a notion to have it put in operation; the sore-heads, the dead-beats, and the like may want to put it in operation.

The circuit judge has not the right to decide whether or not it shall go into operation, but is compelled to put it into operation if these people ask for it, and in that case he simply compels it to be done. If there is fraud enough in the United States, taking it all over; if there is such an emergency as to require the execution of the law in the United States in reference to elections, let us say so; but, if there is not enough, let us say there is not enough; but do not pass a law which puts it in the hands of fifty or one hundred to say whether or not there is fraud in a district in the United States, because they may be the people who are drawing the money from the Treasury of the United States, and of course they will be in favor of putting this law into effect.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But suppose both parties, or all parties, in a Congressional district say that they do not want the law, would you force it upon them?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, I would not force anything upon them. I say that if you let the people alone and educate them properly they will come to their senses and do what is fair and just.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, either our friends who oppose this bill have been converted more suddenly and more thoroughly than Saul of Tarsus or else they are not honest in pressing this amendment. They say now in effect: "This is so good a thing that we propose to force it upon every Congressional district in the United States." That is what they say, if they are honest.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, nobody is honest but you.

Mr. PAYNE. Or, on the other hand, they insist on putting this amendment upon this bill to force it upon all the people of the United States because they believe that the expense of its enforcement will make the law unpopular.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And you have not got the courage to stand up to the expense.

Mr. WASHINGTON. We believe you need the law as much as we do.

Mr. PAYNE. In other words, their argument is that, because a plaster is a good thing on a sore spot, therefore it should be extended to the whole body and would be a good thing on the whole body. [Laughter.] They oppose this bill for three different reasons. One is that it is unconstitutional. We are willing to leave the plain language of the Constitution on that subject to the plain people of the United States, backed up and re-enforced as it is by the repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. They say that if we force this law upon certain sections of the country there will be revolution. They make threats; they insinuate that it will cause the shedding of blood in certain districts. Mr. Speaker, it is enough for us to know that the law is right, that the law is in the direction of an honest vote and an honest count, and those who oppose the law must take the responsibility of breaking it, or defying it, or attempting to nullify it. We are simply seeking under this provision of the bill to perpetuate and extend the present system.

Under the present system the supervisors' law can only be extended to a city upon the request of a number of the qualified voters of that city, 10, I think, instead of 100 or 150, as required by this bill. That law was passed in 1871, and has been in operation for nineteen years. By the census of 1880 there were ninety-eight cities in the United States to which the law was applicable, of which twenty-two were in the South. The people of the South, by their petitions, extended the benefit of the law to thirteen of those twenty-two cities. In the North there were seventy-six cities of over 20,000 inhabitants, and this law was extended by petition to forty of those seventy-six Northern cities. So it appears that in some localities the people desired the law and in some they did not. Now we propose to leave it optional with each Congressional district, with each city in the United States, with each county, to say whether they shall have the benefit of this law or not. We do that in the interest of economy. We do that to decrease the expense of the enforcement of this law.

The opponents of the bill seek to put this amendment upon it in order to load down the law with expense so as to make it odious and obnoxious to the people.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] spoke a few moments ago about the election law in the city of Chicago and told us how perfect it was. Why, sir, that election law was copied from the election law of the city of New York. The law has been in force there for many years, yet all parties in the State of New York—I will not say all parties, but the Republican party has been trying for years to ingraft upon the statute-book a more stringent election law both for the city of New York and for the rural districts. They enacted it and forced it upon the Democratic governor three times, and three times he vetoed it, but popular feeling on the subject became so strong that it began to invade even the ranks of the Democracy. Mass meetings were held. Even Mr. Cleveland joined the movement at a late hour, and finally it has resulted in a compromise that is to give us a new election law in the State of New York, a law not applicable alike to all localities in the State, because our Legislature understood and recognized the unreasonableness of that.

We have one law for the city of New York, we have another law for Brooklyn, we have another law for cities of 10,000 inhabitants and upwards, and still another law for the rural districts. We need this law in some of the cities in our State. It would be a good thing in the district represented by my friend from Albany [Mr. TRACEY]. It would be a good thing in Troy. We want to rid ourselves of these scandals upon the elective franchise in the State of New York. We want pure and honest elections there. Why, Mr. Speaker, if such a law as this was needed in all the districts of the United States, if there was corruption at the polls, if there was intimidation, if there was false counting all over the country, the time would have fully arrived when the last and best experiment in republican government would have perished from the earth. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TRACEY. The gentleman knows that this very bill has been denounced by his own paper in his own district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] is not in order.

Mr. TRACEY. Well, the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order. The Chair is sure the gentleman will not insist on violating the rules. The time for debate on this amendment has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. The question being taken; there were—ayes 123, noes 124.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for tellers.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I call for the yeas and nays. We may as well have them and be done with it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 132, nays 138, not voting 58; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. Ewart. I am paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. SIMMONS. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. SMYSER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SENEY. If he were present, he would vote in the affirmative and I should vote in the negative.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired for to-day with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM; otherwise I should vote "ay."

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. WATSON with Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SMITH, of West Virginia, with Mr. WHITTHORNE.
 Mr. ROCKWELL with Mr. LAWLER.
 Mr. PICKLER with Mr. STAHLNECKER.
 Mr. DE LANO with Mr. DUNPHY.
 Mr. SMYSER with Mr. SENEY.
 Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, with Mr. MAGNER.
 Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. CLANCY.
 Mr. T. M. BROWNE with Mr. MORGAN.
 Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin, with Mr. WALKER, of Missouri.
 Mr. RANDALL with Mr. CLUNIE.
 Mr. SIMONDS with Mr. EWART, on the election bill. Mr. SIMONDS is for and Mr. EWART against the bill.
 Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. WILEY, on the election bill. Mr. SHERMAN would vote for and Mr. WILEY against it.
 Mr. DE HAVEN with Mr. BIGGS.
 Mr. WHEELER, of Michigan, with Mr. FITCH, until Thursday next.
 Mr. STIVERS with Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, until Thursday next.
 Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. MONTGOMERY, until to-morrow.
 Mr. COWSWELL with Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts, for one week.
 Mr. MORSE with Mr. PHELAN, until the 4th of July.
 Mr. BAKER with Mr. SPINOLA, for three weeks.
 Mr. BLISS with Mr. CHIPMAN, except on election law, until Wednesday at 12 m.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, with Mr. CRAIN, on this vote.
 Mr. REYBURN with Mr. O'NEAL, of Indiana, on this vote.
 Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. REILLY, on this vote.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote. I was in the Hall and listening for my name, but did not hear it. I was standing at the rail with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] and some other gentlemen, and was listening for my name, but did not catch it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman say he was within the bar of the House and was listening—

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir; I had come to the bar for the purpose of voting.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman say he was listening at the time when his name should have been called so that he thinks it was not called?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir; I would not say that it was not called. I did not hear it called, but there was some confusion. The first name I heard distinctly after my name should have been called was "HEMMANN."

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point that the rule does not require a gentleman to state that he does not think his name was called.

The SPEAKER. The strict terms of the rule do not permit the Chair to entertain any request to vote after the second roll-call.

Mr. McMILLIN. But, Mr. Speaker, there has been a practice which has allowed members under such circumstances to have their votes recorded.

The SPEAKER. But that practice has had for its origin solely the idea that the name of the member may not have been called. If it has been called—and the presumption is that it has been called, unless the member himself asserts that it has not been—the rule has been rigidly applied to refuse to entertain the request to record the vote. The gentleman from Tennessee must be aware of what would be the natural result of any other interpretation of the rule.

Mr. McMILLIN. I agree with the Speaker that the rule ought to be rigidly enforced, but the Chair will bear witness that it has never gone to the extent of requiring a member to state that he did not think his name had been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has always explained to the House the basis of his ruling upon this question, namely, that there must be some reason to suppose that the name was not called. Because if a member, either through indifference or inadvertence or for any purpose, fails to vote, the rule of the House is explicit that the Chair shall not entertain the request to record his vote after the roll has been completed. It does not rest upon any other question than where the gentleman has reason to suppose that his name was not called, if, listening at the time, he failed to hear it. The Chair, under such circumstances, has felt it to be his duty to cause a mistake of that kind, where there was reason to suppose a mistake had occurred, to be rectified. But if it is a question where a member can not, in fact, make that statement, the Chair thinks it is incumbent upon him to refuse to entertain the request, under the practice and under the rule.

Mr. HEARD. But let me state this, Mr. Speaker: I am not prepared to say that the name was not called because I did not hear it. I was in the Hall of the House listening at the time, so that it was through no inattention on my part that I failed to hear the name called; but whatever the reason, whether it was because of the noise and confusion about me, or because the name was not called, or from any other cause not arising from my own neglect, I do not believe that I ought to be barred from the privilege of voting, and I do not understand that the rule has been so applied.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me also suggest this, Mr. Speaker, that the member can only vote when he hears his name called, because at any other time than that he would only cause confusion in the roll.

The SPEAKER. If the member fails to hear his name called through his own inattention, however, the Chair does not think he could bring himself within the rule on that ground.

Mr. COWLES. I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say that he was trying to hear his name and did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish in any way to go beyond the rule, but wishes to adhere to it, because it would be a sufficient reason that it is the rule of the House. But the Chair also thinks it a very salutary rule, and the House will bear witness that the Chair has endeavored to enforce the rule strictly on all occasions. If the gentleman says, however, that he was listening at the time his name should have been called and did not hear it the Chair will cause the Clerk to call his name and give him an opportunity to record his vote.

Mr. HEARD. I do say so, Mr. Speaker.

The name of Mr. HEARD was then called and his vote recorded as above.

Mr. CLUNIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANDALL]. If present, he would vote "no" on this question and I should vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I am announced as being paired, Mr. Speaker, but that pair applies to everything excepting the election law.

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My colleague [Mr. CLARK] is paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WALKER], and if present would vote "no."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask whether a pair has been announced for Judge TAYLOR of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no other means of information than that which is accessible to the gentleman from Arkansas. The pair-clerk informs the Chair that the gentleman is paired.

Mr. TRACEY. Several of my colleagues are absent paired. If they were present I do not know how they would vote. [Laughter and applause.] I desire to state in explanation that I refer to my colleagues on the side of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's statement needs explanation.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out sections 15, 16, 17, and 18 and insert the following:
 "Sec. 15. From the returns of the supervisors the chief supervisor shall tabulate and forward to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to be by him submitted to the House, the results as they appear therefrom in each Congressional district under his jurisdiction in which this act has been enforced."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I only want to state to the House briefly the purport of the amendment, so that it may understand what it proposes. This amendment seeks to eliminate from the bill what is known as the United States board of canvassers. It does not affect in any way the supervision or any portion of the duty of the supervisors at the polls, but it does change the course of the returns after they leave the chief supervisor. Instead of going to the United States board of canvassers in order to be tabulated by them and sent here so as to overrule the decision of the State board of canvassers, this amendment requires that the tabulated returns, as made up by the chief supervisors, shall be sent to the Speaker of the House, to be laid by him before the House at its organization as a matter of information for the House to act upon.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is on the floor and there is any desire to discuss the amendment, I would like to see if we can not agree upon a limitation of the debate.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask for information if the gentleman from South Carolina has taken into consideration the fact that the organization of the House takes place upon the election of the Speaker, and that election may be postponed, the effect of which would be that the information would not reach the House of Representatives until thirteen or fourteen months after the election takes place.

The election takes place in November of the even-numbered year; the House meets in December of the following year; the Speaker is elected pretty soon after that, but how soon depends upon the temper of the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, the effect of it is that we organize as we do now upon the returns issued by the governor of the State, upon the certificate, and when the House organizes the Speaker lays before it all the information that the United States supervisors have been able to gather, and it is for the House then to make such use of it as the House may see fit. I would like to say, before we enter further into the matter, that I would like to agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], if we can, upon some reasonable time for debating this amendment.

Mr. LODGE. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Say thirty or forty minutes on a side. Thirty minutes on a side, I suppose, will be sufficient.

Mr. SPRINGER. Thirty minutes on a side.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that. It may be understood that there shall be thirty minutes on a side on this amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir. I ask that it be agreed that the debate be limited to thirty minutes on a side upon this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] unite in their request that debate upon the pending amendment be limited to thirty minutes on a side. Is there objection?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I object until the amendment is read again.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to inquire of the Chair if it will not be competent to accomplish this by a demand for the previous question at the end of the sixty minutes' debate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think we can agree upon it.

Mr. BLOUNT. But objection is made.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] only wishes to understand the proposition.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I think this is a vital amendment and it should be considered at some length, if I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that debate be limited to thirty minutes on a side.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I would suggest an hour on a side.

Mr. BLOUNT. The time has been limited for debate under this order. There has been general debate. Certainly the gentleman does not want more than an hour on this single amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Make it forty minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Thirty minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon granting unanimous consent that the debate upon the pending amendment be limited to thirty minutes on a side. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to lay before the House an amendment that goes to one of these sections, simply for the information of the House. It is a part of the same thing. As these sections are under debate, I desire to offer two amendments, or to ask to have them read, and I state that I shall offer them after the vote is taken on the amendment now pending. They go to the perfecting of the sections under consideration. They provide for a limitation of the power of the canvassing boards, to which so much objection has been made. The amendments were suggested to the committee by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], and members of the committee whom I have been able to consult with agree with myself that they are fair amendments tending to improve the bill, and I therefore give notice that I shall offer them after debate on this proposition is concluded or at such time as the House may desire.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. They ought to be voted upon before the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side. "Oh! no."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule upon that question when they are offered.

Mr. DINGLEY. They would be first in order, and the vote upon them ought to come before the vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that they be read.

Insert in section 15, after the word "convene," line 114:

"As soon as the certificate of said board has been made public, any person who was a candidate for election may, by motion before the United States circuit court having jurisdiction in the district where said election was held, contest the correctness of the certificate made by said board and demand an examination and compilation of the returns by said circuit court, which said motion shall be served upon the person declared elected by the certificate aforesaid, and upon the returning officers aforesaid, and shall be heard after ten days' notice. The said returning officers shall produce before the circuit court all the returns, reports, protests, tickets, and all the evidence upon which they acted in awarding the certificate aforesaid. The circuit court shall thereupon determine and certify the persons shown to be entitled to the certificate."

In section 16, line 15, after the word "Congress," insert:

"Provided, That if there shall be an appeal from the decision of the United States board of canvassers to the circuit court as herein provided, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall place on the roll as Representative-elect the name of the person certified by said circuit court as entitled to said certificate."

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether those amendments would be in order first or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. They are first in order.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me so, because they go to the perfecting of the section which it is proposed to strike out. I therefore offer the amendments with that in view.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state that they do not go to the perfecting of the section at all. This is an independent section, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. It seems to be composed of an independent section and an amendment also.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We had better vote upon the clear proposition as to whether the State is to certify or the United States is to certify.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the matter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. In the mean time we will go ahead on my amendment under the limitation of time already agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I want a ruling on the proposition whether my amendment is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not make a ruling at the present time, but will examine the question, and in the mean time the debate will proceed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, this amendment now proposed by the minority of the committee, when properly understood by the House, is simply this: That the existing system for State elections for Representatives in Congress, including all the proceedings of returns, shall be left unimpaired. The election will be held by the proper State officers. In the first place, the election returns will be carried in such States as mine to a court a day or two after the election, all the returning judges appearing there, the court being empowered to correct errors or any apparent frauds. Then they pass to the district returning boards, which is merely a mere matter of form now in those, and then to the proper high State officers, the secretary of the Commonwealth, and the governor of the Commonwealth, and then the returns come here, and are prima facie evidence of what the people have done.

This amendment is simply to preserve and continue that system, which in substance has always been enforced, and under which I venture to say in not half a dozen instances has there ever been any complaint of the action of the State authorities—the secretary of the Commonwealth and the governor—in making returns. It is admitted that these high State officers, acting under the great responsibility of distinguished character, are reliable personages, by whom these returns are to be made to the House; and until something to the contrary appears it will be assumed that these returns contain the true voice of the people, the legitimate expression of the popular power of electing members of this House.

Now, sir, this bill reported by the majority of the committee provides for inspecting registration, inspecting naturalization, inspecting elections, and interfering partially with them, and for returns by the precinct supervisor of the district or the district supervisor; that statement also containing all the information necessary to exhibit on behalf of the United States the choosing of officials, in exhibiting any peculiarities at the election precinct, and under the amendment that information, the returns, certificates, and statement in the hands of the district supervisor of the election and his chief supervisor will be transmitted to the House, there to be laid by the Speaker before the House for its information, and if they impeach the returns the House has the power to send that information to the Committee on Elections, who may make a report on the prima facie right as to that choice, and the House may take all proper order to preserve the dignity and justice of the proceedings.

In short, this amendment is calculated to eliminate from this bill the whole element of contradiction, inconsistency, and contrariety between the returns as they come to us through the long-accepted channels—the governor of the State and his subordinates—and this irresponsible, from a legal point of view, authority of the district supervisors; but leaving to it the proceedings under this bill as to naturalization, registration of elections, and all district returns which it provides for, leaving all the proceedings, the objects, and purposes for which these inspection laws were originally passed, and that is for information, to detect frauds, to enable this House to do justice in a prompt and summary manner. That is all there is in this amendment, and it presents a sharp question to gentlemen of this House between the regular legal State action on the one hand and the irregular, mischievous, and dangerous action on the other, while the bill retains all those features intended for inspection and the detection of frauds.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, the object of an election is to reach some result. The result is the ascertainment of who was elected and such certification as will enable the person elected to take his seat in the body to which he is elected. This is the House of Representatives of the United States. It certainly ought not to be objected that under a law of Congress the certifying of a vote created under that law should outrank the certifying of a vote created under the State law in ascertaining who in the first instance should take his seat in the House. It is said that the governors and the highest authorities of the States are always honorable men, and therefore it can not be inferred that they would make false certifications.

Mr. Speaker, that is not sought to be guarded. The State certifying board simply ascertain the result coming before them from the county, precinct, and township certifying board; and while the governor of a State may honestly and in exact accordance with the law tabulate and certify the returns as they come to him, the county board sitting in the midst of a sentiment in favor of falsification may so absolutely falsify the returns as that a man who was overwhelmingly defeated gets from the governor of the State a certificate of election. Three times in two Congresses one man came to this House with a certificate against the vote of his district as given at the polls and delivered into the hands of the county canvassing board (twice in the Forty-seventh and once in the Forty-eighth Congress), and by reason of false certification of the canvass he held the seat during those two Congresses within seven or eight days.

In the State of North Carolina by a law recently passed these county canvassing boards are made judicial officers and are required to judicially pass upon precinct returns, taking the whole matter even out of the hands of the court, and permitting the county canvassing board appointed by the governor to reject the returns, to throw out the vote of the various precincts, and to so reject the returns as to return one man, even when the other man had been elected by the people. More than that. From the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina, by simply rejecting and throwing out the precinct returns, one gentleman has been selected and certified as elected when another received the votes from the various precincts and the returns of those votes were duly and properly delivered into the hands of the county canvassing board, not selected by the people of these counties, but appointed by the governor of the State.

The purpose of these four sections is to have two certifications, and by means of these certifications to hold a check, not upon governors, not upon State officers, but upon the irresponsible and corrupt officers in the various counties who in times past have been in the habit of throwing out returns and falsely certifying results to the governors of the States. It is for the purpose of letting some man from each district participate in the organization of this House, and it only goes to the extent of having the certificate of the Federal canvassing board outrank the certificate of the various county officers in the Congressional districts which are supervised according to the provisions of this bill. It seems to me reasonable, proper, and conducive to a proper organization of the House and to a representation here at the beginning from every one of the Congressional districts in the country.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of these four sections when taken in connection with section 29 and with the section under which the chief supervisors are appointed, create a system which puts it in the power of the courts of the United States and of non-residents of the States where the elections are held to substantially control the House of Representatives.

I am not now speaking as a Democrat, but as a citizen and a Representative of the people of the United States, looking to the future without regard to the animosities of the past. We are legislating for a common people for that great future, and these sections, I say, give to the circuit judges of the United States (of whom there are but nine) power to appoint the supervisors and boards of canvassers in States in which the judges do not reside, which boards of canvassers have the power to make certificates which are to be sent to the Clerk of the House, and by those certificates the Clerk is to make up the roll of this House.

We are the representatives of the people of the States. We speak in a representative capacity; we represent those whose commission we bear. We bear the commission of those who choose us. No district can be a part of two States. We are collectively the representatives of the people of the United States; individually we are representatives of our districts. For a hundred years the certificate of the governor of the State has been prima facie evidence of our title to our seats. Under this bill a non-resident circuit judge, appointed because of his political affiliation, goes into a State and chooses a board of canvassers whose certificates, made up from the certificates of the lower supervisors, is final upon the Clerk of this House. So that the number of men put by these certificates into this House may control the House of Representatives. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says this is a bill to give publicity. It is no such thing. It is a bill to give secrecy and power to the supervisors of the elections appointed by a judge who is a non-resident of the State.

Under the domiciliary visits of the supervisor from house to house the voter and that officer are alone. Every bribable man is brought into direct and secret contact with the officer, who is appointed by the party in power, whichever party that may happen to be. That officer stands by when that voter goes to the polls. That officer certifies the list to the chief supervisor; that chief supervisor certifies it to the board of canvassers; those canvassers certify it to the Clerk of this House, and that Clerk puts the name upon the rolls of this House. The men upon this floor may hereafter be no longer the representatives of the people. They will become the representatives of the party that happens to be in power, provided this bill shall pass and shall be obeyed in every section of the States and of the country.

I can understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ALLEN], whose frankness outran his discretion when he said that he was not willing to have this bill made applicable to his district because fifty or one hundred unscrupulous men might be tempted to petition to have it apply there. It is that which makes gentlemen vote for it. They are willing to subordinate the certificate of State officers, they are willing to make this stab at the purity of elections, because it does not apply to their States. They would not do it, they would resent another doing it, if it did apply to their States. Gentlemen on the other side vote for this bill because they believe that they will not have to live under it, that they will not have to be chosen under its provisions, that their people will be free from this enginery, that their States will not be subjected to the horde of mercenaries that this law may turn loose.

But the future is uncertain. The exigencies of the future may put this power into the hands of other parties. I have seen the Whig party go into history. I have seen the Know-nothing party destroyed. I have seen the Democratic party, using force in Kansas to make the elections a lie, lose power by the very means which it took to perpetuate its power. Therefore I am not to-day pleading merely as a Democrat, but I am pleading for every section of the country, for every district in the country, that the House of Representatives may continue to be the representatives of the people, chosen by a majority of the voters at a ballot-box not controlled by mercenaries. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of the permission of the House to submit more fully some observations on this measure.

It may be that Congress has the right under the Constitution to enact a Federal election law and that it is expedient to exercise that power in the present condition of the country, but it does not by any means follow that the proposed election bill is either constitutional or expedient. It may be possible that all which has been so earnestly, if not generously and accurately, urged by gentlemen on the other side as to the condition of the negro in the South, and as to frauds heretofore committed in some of the larger cities of the North is true, and yet it may be also true that this proposed bill is unconstitutional, unwise, and iniquitous.

It devolves upon gentlemen who advocate and vote for this measure to demonstrate not only that Congress has the power to enact an election bill and that the condition of the country requires its enactment, but that the particular provisions of this bill are wise, impartial, and necessary. I beg to impress this upon the members of this House and upon the country. The real contest between us and the gentlemen on the other side is not as to the power of Congress to pass an election law, nor as to the possibility that there are frauds committed at the election of certain Representatives, but that this proposed measure is obnoxious to the provisions of the Constitution, is unwise in its general scope, and is iniquitous in its particular provisions.

This bill has fifty-seven sections, some of them containing as many as fourteen subdivisions; it re-enacts twenty-nine, repeals ten, and amends six other sections in the Revised Statutes; twenty-one sections create crimes and misdemeanors and fix penalties. It is seventy-three pages in length. It was introduced into the House on Saturday, June 14, was reported to the House on June 19, and was taken up for consideration on the 26th. Of course, such a bill can not be thoroughly digested in so brief a time, even if Representatives were able to devote their whole time to its consideration.

This mode of legislation necessarily produces vicious results; necessarily must the grave and important interests of the people be imperiled and their rights be in danger. This House ought to refuse to consider such a bill in such haste, and its duty to itself requires that it will not be forced by the decree of caucus, by the exigencies of party, or by the fear of party censure to pass a measure so long, so complicated, so revolutionary, without ample time, careful deliberation, and full opportunity for amendment.

But as the House has ordered the consideration of the bill it is forced upon us to examine its provisions.

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF CONGRESS.

The first section of the Constitution is:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

SEC. 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

It is perfectly evident that the phrase in the second section, "chosen by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature," and the phrase in the third section, "chosen by the Legislature thereof," are precisely equivalent. They describe the electors who shall choose the Representatives in the first instance and the Senators in the second instance. In neither case did the Constitution undertake to select these electors, but solely indicated those who should be qualified by the several States, in the one case by the proper action of the State through its constitution or laws, to wit, the "electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature," and in the second those chosen under the constitution of the State and by the people at the prescribed times and in the prescribed mode, as members of the Legislature.

SEC. 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof, but Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It is demonstrable that the power of Congress to "make or alter" the regulations as to "the times" and "manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives" is precisely the same. It has constitutionally exactly the same power to prescribe the times and manner of holding elections for Senator that it has for Representative, no greater and no less. Its power is limited so that it can only "make or alter" regulations as to the "times and manner of holding elections" of Senators and to the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives.

It can no more hold the election for Representative than it can for Senator. It can no more create offices of its own and provide the officers to superintend and conduct and certify the election of Representatives than it can hold, conduct, and certify the election of Senators. It has the same power to prescribe how the members of the Legislature shall be elected, qualified, and perform their duties as it has to prescribe how the electors of Representatives shall be selected, qualified, and perform their duties. I want to make this point perfectly clear, because I think that if it is once distinctly understood that the broad claim made by the gentlemen on the other side applies in the future to an election bill ousting the lieutenant-governor and speaker of the house and other officers of the State, and turning over the election of Senators to appointees of the Federal judiciary and depriving the State officers of the power to certify the election, and giving it to a board of canvassers, it may be that a halt will be called.

The election of Senators and Representatives was to be by the States; as to the Representatives, by the voters at the polls; as to the Senators, by the Legislature; but in each case each was to be chosen by the people of the State. It must be remembered that the power of a State to choose its Representatives in any legislative body which might have been formed by that convention was necessarily anterior to the formation of the convention and its adoption of any constitution. The particular form of Legislature which might be created, whether it should be bicameral or composed of a single house, did not abridge this anterior right of the State, but simply rendered some prescribed mode necessary. If that Legislature was to consist of but one house, then that convention might be at a loss to decide whether the Representatives should be chosen by the people of the respective States at the polls, by the Legislatures of those States, or in such mode as each State might determine.

As a bicameral Legislature was determined upon by a convention composed of delegates from large and small States, a compromise was made by which the States as States, by their Legislatures, without regard to population, chose their Representatives in one House, which was called the Senate, and chose by popular election, in proportion to numbers, their Representatives in the other House, which was called the House of Representatives; but the right of the State in each case was precisely the same, "to choose their Representatives." The mode of choosing, and the electors choosing, and the basis of representation were different.

For the purpose of self-preservation the Federal Government was given the power, in case the States failed to provide a manner of thus choosing its Senators or Representatives, through Congress, to provide that manner, and as incidental to the providing of the manner it was given the power to provide the times and places of election, except as to Senators; it could not change the location of the capital of the State. And the language of the fourth section must be construed in the light of the anterior power of the States to choose their Representatives, and of the duty imposed under the second and third sections that they should choose their Senators and Representatives.

To have power to prescribe the manner of holding elections does not include the right to hold the election. The word "manner" is synonymous with mode. To prescribe a mode of doing an action does not give the power to do the action. It does not invest him who has the mere right of regulation limited in terms to the manner of doing a thing with the power of actually performing the action. The power to prescribe how a thing shall be done is generically different from saying who shall do it or from the power to do it.

It is, no matter how plausibly presented, an extremely shallow claim, utterly unjustified either by the rules of the language or by any rule of construction, much less by the nature of our Government and the relation between the General Government and the States, to hold that the power, even if it were a primary and original power, to prescribe regulations for the manner of holding elections conferred upon Congress the power to prescribe who should hold the elections, who should vote at such elections, and give to Federal officers the authority to decide challenges as to the qualifications of the electors, open and hold the polls at precincts, and issue certificates which would give prima facie title to seats on this floor. It is not true that the Supreme Court has ever decided that Congress had this power.

Neither in the Siebold case (100 United States), nor in that of Yarborough (110 United States), was such decision either necessary or possible. It was not necessarily involved in either, and the dicta of the distinguished judges who pronounced those opinions are entitled only to the weight which the character and learning and virtues of those particular gentlemen give to what they might utter from the bench. I deny that that court is committed to the monstrous proposition that the Congress of the United States has the power to hold through Federal officers elections for Senators representing the States as States, or for the Representatives who represent the people of the States respectively; nor can I believe that under any circumstances will that court ever so hold.

That the Supreme Court, in cases properly made up by litigants, has the power to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress is undeniable; but there resides in it no power to declare what is the duty of the Congress of the United States, its co-ordinate branch of the Government, in any given mattersubmitted to its legislative action. I protest against the sentiment pronounced on this floor that the dictum of any judge uttered in an opinion and announcing the decision of that court in a private litigation between private citizens can bind the consciences and judgments of the members of Congress. Where the power sought to be exercised is doubtful, it is a weighty argument against the adoption of a law that the Supreme Court has held that such a law or one analogous to it was not within the provisions of the Constitution, but this is wholly different from the argument in such doubtful cases that Congress ought to exercise that doubtful power because eminent judges in obiter dicta have made utterances which seem to construe the Constitution favorably to the exercise of the power.

I do not hesitate to aver that this proposed bill is beyond the power of Congress; that it is in violation of the fundamental principle announced in the second and third sections of the Constitution, that the Representatives and the Senators shall be "chosen" by the people of the States and the Legislatures thereof. But I will not pursue this line of argument, simply desiring to put on record this opinion.

IT IS ANTI-REPUBLICAN.

The fundamental principle of a republican as distinguished from a democratic government is that all laws shall be enacted by legislative bodies composed of representatives chosen in some prescribed mode. Great jurists have held that it is not within the power of Congress or of the Legislatures of the various States to enact any law dependent for its efficiency upon the subsequent vote of the people.

I have always held this view; but there are some exceptions to it so weighty and so well established as to render the general principle subject to exceptions; but, as a rule, all will agree that statutes should be enacted by the representatives of the people. That the wisdom and expediency of passing a certain law and subjecting the people to its operation and requiring of them obedience to its provisions ought to be the act of a legislative body composed of the representatives chosen by the people, will be admitted by all. So all will agree that, as a rule, all laws should be general in their operation, universal in their application, and uniform.

This act violates not only this general principle, but also that which lies at the foundation of all democratic and republican governments: that in a given community the majority therein shall rule as to its local affairs. This act does not take effect by its passage through Congress and its approval by the President, nor by its adoption by the majority of the voters of any given city, county, or Congressional district. The precedents for such an act ought not to be enlarged. It is not seemly that in two Congressional districts lying side by side in the same State there should be different election machineries; that in one fifty or one hundred persons—not a larger number than might expect to receive appointment under this act—who do not have to be, but only to claim to be, citizens of the district, should have the power, against the will of a very large, if not unanimous, desire of all the voters save these fifty or one hundred, to impose upon that district an obnoxious, arbitrary, and fraudulent election machinery, while on either side of that particular district the contiguous districts hold their election free from these obnoxious and fraudulent provisions. Of course the purpose of this is well understood, but it is one that does not justify the act.

The central committee of either of the great parties could issue from Washington or any Eastern city an order to a particular district, which would be obeyed by the fifty or hundred who are by this bill made the legislative power to enact this provision into efficient law, that would put under its operation such a district as in the opinion of that committee could be carried under this law. This provision makes the central committee of either party the Congress of the United States for the election laws under which Representatives in Congress must be chosen. It is an intentional conferral of the power by Congress upon the party managers to examine the returns and conditions of every Congressional district in the United States and to decide whether the exigencies of the party require that this law shall or shall not be enacted as to each particular district.

I am not now speaking as a Democrat denouncing this bill as a weapon forged by Republican committees and brought out of a Republican caucus into a Republican House by orders which that caucus dare not disobey, but I am speaking as an American citizen looking to the future. The present operation of the law in the pending election will be, or it is supposed that it will be, for the benefit of the Republican party. But, in a broad sense of the word, parties are not permanent. I have lived to see the Whig, the Knownothing, and other parties go to pieces. I expect to live to see the Republican party pass into history. I have seen the Democratic party lose power by division. The changes and fluctuations of the future are to be taken into account by those who legislate for a free people, and this act is not merely a temporary transference of Congressional power under the Constitution, but it may be a permanent transference of power, so that that party which can obtain control of this machinery may secure Congress.

Under this bill the election of the President will be in the hands of the officers appointed in accordance with its provisions. That this is one of its purposes seems to be clear; and it may be that the States may be driven to change the time, if not the mode, of choosing Presidential electors. This can not be accomplished before the election of 1892; and those who have forced this measure on Congress hope to secure the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses and the next Presidency; and these prizes would repay them for all done and expended to enact this law.

Any Federal election law, in my judgment, is unwise. Any Federal machinery is inexpedient. With the States controlling their elections there can be only local frauds and only temporary mischief. In the give and play of counteracting forces these frauds will generally offset each other. The average result in a series of years will about be equal on either side; but if there is but one machinery applicable to all elections in every part of the country, and that machinery falls under the control of a single will and it desires to perpetuate power by the use of that machinery thus given to its control, it will see that the control is perpetuated; that that machinery is prostituted for that purpose; that it is used to accomplish that end, and then there can be no way of destroying that power thus arbitrarily and fraudulently perpetuated save either by an overwhelming revolt of the people or by an appeal to extra-legal means.

It is a step in the wrong direction. It is not only unwise in that it turns over the elections to a single machine dominated by the will of the party in power, but it is iniquitous in that it directs that party to go into any community and by the bribery of office and the pay attached to those offices use "the lewd fellows of the baser sort" who exist in every community, to corrupt the elections of the people and really take from them the right of choosing their Representatives. It is in another mode the old Roman idea by which the emperor preserved power by false elections. It is the Napoleonic idea put into American politics, that the emperor controlling a universal plebiscitum controlled the government.

The bribes that can be given may control the election, and where it does not happen to turn out as is expected the officers who hold their office at the will of that party and are its creatures and subservient to its purposes will see to it that the counting of the ballots is made to utter the voice which it desires the ballot-box to proclaim. Under this act, with its multitudinous army of officers, none of whom are responsible to the people, all of whom are appointed by partisans, all of whom are tempted by the pay, most of whom must necessarily come from those most easily corrupted, there is danger.

I will not say that that danger is certain, for I believe that it will be averted by a revolt of the American people, but, I repeat, there is danger of the power at Washington selecting such districts as can be won by fraudulent means, by a conspiracy between the appointing power and those who are corrupted by the bribes offered by this bill, and then such number of Representatives may be chosen as will make in point of fact the House of Representatives selected by the machinery of this bill, and not by the voters at the polls. It is true that when the three hundred and thirty Representative districts are examined, a shrewd and well informed politician can calculate that a certain number of districts will undoubtedly go Democratic, and a certain number will go undoubtedly Republican. The residuum put down as doubtful is the prize of contending parties. This bill gives to the party in power the opportunity to select through the machinery that it creates the Representatives from those doubtful districts, and thus control the House of Representatives.

SUPERVISORS.

By the twenty-second section the chief supervisors hereafter to be appointed must be selected from the circuit court commissioners. As for the last twenty-five years the circuit judges of America have been, with scarcely an exception, Republican, it is not unnatural that almost without exception the circuit court commissioners are gentlemen who agree in opinion with the judges and are Republicans. This is not unnatural, for it is to be expected that a judge would be most apt to appoint out of persons who are equally well qualified those with whom he is most thrown into contact, with whom he has most intercourse, and between whom and himself there are the most points of agreement. This is not, however, an accidental provision. This is intentional. It may be that there are Democratic circuit judges who have not taken the trouble to change the commissioners and who are by this act compelled to appoint a Republican as the chief supervisor.

We may therefore assume that as a rule the chief supervisors—some seventy in number—will be Republican. They substantially control the appointment of the district supervisors, for the courts may only appoint from lists furnished by the chief supervisor; so that two-thirds of the officers under the chief supervisor will be Republicans chosen by him. The other third will be nominal Democrats, and in the main only nominal Democrats. They will be chosen for reasons that do not include their Democracy. We have seen in the action of the present Administration what the Republicans construe as the meaning of laws which require the appointment of Democrats, or of such appointments as good taste dictates shall be from the Democratic party; and with very few exceptions it is well known that those appointees are not such Democrats as a Democratic President or convention would have chosen.

But these Democratic supervisors are absolutely without any power. The whole power is granted to the majority of the board, so that, in a board of three composed of two Republicans and one Democrat, the Democrat has no power whatever except to file, if he chooses to do so, a certificate reciting a state of facts different from that recited in the certificate signed by the majority, which certificate signed by the Democrat is given no validity anywhere and is of no effect.

The deputy marshals are appointed by the marshal, every one of whom in America is or will be Republican before this bill goes into effect, either of his own selection or at the direction of the chief supervisor, and the chief supervisor has unlimited power of suspension from office and of control over his subordinates. His warrant in the shape of a certificate of estimate of the necessary expenses to the Attorney-General is made by the twenty-third section of this bill a compulsory order to the Attorney-General, without delay, to cause to be deposited in a subtreasury or in a Government depository in the judicial district from which the estimate shall be sent, to the credit of the marshal of the United States of said district, the sum of money he so estimates; and to pay these estimates the law makes it a permanent appropriation, so that, if the next House or any House should be by Providence Democratic, the Treasury of the United States is absolutely without any protection by that House.

He is also made an officer for life, so that no changes that may occur, except his death, would relieve the district of which he is chief supervisor from his domination. Under his orders his subordinates have the power—it is made their duty, in fact—to make a canvass from house to house of every city and obtain a perfect list of the voters residing therein, so that at the expense of the tax-payers he may have for the benefit of his party absolutely accurate knowledge of the views and circumstances of every voter, and thereby be enabled to bring to bear upon every voter whatever corrupt means may be thought best suited to his condition.

Under subdivisions 6, 11, and 14 of section 8, every city, town, and village may be subjected to these domiciliary visits. In these visits the officer and the voter are alone; this secret conference affords the opportunity for bribery or intimidation, and the tax-payer contributes the pay for this chance to debauch the suffrage and demoralize the voters of America.

The enormous power of corruption thus put into his hands is beyond calculation. There is a widespread suspicion that in the last canvass the Presidency of the United States was substantially purchased by contributions supplied by those who expected to secure from legislation under a favorable administration many times the sums contributed. This puts into the hands of organized capital a complete list of all doubtful voters in every doubtful district in America, and furnishes this list at the public expense, and furnishes the willing tools paid out of the public Treasury to see to it that the means adopted shall be properly applied to the voter selected. It is absurd for any advocate of this measure to pose as a ballot reformer.

There may be some gentlemen so ignorant of its provisions, so innocent of the political methods employed in the last canvass, so unfamiliar with the means employed to debauch the voters, as to be enabled to conscientiously vote for this bill without believing that its end, if not its object, its effect, if not its purpose, is to corrupt the ballot-box and to furnish the cheapest mode of purchasing elections.

It is disingenuous in any one who has read this bill to proclaim that its object is supervision and its effect publicity, and that these are its only objects. These domiciliary visits are necessarily secret if the supervisors choose to make them so. No one accompanies these officers in these visits.

No one is present at the examination of these citizens by these officers, and a shrewd politician, clothed with Federal authority, going from house to house, ascertaining exactly the condition and environments of each voter, has the very best opportunity in the most secret way, free from inspection or surveillance, of ascertaining who can be corrupted and of corrupting those who can be purchased. He also has the best possible opportunity to know who can be intimidated and of bringing the necessary pressure to bear. It is a bill framed to accomplish in secrecy the utter demoralization of the ballot-box, and its pretended publicity is purely a sham used to cover the possibilities of its secret use.

It is also disingenuous to say that the power granted is only supervision and watchfulness. Not only is the chief supervisor charged "with the enforcement of the national election laws and with the prevention of frauds and irregularities in naturalization," but the subordinate supervisor under the seventh subdivision of section 8 not only has the power to require the State officers to immediately put to the voter whose right to vote shall be challenged the statutory oath or oaths and to require the State officers to at once pass upon the qualifications of any challenged person, but to decide whether that State officer has neglected or refused to obey his order and upon his decision to perform that State duty of putting the proper oaths and passing upon the qualifications of a voter; and if he decide that the voter be a lawful voter his decision is final. Under section 14 the subordinate supervisors are required to open the polls and hold the election in the precincts which may not be opened within one hour; and the certificates of these supervisors are practically conclusive of the right of a Representative to have his name placed upon the roll of this House by the Clerk, for their certificates pass to a board of canvassers and are by those canvassers used as the basis of their certificate, which certificate controls the Clerk of this House in making up his roll; so that, instead of the mere duty of supervision being put upon these officers, chosen as we have pointed out heretofore, the control of this House is placed in their hands.

They may so perform their duties as to necessitate the board of canvassers to grant a certificate which the Clerk of this House must recognize and make up his roll in accordance therewith. It is therefore not ingenuous for any one to attempt to mislead this House by the plea that this is giving to the Federal elections merely a proper publicity. And, by section 52, willful disobedience of any command given by a supervisor under the provisions of this act is made a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, so that the power of oppressive and expensive prosecution in distant courts is put in the hands of every supervisor, to be used for intimidation and outrage.

CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

I can not imagine the state of mind which would permit a Representative from any State to turn over to a board of canvassers appointed by a circuit judge, who may not be a resident or citizen of his State, the power to grant a certificate which would be superior to that certificate which the authorities of the State under the great seal of the State now by law transmit to this House, and which compels the Clerk of this House to place upon the roll of the House the names of those who hold this bastard certificate and probably put them in actual possession of the power of deciding the complexion of this House.

The circuit judge who appoints the chief supervisor and the board of canvassers may not be a citizen of the State. If the judiciary bill which passed this House some months ago, and which now is in the proper committee of the Senate, becomes a law it may be possible that this act may be construed to mean that these chief supervisors and boards of canvassers are to be appointed by the district judges, upon whom, under that law, all the powers of the circuit court are conferred; but if this is not so then it is absolutely certain that the circuit judge must be a non-resident of most of the States whose elections he helps to control, for we have forty-two States and only nine circuit judges.

The power, therefore, which brings into operation the machinery of this act is vested in non-residents of thirty-three of the States of the Union—I mean the nominal power; of course the real power is the chief committee of the party at whose dictation this bill is introduced. That that non-resident judge, wholly irresponsible to the people of the State, ambitious possibly to succeed to the next vacancy on the Supreme Bench, appointed to his present position because of his party affiliations, should be given authority to appoint those who can grant a certificate superior to the certificate issued by the authorities of the State under the great seal of the State, is an outrage upon the State which to me is inconceivable when committed by a citizen of any State; and the only possible reason for it is that the majority of those who are going to vote for this bill do not expect it to apply to their States and vote for it because they do not expect it to apply to their States.

It is a blow aimed by them at other States which they would not dare to aim at their own and would resent if any other Representative dared so to do. I venture the assertion that there will never be different certificates issued by any board of canvassers based upon returns of the supervisors of elections except in cases when the authorities of the State certify to the election of a Representative belonging to an opposite party to those supervisors and boards of canvassers.

It is intended to grant a fraudulent certificate to defeated candidates, whereby they may be enabled to exercise the representative power to retain the seats to which they have no just title and to prevent the control of the House from passing from their party friends. It is a travesty upon the relations between the State and the Federal Government to enact a provision by which the certificate of the authorities of the State that that State has chosen by its people the requisite number of Representatives is held for naught, in comparison to a certificate filed by three canvassers appointed by a non-resident circuit judge, basing their action upon the certificates of officers whose source of appointment is the judicial power of the Federal Government operating through those who do not live within the boundaries of the State to be represented.

THE JUDICIARY.

Besides, it is an utter confusion of the principles upon which our Government rests to confer this power upon the judiciary at all.

I have listened in vain for any explanation of section 29, which confers upon the circuit court the power to order "either national, State, Territorial, county, or other local board" to correct "errors" and to issue a mandamus. Does section 15 confer semi-judicial powers upon the board of canvassers and authorize a contest before that board as to the certificate it can issue and section 29 authorize another and wider contest before the circuit court as to both certificates? If so, what are the powers conferred, the forms of procedure, the rules to be applied?

These are new and extraordinary functions to be executed by the circuit courts of the United States, that the officers of the States can be compelled by the order of the Federal judge to issue certificates of election which they believe to be false! Let us pause before we grant such tremendous powers to our courts, and render probable if not certain frequent collisions between the Federal judiciary and the authorities of the State. If we will not halt, then let us make absolutely unambiguous the grant of power.

Upon whose "affidavit" must the court act and at what time must this extraordinary litigation be inaugurated? What is the effect upon the rights of the Representative if the order of the court is disobeyed?

Surely this House was entitled to have from the committee which reported this bill further explanation of its provisions.

Our fathers in framing the Constitution believed that the three great co-ordinate departments of Government should be independent of each other. Free institutions positively require the separation of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial functions. This truth was not as distinctly apprehended in that day as now, but even then the principle was carried out substantially in the Constitution, and I submit completely so as to the judiciary. There are conjoint functions of government imposed upon the President and Congress. With the consent of the Senate the President makes treaties and appointments to office. With both Houses he concurs by his approval in legislation or requires of Congress a reconsideration of their action and a reaffirmation by the constitutional two-thirds.

To both Houses he is required to submit his recommendations for legislative action; but the judiciary was kept entirely separated, entirely independent of its co-ordinate branches. I believe that even that clause which gives to Congress the power to vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President, in the courts of justice, or in the heads of the Departments must be construed to limit this power to vest the appointment of inferior officers in courts of law to such officers as are properly under the control of the courts and necessary to the transaction of their business; and all such decisions as do not make this distinction are ill considered.

The power to make law, the power to declare law, the power to administer or execute law, embraces all the functions of government. These exhaust all governmental powers. They ought to be kept separate. He who has the power to make the law ought never to be allowed to exercise the right to construe or to enforce that law, and he whose duty it is to enforce it ought to do it by authority vested in him by the law-making power, and they who are to declare what that law is ought not to have had any hand in its enactment nor be charged with its execution. These are elementary principles. They are utterly obscured and confused in this act.

We have boasted of an independent judiciary and in a certain sense of a non-partisan judiciary. It is true that men do not become translated when they are appointed from private life to the Supreme Bench; nor do they change their convictions by exercising judicial functions; and so the Federalist Secretary of State, John Marshall, remained the Federalist Chief-Justice; and so in later times the decision of the Electoral Commission was precisely on the line of the party opinions of its members; but the mere partisan struggles for party supremacy at any given time have not been carried as a rule to our courts.

We have tried to keep our ermine from becoming spotted with the mud of our fierce struggles and with the stains of party corruption. We ought not to make it the engine for the destruction of free elections; we ought not to make it the source of power to mercenaries to debauch the ballot-box. We ought not to require of our judges to sit in chambers to pass upon questions of contested party struggles. We ought not to give to supervisors of election the power to require of our judges to open their courts and to hold themselves ready to do business at the beck and call of partisan election officers. Already the suspicion of the people that our courts are not as pure as they once were is becoming unpleasant and widespread.

Gentlemen have said that it is not only important that the elections should be fair, but that they should be known to be fair. It is infinitely more important that our courts should be pure and that they should have the confidence of the people. They are the last barrier between freedom and her assailants. It is not too much to say that the splendid tribute paid by Johnson in the dedication of his play, Every Man out of his Humor, to "The noblest nurseries of humanity and liberty in the kingdom, the Inns of Court," was as just as it was superb. The battle for English freedom has been fought before the courts and juries of Great Britain by the lawyers of Great Britain; and for the last thirty years the battles for the preservation of our peculiar system of government and of the constitutional rights of minorities have been before the Supreme Court of the United States. That battle is not yet over.

Amid the passions of that great war, amid the temptations which those passions necessarily produced, drunk with blood and inflamed with the hate which grew out of the contest, it is not strange that there were encroachments upon the rights of the people, that there were doubtful statutes, that there were unconstitutional acts. In the courts of the United States year by year has the unending struggle gone on to reconquer what was lost of liberty. Some of the decisions made by those august tribunals have been monuments not merely of their patriotism, but of their power to subordinate the partisan to the judge and to decide grave party questions in the realm of judicial fairness instead of in the atmosphere of party animosity.

Every citizen is interested in keeping these courts free from temptation to participate in our party struggles, in preserving the confidence of the people in the purity of those courts, in not subjecting the incumbents of the benches to the terrific pressure of such temptations as this bill puts before them; of not convincing a great party, in numbers larger than its adversary, though it has not the possession of power, that the judiciary is the chiefest engine of mischief, and a debauched and corrupt bench the implement wisely chosen for the destruction of a free ballot-box. If gentlemen of the majority feel themselves compelled to pass an election law, remodel this proposed bill.

Strike out from it the provisions which give power of appointment to the courts. Let it be political in all its parts—I mean political in the true sense of political. Let the officers be appointed directly by the President or by some one who is responsible to public opinion. Let us maintain the separation of the judiciary from the legislative and executive departments of the Government. Let us hedge about that judiciary with every possible barrier, so that in its holy chambers there may not come these unscrupulous partisan contests. In its halls let us be obedient to the law, trying to find precisely what the law means and administering public justice from motives of justice and under a sincere desire to reach an honest judgment. As long as we have pure, non-partisan, and independent courts there is hope of the preservation of the liberties of the people. Do not let us take any step in the direction of prostituting the power that these courts derive from their independence.

THE BILL IS SECTIONAL, IT IS UN-AMERICAN.

This measure is based on a false conception of the nature of this House and its relations to the Federal Government and of the relations of the States and the Federal Government to each other. This is a Union of States and of the people thereof; this House is composed of the representatives of the people of the States; our commission must come solely from the citizens of a single State; there can be no district composed of parts of different States. We represent the wants, wishes, opinions, convictions, and aspirations of our respective constituencies. This is the essence of representative and Federal Government. Through us each district makes known its wants and obtains consideration therefor. It must not be obscured that we are only representatives, that we act only in a representative capacity, that we speak in the name of those by whom we are chosen, for them and in their stead we act.

Collectively we represent all the States and the people thereof; individually each represents his respective district and, with his colleagues from his State, that State. The gist of representation is that the representative be freely chosen by those he is to represent; that there shall be no interference with the exercise of this supreme and sovereign right.

In Congress the true relations of the Federal Government and the States practically result in wise and cordial results. Its members, chosen by the Legislatures and people of the respective States, compose the Legislature of the United States, jealous of the honor of the General Government, yet zealous to preserve the autonomy of the States and the rights and equality of the people thereof.

It is only by such a Congress that our duplex system can be preserved. A Congress chosen by Federal officers must soon become a body subservient to central power, and in its rank and file would soon lose its representative character. Insensibly the relative and constitutional rights and powers of the States and Federal Government would undergo radical and disastrous change.

American institutions mean a Federal Union composed of States governed by a written constitution, in which a Congress chosen by the States and the peoples thereof exercise all legislative powers as the representatives of the governed, on whose consent the Government rests and by whose sovereignty all power is delegated to their representatives. This measure humiliates the States, sets aside its certificates, and surrounds its ballot-boxes with irresponsible officers charged with the duty of packing this House.

It is a measure modeled after the force bills passed by an English Parliament for Irish constituencies and defended on precisely the same grounds. Mendacious slanders of the people of the weaker sections; exaggerated and sensational reports of occasional acts of violence; passionate appeals to the people of other sections; petty persecutions and irritating annoyances by an unscrupulous constabulary; offensive and insulting charges thrown at the representatives; urgent party persuasion characterize in common those who pass force bills there and press force bills here.

Grievances do not justify either change of institutions or destruction of them. Reform ought not to be revolution. This changes the customs and laws of a century, it inaugurates a new system, it is revolution, and that towards espionage, surveillance, irresponsible powers, the building up of clashing tribunals, the vast accretion of this central power, the impairment of the dignity of the States, the diminution of the independence of the Representatives of the people.

Now, a Representative may assert his independence of party decrees and appeal to his constituents; then he must meet in fierce contest this powerful and compact machinery. There is nothing in the condition of any part of any State which justifies any Federal election law; but I aver that there can never be palliation, much less justification, for such a measure as this.

No one who has listened to this debate needs any further assurance that its real purpose is to secure the return of Republican Representatives from certain of the Southern districts. In this debate much has been said of the North and of the South; of the slaveholding and of the non-slaveholding States; of the States in rebellion and the loyal States. I represent a district somewhat peculiarly circumstanced. The State of Kentucky was a border slaveholding State. It is therefore classed with the Southern States and grouped with the disloyal States, as they are called.

At the beginning of the war it was divided, having elected a Democratic governor in 1859, but through the division of the Democratic party it cast its electoral vote in 1860 for Mr. Bell. It remained loyal to the Government during the whole of the war. It furnished fully and generously its quota of troops—not only its own, but it helped to complete the quota of Massachusetts by furnishing from its colored population a certain number of regiments. The General Government, since the introduction of Kentucky as a State, has never called upon it for any sacrifice that has not been given. It had no Tories during the Revolution. It had no secret traitors during the war of 1812. It furnished more than its quota in the war with Mexico, and when the late war came upon us, while it was divided and many of her sons went into the Confederate army, she did her full duty to the Federal cause, and she has asked less for it than any State of the Union. She has not been clamorous about pensions, she has not debauched her public men by organized raids on the Treasury, and she to-day yields precedence to no State in her undivided loyalty to the Constitution, in her faithful obedience to all the laws enacted by the Government, and her generous affection for the entire country. There has not been a contested election from any of her districts for more than a score of years, and her elections have been absolutely fair. No Federal supervision is needed at her polls. Her Senators are chosen without regard to their wealth. No scandal attaches to her Legislature in its act of choosing her Senators; and her Representatives on this floor in this and in preceding Congresses hold unsullied commissions. She has treated her colored citizens not only with justice, but with generosity; without any pressure brought to bear during reconstruction times. By her own voluntary act she distributes her school fund per capita without regard to race, and her people are getting along peaceably and prosperously.

The animosities of the war could not be kept alive even for the sake of party office, and by the steady but powerful influence of daily good-fellowship and neighborly, mutual interest her people have become one. She accepts with good-natured complacency the Phariseism of those good people who thank God that they are not as that poor publican, and she feels that there is no system of law which any other part of the United States can live under that she can not also bear. Her mountain region, where the Republican party has been and is powerful, is becoming richer every day. Those feuds which grew out of the peculiar nature of society and civilization in those sections, pass away as railroads penetrate the fastnesses of her mountains and develop the richness of her resources. Yet interference in her elections by such a law as this will be full of mischief.

The grave problem of the races is to her not of danger, but only of gravity. But it is to other parts of the country full of danger, and the very first requisite to its proper solution is non-interference. The absolute necessity of home rule never was so complete as in those States. No community can afford to permit itself to permanently do wrong, to permanently commit injustice, to permanently be poor. If left to itself it will make the most out of the conditions which surround it and of it the elements which constitute it. It best knows the evils and the remedies for those evils. It feels the grievances most and is most interested in the removal of those grievances. It is most deeply involved in the development to the highest degree of the money-earning power of its citizens, and this must rest finally upon content. There can be no permanent prosperity based on discontent.

No people know this so well as the Southern people. No thinkers more clearly apprehend this truth and no communities more intensely understand and appreciate it than those mixed communities. For twenty-five years those people, white and black, have been living together trying to reach the very best possible results, and if man is capable of self-government and if christianity is in truth from God, the ultimate result is certain. But there must be internal peace; there must be mutual good-will; there must be a sense of complete dependence of each upon the other and of security from all outside interference.

This is a truth which the Republican party will not understand; will not try to understand; do not seem to desire to understand, that the white Southern people are the most interested of all the white people in the world in the highest possible development of the colored people; that the Southern colored people are the most interested of all people in the world in securing the friendship, the kindness, and the good will of the Southern white people. Any state of society produced by outside interference is unnatural and must be temporary. There can not be a permanently unnatural condition of society any more than there can be a permanent storm. The subsidence of passion must restore the people to their normal condition, to their natural status.

Therefore, in the end, intelligence must prevail, even if in the mean while it is wholly disarmed and to ignorance and to brute force is given every possible weapon. War and all violence must be temporary, and every special enactment, every law thought to be called for by an exceptional exigency, every unusual system or special machinery must equally be temporary, for it is exceptional and abnormal. This has been illustrated since the war. In 1865 there was not a Democratic organization in the land that had any power. The South was bankrupted; her public credit gone; her private credit destroyed; every institution or corporation blotted out; her houses burned; her fences destroyed; her fields devastated; her system of labor reversed; her civil governments obliterated, and military authority made dominant; Congress passed exceptional statutes applicable only to the South; troops were billeted upon her people; military officers usurped governmental and legislative functions; Legislatures were dispersed by the order of the soldiery; courts-martial took the place of civil tribunals; Representatives sat on this floor with commissions signed by generals; the people had no real Representatives in Congress. Necessarily such an abnormal and unnatural condition could not last. When the Republicans controlled every State, had possession of both Houses of Congress, possessed the Executive, with the Army in command, with the South utterly prostrate, the experiment was tried. There were annoyances, embarrassments, bloodshed, and unhappy occurrences; there were thefts, public demoralization, and many transactions which were deplorable. These are the necessary concomitants of a system of force and of fraud. They accompany the domination in Ireland and India, as well as in the Southern States of America. No thinker was surprised at such occurrences, no student of history believed that this condition could continue.

Now, this is the use of statutory force instead of military force. It is as unnatural and as abnormal as that experiment. It is less violent. It is less public. The forces are concealed under the forms of law. The persons are called marshals and supervisors instead of generals and soldiers; but the system is as abnormal and as unnatural and as illegal; and the result must be precisely the same. Temporarily the good feeling in the South will be suspended. Suspicion will take the place of friendship. Race passion will take the place of a desire for the general good. Hostility will be substituted for kindness. The desire for party advantage will take forms of violence. To the operation of oppressive and iniquitous laws will be put the resistance of intelligence. Extravagance will mark the execution of the law. The venal will be attracted by it. The purchasable will be temporarily seduced by its bribe. Those who expect gain in any form by it will give to it the most violent and unscrupulous construction. Northern capital that is invested there will become alarmed, and there will be a temporary arrest of the industrial progress which has marked the last ten years, which is now so pleasant to any lover of his country. Trade will be disturbed. The Southern market, which now takes so much of Northern products, will become straitened. The men who sell in the South will have a limited market. It will be followed by bankruptcies, both North and South. There will be a temporary suspension of progress. It may be that in certain localities, under the rude and unscrupulous execution of the harsh and iniquitous provisions of this bill, there may be a resistance which will produce collision.

But all this will be but temporary. As in March, 1877, the Republican party turned the colored men of the South over to the white men of the South; sacrificed Packard in Louisiana and the representatives of the Republican party in South Carolina and Florida, paying the returning boards who fraudulently gave the votes of those States to Mr. Hayes by the bestowal of Federal offices and Federal honors, so the day will come when the Republican party can no longer carry this bill and be responsible for the outrages committed under it, and will again turn over the colored people of the South to the white people of the South. That problem must be solved, gentlemen of the North, by the people resident within those States, and you who do not live there postpone the day of permanent peace and give to the colored man the burden of that postponement every time you undertake to interfere with it.

Gentlemen from Massachusetts may talk in eloquent terms of the luminous ideas of Massachusetts, and gentlemen from Iowa may declaim about a killing bullet to secure a pure ballot; but stripped of rhetoric and passion, of declamation and hypocrisy, it means simply in plain English that the negro shall be used to enact laws which will give to certain industries private aggrandizement out of the public Treasury and that he shall then be turned over to the mercies of the people among whom he resides; and I charge those gentlemen and their associates who vote for this bill, under the solemnity of my oath as a representative of the American people and with a profound consciousness of the issues involved in this debate, that all the violence that this act, if passed, will produce, in justice will lie at their door, safe in their homes they will be the guilty, and from their act will proceed all the evil consequences which this bill may produce.

They at the bar of God will be responsible, and if I had the power I would appeal from those Representatives of Massachusetts to the people of Massachusetts. I would appeal to the descendants of the Adamases, the Quincys, the Warrens, the Otises, who know that power, either by the sword or by statute, can only retard, and not prevent, the development of human ideas and of free institutions. I would appeal to the culture of Harvard; to the men who work in the factories of Lynn and Lawrence; to those who are the real Massachusetts, to protest against an act which is based upon distrust of the people; which violates the fundamental principle of home government; which puts into the hands of from fifty to one hundred the whole election machinery of a great Congressional district; which brings into the arena of partisan contests the judiciary of the country; which destroys the relation between the States and the General Government; which takes from the people of the State the control of the ballot-box when they are in the act of choosing their Representatives in Congress; which spits upon the certificate of the State officers under the great seal of the State, and which loots the public Treasury by the employment of a vast horde of mercenaries to perpetuate a party in power; and I not only appeal to the people of Massachusetts, but to those of every State of the Union.

Is there no better contribution that Scandinavian exiles who come among us for broader homes and ampler freedom can bring to the prosperity of their adopted country than to bring destruction to the freedom of the ballot-box and the liberty of the citizen to select his representatives without supervision or oppressive and impertinent interference? I appeal from those Southern Republicans who profess to represent great States like Maryland and Tennessee and who show their distrust of the States which bore them to the people whom they represent to say whether it is true that they can not be trusted without the supervision of Federal office-holders and without domiciliary visits from deputy marshals. I know Maryland, Tennessee, and Kentucky, and I protest that their Republicans do not deserve this humiliating distrust, and their Democrats have secured to all free and pure elections and wise and generous governments; and those States are happy, contented, prosperous, and growing. Can it be that, in the week which is made sacred by another Fourth of July, as a result of a hundred and odd years of American liberty and of the American Constitution, the people have become so corrupt and violence has become so nearly universal and fraud so brazen that the power which those States control is sufficient for all other objects and purposes in life, but is powerless to secure a free and pure ballot? If this be so, then, indeed, is American liberty a failure and our particular form of government a disaster.

Mr. MCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, the proposition in this amendment, strangely enough, does the very thing against which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] protests. It takes away from the people the power of election and certification of their Representatives. It takes away the right of organization of a House of Representatives and provides that, in every case in which this law (if it becomes a law) shall be applied, the returns shall be made to the Speaker of the House by the chief supervisor. To what Speaker? In the organization of the House more than one-half of this body may be disfranchised by this proposition in the choice of a Speaker. Does it not say so? Does it not provide that in every case where there has been a supervision of election under this bill the returns shall be sent to the Speaker of the House? Am I wrong in that?

Is it not the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, rose.

Mr. MCOMAS. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not catch the question.

Mr. MCOMAS. Does not this amendment provide that in every case where there has been a national supervision the returns of the election for that district shall be made to the Speaker of the House?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It provides that the returns as tabulated by the chief supervisor shall be forwarded here to be laid before the House—not the certificate of election, but the tabulated returns.

Mr. MCOMAS. But there will be no certificate of the election at all in that case by the national supervisors.

Mr. HEMPHILL. None, except by the State authorities.

Mr. MCOMAS. Now, that means that where there has been a supervision either the whole supervision shall be null and void or that the men who come here, even if that certification is finally to obtain, though declared to be elected, shall stand on the outside until the Speaker of the House shall dispose of or refer their cases.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will say to the gentleman that this is right in the line of the very argument that has been made on the other side, that this is a bill for supervision. If that is the object, gentlemen on the other side should vote for this amendment.

Mr. MCOMAS. The proposition is that the Speaker of the House, elected in the manner I have indicated, shall refer the credentials of the gentleman himself and of myself to a committee of his own choosing—

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; not our credentials.

Mr. MCOMAS. Yes, of course; our credentials.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; our credentials we get from the governor of the State.

Mr. MCOMAS. But our credentials in this case ought to be the result of the supervision made by the national officers as well as that of the State officers.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman mixes up terms. Supervision and credentials are entirely different things.

Mr. MCOMAS. The proposition is that the Speaker shall send these supervisors' certifications to a committee that he will appoint to pass upon your rights and mine.

Mr. HEMPHILL. He does that every day.

Mr. McCOMAS. I submit that this sort of centralization which has been so much declaimed against on the other side of the House should not now be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, that is too absurd.

Mr. McCOMAS. There is no trouble about this supervision. There is no reason why there should be a supervision at all unless it is to have some effect in results. Gentlemen assume here that when the supervisors are appointed by our United States judges—judges of some of the highest courts in the land, untainted in their high offices—

Mr. HEMPHILL. You are not describing the judge who presides in a certain part of the United States; nobody would recognize him from that description.

Mr. McCOMAS. I am describing judges who in this country rank next to the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, judges whose record is so good after a century of our national existence that declamation which undertakes to disparage them will fall harmless. These judges stand as high certainly as the judges of the State, as high at least as the local election officers of the State machinery. Sir, if the State election officers make honest returns of the elections and United States supervisors stand beside them and also make returns, the very publicity of the action of these two bodies of officers will bring about fair results. The apprehensions of gentlemen on the other side upon this subject are simply a nightmare which they bring here in the morning from their dreams. How could a law live for five years in this country if under it the supervisors, in defiance of the actual returns, give the results of the elections differently from the results as declared by the State officers?

I look to see as the result of this legislation a duplication of the returns giving a tabulation of the result on both sides, constrained to be fair by its publicity, by its openness, and by the challenge of public scrutiny before the courts.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I am strongly persuaded that gentlemen on the other side of the House who favor the adoption of the provisions of the bill now under discussion have not seriously thought of the consequences which this bill makes possible. Under existing laws the State officers certify from the returns made to them the Representatives chosen to seats in this House. Under the bill now presented for our consideration a board of returning officers is provided, and they are to send to this House the certification of their judgment as to the parties chosen to be its members. When these two sets of certificates (conflicting as they may be) come to this House you provide that the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall ignore the certificates given by the chosen officers of the people who have voted for Representatives—the certificates given by the public servants they have selected to carry out their will—and you provide that your creatures whom you invest with power for life, responsible to nobody, from a distant State, it may be, shall give certificates and seats in this House to the persons whom they declare to be the representatives of thousands or hundreds of thousands of people.

Have you thought of what the consequences may be to this country? When a Democratic House shall have been chosen, when Democratic governors and secretaries of state shall send the accredited servants of the people here, showing a political majority of twenty-five or thirty on that side, your supervisors may certify twenty-five or thirty men instead of those whom the people have chosen; may send them here with certificates; and your Clerk of the House, under the terrible penalties which you provide in this bill, must accord them seats on this floor. What will be the consequences to the country?

Gentlemen, you ought not to forget that we belong to the Anglo-Saxon race. It is idle for you to shut your eyes to the history of this people. Trace them back for centuries, and from the time you find the first germ of them in the forests of Germany they have been jealous of their rights, they have been bold and prompt to assert them, and they have never counted the cost, whether of blood or of treasure, in vindicating them. The history of our race is the history of a struggle for two thousand years to retain the right, the God-given right, the natural-born right of the citizen to control the Government that exercises its power over his head.

Why, sir, local self-government is the very germ of our political existence. Our fathers declared we could not maintain a free government on this soil except by leaving it to the localities themselves and giving into the hands of the people everything pertaining to their local affairs. What responsibility do your supervisors hold to the people of the United States? None whatever. What responsibility do the governors of your States, the secretaries of state, and the returning boards of your different States, chosen by the people, appointed by the people, elected by the people, hold in your domestic affairs? They are the creatures of the people, the servants of the people, they are under the control of the people, and they can dismiss them at will. They can protect themselves from wrong or aggressions at their hands and can force a strict obedience of the laws of the State. They are accountable to the people of the State for the duties intrusted to them.

Now, gentlemen, you would not pass the bill—there is not a single gentleman over on that side who would have voted for the bill two years ago if the President of the United States then in office had been clothed with the power of appointing these supervisors. You would not do it, and you know it, and laying your hand on your hearts and looking up to your God, if the judges who are to appoint these people were Democrats instead of Republicans, you know that you would vote solidly against any such proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it depends very much from what party standpoint you look at these matters. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] on yesterday spoke about the very great danger of these returning boards and of the fears that he entertained because of the powers intrusted to them of kindling the fires of political persecution.

Now, in 1876, the returning boards of the States of South Carolina and Florida and Louisiana, boards organized by the State governments, certified in the election of that year to certain men being entitled to seats in the electoral college. These certificates were made by the State organizations; and no man and no set of men have ever been denounced with more vindictiveness than this class of men have been denounced from that day to this by the Democratic party of this country. The Democratic organization of this country sought to set aside the certifications made by these State returning boards, by their own State organizations, and to declare a man elected to the Presidency of the country in open defiance of these certifications, because the State boards, as they claimed, were corrupt.

Now, what is the object of the pending bill? It is to provide that the United States shall have supervision of the men elected to represent the people in particular districts of this country. It is to provide that the National Government, to which these men are the accredited representatives, shall have supervision to say that the people from which they claim to be the accredited Representatives, are, in fact, represented, and not misrepresented, by the men who come here and claim to hold the right from them to act as their representatives upon this floor.

The gentleman from Texas speaks about the States. The Constitution provides that the States shall be entitled to two representatives in the Senate of the United States, and the Senators are the representatives of the States as States. They will see to it that the State is not harmed; that the State organization is preserved when attacked. But when it comes to this representative body it is the duty of this House to see that the people of the various representative districts throughout the land have not their rights infringed by any local, temporary wrong.

I referred the other evening to the provision embodied in the forty-third article of The Federalist, in which Mr. Madison alluded to the necessity of the National Government having supervision of these questions; and he did so for the reason that if any local temporary wrongs existed it was better that outside and extraneous influences should supervise it than that the people should be left to struggle between themselves over the settlement of such a question, on the ground that they would be less liable to be influenced by passion and prejudice. And it is on the theory that Mr. Madison has laid down in the article of The Federalist, to which I have referred, because these representatives are the representatives of the people of the districts, and not of the States, that this House ought to see that they are represented by the men that they have in fact chosen, and not by another set of men.

Now, the provision proposed to this bill, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I think is a most important one. I believe that gentlemen on that side of the House, from what I have heard among them, ought to concede this to be a very desirable condition of things. I believe in Great Britain it is provided, instead of having the legal committees in this body to determine the right of members to their seats upon the floor (which all, at least on that side, claim is not a judicial determination, but wholly partisan), that these questions should be submitted for judicial investigation to the courts; and with that amendment I do not think any man in this body should make objection to the provision for certification of who is in fact elected a Representative in this body.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, I have heard a great deal during the course of this debate about "a free ballot and a fair count," and I have turned the matter over in my mind to ascertain the reason gentlemen were so anxious for this; or, rather, I have tried to find out the correct definition of the terms, and I have ascertained from the speeches which have been made and the action of members on the floor that "a free ballot and a fair count" meant a ballot that elected our party and a count that counted us in. [Laughter.]

This is an effort here, Mr. Speaker, to perpetuate you Republicans in power. For the first time in quite a number of years the Republican party finds itself in possession of the executive office and of both bodies constituting the legislative department of the Government.

The methods by which it secured this supremacy were, to say the least, questionable. The party fought with a desperation which seemed born of despair. There was no means unused which might secure votes. The "fat" was fried out of the protected manufacturers and the "floaters" were arranged in "blocks of five." Nothing was sacred from the "campaign liar." No appeal was unspoken, no "influence" was untried. Success came not by the popular vote of the country, but in the Electoral College a majority was secured and in the Congressional districts a few more Republicans than Democrats were chosen.

It is true that had there been a fair representation of the whole people these seats would be filled by a majority of Democrats, but this was not the way in which the Republicans had arranged it while in power in many of the Eastern States.

I submit an extract from The Baltimore Sun, which sets out the inequalities of representation as they exist in some of these States:

WASHINGTON, June 10.

Some brief mention has heretofore been made of the remarkably disproportionate influence and power in national affairs exercised by the Republican voters of New England. It is an interesting subject and will well repay entering upon details. The bulk of the political literature which almost engulfs the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is contributed by New England Senators and Members, the burden of whose lay is the alleged denial of representation to voters in other sections than their own. Mr. Speaker REED in speeches and interviews and magazine articles in the last six months has clamored without cessation for the doctrine that so many black voters in the South, constituting a certain percentage of the population, are entitled to a proportionate number of Representatives in Congress. It is for securing this end that the election measures which he so earnestly advocates are to be directed. If he will only consent to apply the same principle to his own section the measures to be brought forward would most probably receive a much stronger support than is likely to come to them under existing circumstances.

It is really astonishing that so little comment has been provoked by the condition of political affairs in New England. It is marvelous that the descendants of the Anglo-Saxon race have not risen in revolution at the denial of political rights which has prevailed for more than half a century. No such Congressional and legislative gerrymandering has been continued or enforced elsewhere in the world as that existing in New England for Republican benefit. At the last Congressional elections in November, 1888, the Republicans polled an aggregate of 449,090 votes and the opposition polled 378,477, or very much more than two-fifths. Yet the Republicans have all of the twelve Senators from New England and twenty-three out of twenty-six Representatives.

In Connecticut the Republicans were in a minority of more than three thousand, yet they have the two Senators and three of the four Representatives. In New Hampshire the Republicans polled 45,271 votes, and the opposition 45,430, yet the Republicans hold on to both Senators and both Representatives. In Rhode Island the Republicans have held on to power not only by unfair apportionments, but by the most wholesale disfranchisement of citizens. That State is bound to slip from them now, and if it is ever possible to receive a reasonably fair apportionment Connecticut and New Hampshire would soon follow suit.

The Republican Senators and Representatives from New England, so many of whom are occupying seats to which they are not justly entitled, have put themselves into positions of commanding influence in both branches of Congress. In the Senate they are at the head of the most important and influential committees and exercise a control over legislation monstrously unequal. Of the two Maine Senators Mr. FRYE is at the head of the Committee on Commerce and Mr. HALE is chairman of the Committee on the Census. The two New Hampshire Senators respectively head the Committees on Education and Labor and Immigration. The Senators from the insignificant State of Vermont, which hardly contributes enough to the national Treasury to pay its own office-holders, preside over the Committees on Finance and the Judiciary. The Massachusetts Senators have the chairmanships of the Committees on Privileges and Elections and on Indian Affairs. Senator ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, is chairman of the Committee on Rules. The two Connecticut Senators hold the Committees on Territories and on Military Affairs. Mr. DIXON, of Rhode Island, is the only New England Senator who is not a chairman. This is because he only came to the Senate in November last. But it may be taken for granted that in a short time he will be found at the head of some big committee.

In the House we have Mr. REED, of Maine, whose election is only compassed by wholesale and open bribery, assuming despotic power in the Speaker's chair and at the same time acting as chairman of the Committee on Rules. Of his colleagues, Mr. DINGLEY is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, which is equivalent to a chairmanship; Mr. BUTLER is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and Mr. MILLIKEN of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; Mr. SPOONER, of Rhode Island, is chairman of the Committee on Accounts; Mr. GROUT, of Vermont, is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia; Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts, is chairman of the Committee on Expenditures of the Interior Department; Mr. LODGE, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, and Mr. CAMPBELL, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

It need not be supposed that these New England Republicans, who have walked into Congress over the slaughtered political rights of nearly one-half the population of their section, are satisfied with monopolizing the chairmanships of the principal committees. They will be found stowed away in top places of all other desirable committees, so that their influence permeates every species of legislation for every section. Effrontery has long been characteristic of the New England Republican Congressman, but it is difficult to conceive how they, the beneficiaries of the almost complete practical denial of political rights to hundreds of thousands of white voters, can assume to discourse so much upon alleged and imaginary similar instances as to black voters.

How the Republicans increased their majority from a certified 9 to 20 the country knows. Elections were held on the floor of this House and the wishes of the majority of the Committee on Elections complied with by forcing members on the other side to vote with them even against the decision of their judgment and the dictates of their conscience. That it is an unfair and usurping majority none know better than those whose votes brought it into being. At the other end of the Capitol, too, history, infamous and degrading, has been made, and "the Montana steal" will take its place next in importance to the theft of the Presidency among the outrages and crimes committed by the Republican party in its fraudulent career since the war.

But the Republican party had in the White House a President chosen by the minority of the voters of the Union and who was repudiated by the people among whom he lived and who knew him best; in the Senate a power which had been strengthened by fraud; in the House a majority which had been made at the sacrifice of justice and right, and this supremacy it is determined to uphold at all hazards.

Confidence in Republican methods, regard for its pledges, did not exist in the American mind. A free and untrammelled election meant the triumph of the Democracy at the November election. It meant the overthrow of the fraudulent majority in this House and the return of the party of the people to the control of this, the representative body of the Congress.

Animated by a spirit which would prefer revolution to the surrender of a power fraudulently obtained and unjustly held, the Republican party of this House early set its machinery in motion to serve, not the people, but its unholy partisan ends.

First, it revolutionized the rules of the House and trampled with relentless power upon all the precedents which had been established for a century and which had been followed by distinguished patriots in this House, the latchet of whose shoes they were unworthy to loosen, and established new rules under which they said they could "do business." That business seemed to be to deplete the Treasury and steal the rights and liberties of the American citizen.

Old-fashioned folks supposed that we were sent to this Capitol by the people to deliberate and consider concerning their interests and to legislate for their welfare, and, in doing this,

Bound by no party's arbitrary sway,
We'd follow right where'er it led the way.

But judge of their horror when they heard it announced by "the organ of the House," the Speaker, that the House of Representatives was "no longer a deliberative body," and when they see the Republican majority of Congress adopting as the motto of their action the sentiment,

Bound by our party's arbitrary sway,
We follow REED where'er he leads the way.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

It was then announced by this leader that it was proposed that the Federal Government should control, supervise, count, and certify to the election of members of Congress, and that it would no longer trust the people of the several States to perform these functions, which had been exercised by them unquestioned since the foundation of the Government. In pursuance of this plan there was aimed this outrageous and damnable blow at the constitutional rights of the people, a blow designed to strike down home rule and concentrate still more power in the Federal Government, to magnify the nation and dwarf the State.

ELECTION SUPERVISORS.

This measure is a distinctively party bill. It was formed as the result of caucus action. It is proposed to pass it, not by appealing to the conscience and judgment of members, but by plying the party whip and threatening the party displeasure. Time at my command does not permit me to analyze this proposed legislation as I would desire. Some of its important provisions I must, however, note, that its diabolical character and revolutionary methods may be understood by those who hear me.

Among the objections to be urged against it, it may be stated that it places, if properly enforced, at the nearly sixty thousand voting places of this country at least three supervisors of election, who are appointed by a chief supervisor, who derives his authority from the United States circuit judge. When it is known that out of all the circuit judges in the United States but two are Democrats it will be seen that these appointments will be of a partisan character.

It is well enough to say that these judges hold their offices for life and are thereby removed from partisan influence; but the American people will never forget the action of the supreme judges associated in the Electoral Commission of 1876, and so long as they remember the now admitted theft of the Presidency and the record made by "Attitude Bradley" you can not make them believe that they, these Federal judges, will be impartial. The argument is both a delusion and a snare.

Such an idea as intrusting the judiciary with any power over the elections is repugnant to the Constitution. The division of the departments of the Government into executive, legislative, and judicial meant that they should be separate in their functions, the legislative to make, the judicial to construe, and the executive to enforce the laws. To confer the power on the judicial department to control in the least degree the election of members of the legislative branch of the Government destroys the intent and undermines the Constitution of our country. It is inimical to our rights and destructive to our liberties. But, again, it establishes, not in words, but in fact, a Federal interference with State elections. In many States, on the same tickets with Congressmen appear the State, county, and city tickets. The election is held on the same day, in the same voting place, by the same officers.

FEDERAL RETURNING BOARD.

Not only do the courts appoint supervisors, but they also make returning boards. The board is to be composed of three persons—two of one party and but one of the other—who shall be life officers or hold "during good behavior." Their certificate and their return is to govern the election, and the person who receives their certificate is entitled to recognition by the Clerk of the House in making up the roll of members. If the Clerk fails to place this name on the list he is subject to a fine of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not less than one year nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and to this is coupled a disqualification to ever thereafter hold any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States. The powers given the supervisors over the voter are great and universal and the punishments for any violation of the provisions of the act are extremely severe.

JURY TRIAL.

We hold as one of the dearest of our rights a speedy trial by a jury of our countrymen. In comparison with this privilege all others sink into insignificance. To obtain this right people in the past have been willing to pull down thrones and trample upon rank. When this right of a fair trial by jury is denied us, what remains? Yet this bill does this. It is not enough that we have Republican circuit and district judges, Republican clerks and Republican marshals, Republican supervisors and Republican returning boards, but to try offenses under this proposed act we must have Republican juries.

Under existing law juries are selected by the clerk of the United States court and a jury commissioner appointed by the court, who, by express law, must belong to a different political party from the clerk. Under this bill the office of jury commissioner is abolished and the clerk selects the jurors. Was any measure more cunningly devised than this to overawe and intimidate the American citizen? Surround the polls with Republican spies and hirelings, with supervisors and deputy United States marshals, clothed, commissioned, and badged by the authority of the Government; place the voter at the mercy of these creatures; render him liable, the victim of petty malice or party spite, to be torn from his family, dragged hundreds of miles from his home, tried in a community where he is a stranger, confronted by witnesses who are his political enemies, and before a jury selected to convict, by a Republican official. Could partisan ingenuity devise a more wicked, diabolical plot against the liberty of the citizen?

TAX ON THE PEOPLE.

Not only does this bill interfere with the right of the citizens of the various Congressional districts to choose their Representatives without Federal dictation or interference; not only does it empower the Federal authorities to pass upon the qualification of voters and place its powerful hand in the ballot-boxes, wherein repose the suffrages of the citizens for their local and State officers; not only does it surround the voting places with so-called supervisors and deputy marshals to overawe and intimidate the voter; not only does it seek to terrorize him by holding up before him the United States courts, officered by Republicans, holding its sessions distant from his home in many cases, and with a panel of jurors selected to convict; but it provides for the payment of these minions of its power—not with the “fat fried out of the manufacturers,” not by means raised by the sanctimonious Wanamaker or the unscrupulous QUAY from “the protected industries,” but out of the Treasury of the United States. It is to be paid by the honest tax-payers of this country out of their scanty earnings, and will be a tax of from five to ten millions of dollars. What is the excuse for this? We know that if the Republican party thought it could maintain its supremacy without it it would not be urging with all its power the passage of this bill. It must present some reason for this unusual and unrepugnant action, and it finds that reason in what it calls

“THE SUPPRESSED NEGRO VOTE OF THE SOUTH.”

It refers to the census for an argument and tells us how many negroes fail to vote at each election. It claims that if these votes were polled they would all be cast for the Republican ticket. Does the Republican party own the negro vote? By what right or authority do they claim it? Because Lincoln signed the emancipation proclamation and Grant forced Lee's surrender at Appomattox? They forget that they have departed from the teachings of each; for the martyred Lincoln, speaking on the battle-field where Northern courage and Southern valor had met in deadly conflict, spoke in favor of the maintenance of “a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people;” and, on his death-bed, after speech was gone, the hand of Grant tremblingly wrote his farewell wish to the people of the North and the South for closer union, for fraternity and peace.

It has departed from the teachings of its leaders and become unworthy of countenance or confidence. Why should the negro vote the Republican ticket? The bold, independent, and patriotic EWART, who as a Republican is accredited here from the State of North Carolina, says that in his State you can not say a man is a Republican because his hair curls and his complexion is black, and this is getting to be more and more the case everywhere throughout the South. The negro is getting educated, and reads, and thinks, and reasons for himself. For him and to him the Republican party has been one of broken pledges and unfulfilled prophecies.

The negro reads that early in the war the party in power declared that it was not a war waged for the liberation of the slave, but for the preservation of the Union. He knows how to discount the loud professions of the Republicans in this respect. When he reads and knows from history that the Democratic party sent as many soldiers to the front as the Republicans, and aided to carry the flag amid the smoke and danger of battle until it floated in triumph over all the Union, he knows how hollow are the pretenses of that organization. He collects, too, that when victory did come he was homeless, and they sheltered him not; he was naked, and they clothed him not; he was hungry, and they fed him not. And when he gathered his household goods about him and attempted to manage for himself, and work unaided and undirected, when he attempted to save a few dollars to supply the wants of old age or to put a roof over his wife and children, he remembers that a Republican institution stole the first fruits of his freedom. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This was more than twenty years ago. Why do you not give them back this money? You have had the power time and time again, but you would not exercise it. Although every President you have had since the war obtained his place by the negro vote, it was left for a Democratic President, Grover Cleveland, to recommend the repayment of this stolen money. Since the first part of this session I have had before the appropriate committee of this House a bill looking to the payment of these just claims, but it has never been reported. Better pay them this money and give practical proof of your devotion to their interests than to pass a measure they do not demand and do not need.

Why should they have confidence in the Republican party? You have made them no promises which you have ever fulfilled. Might not the Southern negro, when you ask him for his vote, respond by asking you, “Where is that 40 acres of ground and where is that mule?”

You adopted a new scheme in Presidential years, and for a time it worked well. You told the colored man that if the Democrats were ever put in power they would re-enslave the negro. You knew it was not so, but it answered the purposes of several campaigns, until finally Grover Cleveland was elected President. He treated everybody fairly; the negro saw his rights were undisturbed and his liberty was unfettered. He found you were false prophets. In 1888 you thought you would try a new dodge; you would work upon his fear and also his superstition. You told him that if the Democrats won they would not enslave him, it was true, but they would put his children into bondage, and then you got him into secret organizations, secret political societies, unpatriotic and un-American in character. I knew one of them; it was called and had secret signs, grips, and passwords which I can not give you. I discovered the existence of this society in my district, and I have no doubt of its having been extended throughout many States of the Union. The members were bound by a terrible oath to vote the Republican ticket and vote it early. I secured a ritual of one of the lodges of this organization, and here is the solemn oath which was administered to each member:

I, ———, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, do solemnly swear that I am a Union-loving citizen of this State; that I will do everything in my power to sustain the party on the day of election; that I will do this by casting my vote for the party of the Union, which is the Republican party, and for the Republican party only; and that I will cast my ballot as soon and as early as I can get to the polls; and that after that is done I will use every honorable means to get every legal Republican voter in my precinct to cast his vote. I further promise and swear, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, that I will not make known any of the secrets, or secret works, or the numbers of the members of this order; nor its objects, signs, or passwords, to any person not a member thereof, binding myself under the penalty of being branded as a perjured villain, a traitor to the order of the Union, so help me God.

President Harrison holds office by virtue of the colored vote. Take from him the negro vote of Indiana, of Ohio, of Illinois, and other States and he would be an unheard-of quantity in American politics. The reading negro knows this; and he knows that his services are not recognized. He pulls the corn and fills the crib that the white Republicans may be fed while he starves. Why should he remain with such a party when his friends, those who employ him, those who pay him, those he lives among, are not Republicans, but Democrats? He is fast deserting, as he should desert, this ungrateful party of broken pledges and unfulfilled prophecies. The negro can care for himself, and all sensible men of his race know that all this talk of protecting him in the exercise of the rights of his citizenship is voice, and nothing more, spoken to excuse this diabolical blow aimed at the very life of the Republic.

In a few days we celebrate the anniversary of American Independence, when, revolting against unjust laws, the colonies of the New World threw off the British yoke. We commemorate that occasion with bonfires and illuminations, with the booming of cannon, with universal rejoicing. The movement then proclaimed brought us liberty as the end of war. This liberty we have since enjoyed. We have marched forward to greatness and renown, at once the wonder and admiration of the world. Among the nations of the earth these “free and independent States” stand proudly forth. Their power is acknowledged in every foreign court. Their flag is respected wherever it floats. Shall we in the month that marked the Declaration of our Independence enact a law which is subversive of our liberties and I believe will be destructive of our free institutions? No! a thousand times no! Let us preserve this rich heritage of liberty and transmit it, untarnished and unimpaired, to our posterity.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I have been amused by the suggestions just made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] that on this question the policy of the Republican party had been dictated by one man. The truth is that no current public question has taken so large a place in the popular thought. Behind the Speaker of this House is the Republican majority of the House, and in uniting to protect free citizenship in the United States they stand together for the Republican millions of America. A good deal has been said here about the Constitution of the United States. Gentlemen seem to forget, in arguing this question, that the Constitution has been amended so as to conform to the history of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I have listened with attention to the view often expressed here that an ignorant race ought not to govern this country. There is no such danger involved in this bill, but even if there were I had rather see the nation governed by men who obey the Constitution without being able to read it than by men who trample upon the Constitution, but can read it in ten languages. [Applause on the Republican side.]

When the great amendments were added to the Constitution citizenship was lifted above State lines and made a national thing. So far as I am concerned I would have the nation go to the full length of investigating it with all the authority of the law and of putting behind it all the force there is in the Republic. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The present status of the negro in the South is the completion of an open programme, announced twenty years ago by the Democratic leaders on this floor, in the days when the rude contrivances of murder and violence were introduced as decisive factors in Southern politics. With no word of reproach, the minority of the committee sent to investigate these outrages asserted in their report that the freedmen ought to be stripped of the political influence awarded to them by the Constitution. They quoted Mr. Lincoln's maxim that the nation could not exist half slave and half free, and said that "the paraphrase of that proposition is equally true, that no nation can long exist half black and half white." They predicted the speedy overthrow of the Republican party and set that event as "the end of the political power of the negro among the white men on this continent."

That report, signed by Mr. Blair of Missouri, Mr. Bayard of Delaware, Mr. Cox of New York, Mr. Beck of Kentucky, and other Democratic leaders, furnished the partisan warrant under which the gradual process of disfranchisement has gone on, until to-day in a large area of the territory lately in rebellion the forms and substance of universal suffrage have practically disappeared. The cheerful participation of the Democratic party of the North in this crime and the eagerness of its leaders to deny the facts and to frame a cheap apology for their allies, have greatly facilitated the progress of lawlessness in the South. Anarchy never before flourished under auspices so accommodating. The South has been left free to invent the instruments of fraud without the loss of self-respect incident to lying about it before the world.

No nation is strong enough to concede to any part of its people the right to nullify its laws. Cicero relates that on one occasion the twelve tables of the Roman law were struck by lightning and the solid metal melted to a shapeless mass. We have lived to see the great enactments that followed the national victory of 1865 eaten up by moths and covered up by dust, until the parchment upon which they were solemnly engrossed has become fit for nothing, except to comfort an occasional brewer getting away from the jurisdiction of a State court or some panic-stricken corporation trying to dodge the fury of a State Legislature. It is an ominous thing that the nation of America has begun its second century by casting out the manuscript of equal rights to be trodden under the feet of lawless men.

I gladly stand with the Republican party in the enactment of a statute which seeks to restore the wasted vigor of the national life. I believe that the cowardly acquiescence of the American people in the overthrow of free citizenship portends the approach of perils fatal to the welfare of the Republic. Already it has discredited the dignity of our citizenship abroad, since no nation that deserts its plain duty to its people at home can be expected to do much for their rights away from home. It has depreciated the level of citizenship even in those quarters not commonly infected by the atmosphere of election frauds.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] referred a moment ago to the case of Mike Mullen, the police captain in Cincinnati, who, in the election of 1884, without information or legal process, arrested more than a hundred voters and imprisoned them until the election was over. He was indicted for that crime by a Federal grand jury, tried before a Democratic judge, Judge Baxter, of the southern district of Ohio—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Did you say that Judge Baxter was a Democrat?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Judge Baxter was a Republican.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Whatever the politics of the judge may have been there was no dispute as to the facts in this case. For, after the Government's testimony was all in the prisoner changed his plea in open court, and the just judge, with burning words of indignation, gave him the full benefit of the law, saying that it was a shame that the law provided no adequate penalty for so great a crime. Yet within a few months, on the petition of the governor of Ohio, the President of the United States extended to this convicted felon the free grace of executive pardon, turned him out to prey on the politics of Ohio, world without end, and from all that I can learn he is now in full fellowship with the party management of that state. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Again, the miserable consent of the nation to this crime against free citizenship has brought about exactly what John C. Calhoun foresaw, when he said in 1836, in trying to show that no service would be rendered the negro by setting him free, that without political equality emancipation instead of abolishing slavery would only change the form and conditions of servitude. We witness to-day in the Southern States the swift encroachment of the new forms of servitude. This fact makes the election question also a labor question. Within fifty years every manual occupation of the United States will face the open competition of this growing and scattering mass of disfranchised and helpless workmen.

A republic with an outcast industrial population rapidly increasing in number can spend its time to better advantage than by debating old questions about State rights and negro supremacy. Already the leaders of organized American labor discern the direction of events. In the New York World of June 15, Mr. Powderly prints a letter which every man interested in the welfare of the workingman ought to read. It is as follows:

While I was standing at the end of the bridge that spans the Ohio River in Cincinnati one day not long ago, a carriage drew up to the curb and the occupant spoke to me in this fashion:

"What can be done to raise the standard of labor in the factories of the South? I am a manufacturer in Cincinnati and am willing to operate my factories on the short-hour plan if the labor organizations will do something to keep the factory hands of the South from working from ten to fifteen hours a day."

I asked him where his chief point of competition was located. "All over the Southern States," he said. "Factories are springing up everywhere below here, and they can afford to undersell us because they have the advantage of short wages and long hours."

I was already aware of the fact that the field of factory operations had been widened and developed wonderfully in the South during the past five years. When I went through the Southern States in the winter of 1885 I noticed but little change in the workday life of the inhabitants. They seemed to plod on in the same rut they had traveled in some years ago when I passed through that territory, but last November, when going to Atlanta, I could not help noticing the wonderful change in the appearance of the country.

On every side of the railroad could be seen the many-storied brick factories that had been erected or were in course of construction. Coming back over another line, the same sights were seen. In the iron and coal belts of the South the change is more marked, for rolling-mills, blast furnaces, and iron foundries have been put in operation, and, with an inexhaustible supply of coal and iron within speaking distance of the mills, with good railroad facilities and with plenty of determination, money, and push, the people who operate these concerns are reaching out to take the market that the Pennsylvania rolling-mills and blast furnaces once felt so secure in possessing.

With the era of factory life dawning on the South so rapidly, and in the very place where the cotton can be thrown from the field into the factory window, with the fuel close at hand and cheap, with a climate so mild that the workmen can sleep outdoors during nine months of the year and part of the other three under an umbrella, where labor is cheap and men are willing to work as long as they are able to stand on their legs, the manufacturers of New England will soon find themselves standing face to face with a very grave and perplexing question. Most of the factories are running on Northern and Eastern capital, and the old, old cry of economy is heard on every hand.

"We get fuel cheap, cotton cheap, and right at the door of the mill; workmen are not so independent as in the North, and they work very cheaply and live so economically that they can undersell their Northern brothers. We can therefore afford to sell our product much cheaper than can the Northern manufacturer," they say.

If the Northern, Eastern, and Middle States find themselves forced to lower the standard of wages to successfully compete with the South, who will receive wages enough to buy what is manufactured?

Edward Bellamy says: "The plutocratic tendency dates back thirty years. It has increased so rapidly that it is enough to scare any thinking man. If it continues to increase as it has in the past the wealth of the country will be wholly in the hands of a small fraction of the people, and the rest of us will have to live on wages."

If the manufacturers in this ungodly age of competition will wage war on each other and in the fight lower the wages of the workmen to the smallest fraction on which a human being can exist and work, "the rest of us" will not be able to live on wages, or rather we will not get a chance to earn wages, for the poorest-fed dorky of the South or the latest importation from Europe or Asia will be better qualified to live on the wages of the future than "the rest of us," and we will have to hunt bigger game than will be found in the woods where labor is paid. When that day comes hundreds of the manufacturers who now seek for low wages and cheap raw material will be, with "the rest of us," hunting for something to eat, without work, for they will be tramps, like "the rest of us."

It is idle to suppose that the riches of public liberty won through an awful ministry of blood can be thrown away in the same generation without involving speedy and measureless penalties. It may be that we have the first of these in the approaching degradation of the level of our industrial life, to which Mr. Powderly refers. I sometimes fear that the most searching and merciless lash of God's wrath is yet to come, when the financial and economical policy of the nation is dictated by men who come up from the deserted polling places of the South, bringing with them the half-forgotten platform of plantation politics, the simple creed of free trade cut with a pair of scissors from the old Confederate constitution.

I support this bill because in some small degree it offers to the industrious millions of the South the prospect of citizenship under national protection. I understand how impotent a thing is the law when it deals without the aid of public opinion with the fixed purposes of anarchy. "The operation of the wisest laws," says Gibbon, "is imperfect and precarious." I would not for that reason reject the arm of the law. To do that would be for civil government to abdicate in order to meet the convenience of the criminal classes. I know that in the presence of this question some Republicans are full of doubt, perplexity, and fear. In the midst of them all I want to see the Republican party stand faithful to the obligation laid upon it by the providence of God in the emancipation of an unfortunate race—united as one man to defend the sanctity of American citizenship. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the question first for consideration is that of the power of Congress to legislate upon this subject; secondly, the necessity which will justify the exercise of that power; and in the third place, if any necessity exists, whether the legislation proposed meets the requirement.

Section 4 of Article I of the Constitution reads as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The entire history of this clause of that instrument shows that it was the intention of its framers, as well as of the States which adopted it, that they, through their respective Legislatures, should primarily exercise this power; and they have so exercised it, with but few additional regulations by Congress to secure greater uniformity, for over one hundred years.

That Congress may at any time make or alter the regulations of the States for holding such elections I freely admit. But for Congress to make or alter these State regulations when the States have made such as do not obstruct nor deny to the State representation it should first be ascertained that there is an overwhelming necessity therefor.

The alternative power vested in Congress is a necessary one for the preservation of its own integrity and the perpetuation of the Government itself, but it never was intended to be exercised except for such a contingency. Is there present the indisputable evidence of such a state of affairs in any one State or number of States which justly calls for the interposition of Congress to make or alter the laws of such State or States touching the election of members of Congress therein? If so, I say let the proper remedy be applied.

What are the facts? What proof has this House which will justify any amendment of existing laws?

It is said by the advocates of this bill that they have found that frauds have been committed in one district out of the eight in Alabama, in two districts of Arkansas, one in South Carolina, one in Virginia, and one in Mississippi. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] said there were frauds in three districts in Mississippi; but I understand that his committee have agreed that in one of these the proof shows that the sitting member is entitled to his seat, and the other two districts his committee have not yet passed upon.

Now, making the most liberal concessions, this is all that can possibly be claimed to have been proven to this House of the necessity for any legislation. If we concede so much, if we admit that frauds in counting the votes are perpetrated in a half dozen districts in Southern States, that can not warrant any radical legislation by Congress, nothing further than to amend the present law so as to allow United States supervisors to participate with the State inspectors in conducting the election, counting the ballots, and joining in the certification in every county and district where it may be necessary to secure a fair election and honest count of the ballots cast.

I do not object to such reasonable amendment as will secure a fair and honest election. I do not believe in fraud. There is at this time nowhere in our country any necessity or excuse for it, whatever may have been in the past. I want no dishonesty; I want every lawful voter to have a fair opportunity to vote, and, if he does so, his vote to be counted as cast. And I assert that to-day the prevailing sentiment among the best class of people throughout the entire country is in favor of honest elections; the South is no exception. But such a law as that proposed will stifle that sentiment in the Southern States and set us back to the days of violence which were prevalent there twenty years ago. I do not believe that any legislation by Congress is necessary. If you but allow that sentiment to take its course, within a few years more you will cease to hear of election frauds, even in the blackest districts of the South.

The Legislature of Alabama in 1875 redistricted that State, and they did just what has been done by every other State when the party in possession has had the power, they made seven Democratic districts, or, to speak more accurately, they made seven districts in which the white voters were in the majority, and one district they made of five contiguous counties, as black as Erebus, with 27,000 colored voters and less than 7,000 white voters.

The Legislature, by this arrangement, intended to give that district to the negroes, and just here I wish to say that that district contains among its white people more intelligence and capacity of a high order for self-government and in its colored population more ignorance and incapacity for self-government than can be found in any other district anywhere in the United States. With their vast majority the negroes seem to be unable to concentrate upon a member of their own race and elect him to Congress. They quarrel and divide among themselves, and, with one exception, they have been represented here by white men, Republicans or Democrats, ever since the district was formed.

The negroes are not a bad people; there is much in their past history—their friendly relations with the white people with whom they have been reared, and their commendable conduct during the war—to make a large majority of the white people in the South their friends and sympathizers. But very few of them as yet have developed capacity for self-government. Why, right here in the city of Washington, the most intelligent community of colored people in the world, with Douglass, Gregory, Carson, Smith, and other men of learning to guide and direct them, they can not hold a convention to appoint delegates to a national convention, or other important meeting, without quarreling and disgraceful rioting during their deliberations.

Perhaps this evidence of incapacity was the secret cause of Congress, then two-thirds Republican in both branches, with a Republican President, abolishing self-government in this District, and thereby disfranchising both white and colored voters.

They have been free men in the Southern States for over a quarter of a century and they have been voters for twenty-one years, and what sort of capacity do they now exhibit for controlling affairs of state?

A large majority of them have the good sense to voluntarily abstain from all participation in conventions and political meetings. The politicians and best educated among them attend and manage the conventions, and what capacity do they exhibit?

The State Republican convention which assembled in Montgomery, Ala., on the 4th of June to nominate a State ticket was about an average specimen of such conventions in the Southern States. It was composed mainly of negroes, with a sprinkling of white Republicans, mostly Federal office-holders. The chief struggle was over the chairmanship of the State committee. There were two or three fights or attempts at assault and battery, drawing of pistols, etc., but bloodshed was averted by the interposition of friends of the respective parties. They nominated a candidate for governor and for secretary of state, neither of whom were eligible under the State constitution, they not having resided in the State a sufficient length of time. They nominated for attorney-general a respectable Republican named Ezell, who but recently went to the State from somewhere north of the Ohio. He wrote a letter to the chairman declining the nomination in the following language:

I wish to make it public that I can not accept the nomination for attorney-general tendered recently by the Republican convention. I am a Republican, and I would feel it an honor to accept the nomination made by a convention of the Republican party. As an eye-witness, I know that the recent meeting at Montgomery was not a convention. Excepting a few gentlemen who were there by mistake, it was a meeting of negro politicians and deputy collectors. An instantaneous photograph of that meeting would be a political education to those in power who made such a meeting possible. If the time comes when such assemblages are not recognized as representing the party, a convention could and would assemble in Alabama that would at least command the respect of the country.

It is a notorious fact that two-thirds of the Northern Republicans who became citizens of Southern States, not for the purpose of office-getting, but to invest their money and engage in business enterprises, very soon vote the Democratic or white man's ticket. Why do they do so? The answer is plain enough; they see that that party is the only one there which contains the capacity for self-government and the ability to enact and administer laws for the protection of life, liberty, and property. If this be not enough, a look at one of their conventions will complete the conversion.

The masses of the people of this country, North and South alike, can not see the utility of a political party which fails to foster and protect the business interests of the country and to contribute to the prosperity of the people. The Democratic is the only party in the South which has done that since the war. The short reign of the Republican party, composed of the negroes and led by the carpet-baggers and scallawags, was noted only for its incapacity, reckless extravagance, thievery, and corruption. It was a dismal, gloomy, and pitiable failure in every sense.

During the reign of the carpet-baggers and their allies every Southern State and nearly every county and municipality within them were rendered bankrupt by the loads of debt, resulting from misgovernment and corruption, more than could ever be paid. These governments which were propped up and sustained by the bayonet, so soon as that was withdrawn tottered and fell before the sturdy strokes of the irrepressible white men, armed alone with that virtue and intelligence which will ultimately rule any community. They were united and stimulated in each State by a sense of insecurity to their homes and families which lawlessness and universal bankruptcy threatened. Since then, under the rule of white men calling themselves Democrats, honest laws have been enacted and are enforced; the loads of debt have been compromised, credit restored, and all of the Southern States have become fairly prosperous.

But now Massachusetts statesmanship, Republican partisanship and hatred have united to foist upon us this infamous piece of legislation. It is the best devised and most dangerous piece of mischief that ever the diabolical ingenuity of man invented. The hue and cry raised in its advocacy is an unfounded, a most unjust, and sweeping charge against the white people of the Southern States that they universally suppress the votes of the negroes, either by intimidation or fraud, and proclaim that this bill is but a righteous provision for honest elections.

Why, sir, there never was a more cunningly devised scheme for the perpetration of frauds in elections and of looting the Treasury to pay for it. It provides all of the necessary machinery for thwarting the will of the people, setting at defiance the laws of the States, and perpetuating the Republican party in power. If it becomes a law frauds will be perpetrated in the interest of the Republican party in comparison with which the worst election frauds ever perpetrated by any Democrat pale into utter insignificance, as I will show before I conclude my remarks.

It is called the Lodge bill, and that gentleman manifests so much pride at having his name connected with it that I am in charity constrained to believe that he is not aware of the iniquities it contains. It is not his scholarly production; if so, it puts his erudition at a discount. It certainly did not emanate from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], for to-day he showed to this House that he was unacquainted with the contents of section 29 of the bill.

Sir, I charge its paternity to John I. Davenport, who seems to have been a political tramp a good part of his life, and of late years has been and is now the great Republican supervisor of elections in New York.

In order to make the country believe that this bill is a proper exercise of constitutional power, when in fact it is a gross abuse and prostitution of it, the gentleman from Massachusetts and his lieutenants parade many figures before this House and the country to show that Congressional elections in the Southern States are generally characterized by intimidation of colored voters, which they say is proven by the smallness of the vote polled.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], in his rich voice and with rhetorical flourish, said that "we are told that elections in the Southern States are quiet—so, too, is a grave-yard."

That was a pregnant insinuation that Southern Democrats had murdered all their opponents—had planted them in a grave-yard, and that in consequence elections were quiet affairs. There never was a more flagrant case of suggestio falsi in any argument that I ever heard advanced even in a police court, and a gentleman of such high reputation ought to be ashamed of it and strike it from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The argument that the paucity of votes polled proves either intimidation or fraud is so lame as to be contemptible, and I would not condescend to reply but for the fact that such statements unchallenged may mislead and impose upon plain people who have never given any attention to the question. If the gentleman from Massachusetts and his abettors will first cast the beam out of their own eyes, if they will but sweep around their own doors before they pay their respects to the affairs of other people, they will be wiser statesmen if not better men than they are at present.

The six New England States had 1,144,919 males of the voting age in 1880, according to the census of that year. Five Southern States, the two Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, which contained, as shown by the census, 1,143,530 males of the voting age—1,379 less than the New England States, but most nearly approximating them in numbers, will by comparison serve to illustrate the falsity and ridiculousness of the argument of the other side to prove the suppression of the Republican or colored voters in the Southern States.

Take the Presidential and Congressional election of 1884, and the six New England States had 398,075 voters, who did not go to the election, or if they did they failed to vote. Just think of it! Nearly 400,000 votes in cultured New England suppressed, presumably by the Republican party; while in the five Southern States, with nearly the same voting population, but 427,524 voters failed to go to the election, or, according to the logic of Mr. LODGE and others on his side, were suppressed and not allowed to vote. The difference is a mere trifle.

The last census shows that in 1880 Alabama had 259,884 voters; and that at the Presidential and Congressional elections of that year 151,507 voted and 108,377 failed to vote. In that year the State of Maine had 187,323 voters, and at the Presidential and Congressional election that year 143,618 voted and 43,705 failed to vote. California had 329,392 persons of the voting age, but at the election that year only 164,166 voted, while 165,226 failed to vote.

Massachusetts had, by the census of 1880, 512,648 males of the voting age, and at the Presidential and Congressional election of that year only 281,713 voted, while 220,935 failed to go to the election; or if they did go and participate their votes were suppressed.

These official figures show that a larger percentage of voters in Massachusetts abstained from voting than in Alabama. And at the last election, in 1888, there were in Massachusetts 162,000 voters who abstained from voting, while in Alabama at the same election there were but 86,130 voters who did not vote.

In view of these figures, which can not be disputed, how does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] appear before this House and the country? Do they not show conclusively that his alleged facts and logic are as bad as his bill, which is damnable?

Why, sir, in the election of 1880, the year of the census, there were in Pennsylvania 221,487 males of the voting age who did not vote. In New York there were 306,328 who did not vote, although that was the home of the Vice-Presidential candidate. In Indiana at that election there were 175,131 voters who did not vote, and in the State of Ohio, the home of Garfield, the Republican candidate for the Presidency, there were 104,225 voters who abstained from voting. Were they intimidated, or their votes suppressed?

Why, sir, in six Northern States of the Union I have shown that at that election there were 1,193,332 voters who failed to go to the polls, or whose votes were not counted. And I would like to hear an explanation from the advocates of this bill of what it was that caused so many of their fellow-citizens in these Northern States to abstain from exercising the franchise; their failure to do it sufficiently proves the falsity of their argument.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] said in his remarks the other day that there was no necessity for proof of a general conspiracy among the Democrats in the Southern States to defraud the Republican colored men out of their votes; that they were intimidated or cheated at every election, and the fact was notorious; and then he proceeded to read from a newspaper some bald assertions to sustain his general allegation. In these and similar ways false reports have been extensively circulated and are believed by most of the people in the Northern States, who from life-long teaching and prejudices are but too ready to give credence to any story of wrong or oppression upon the part of Southern white people towards their former slaves and their descendants, however unreasonable or monstrous the story may be. They fail utterly to understand the relations existing between the two races. They are most mistaken in their efforts to understand the characteristics of the colored race.

I will cite the substance of what has been said in this connection by some of the newspapers in the Northern States.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean, a radical Republican newspaper, said of me during the last Congress that I was representing a Republican district, elected apparently without opposition, but that it was in consequence of intimidation of Republican voters. It said:

The Alabama member admits that he owes his own seat to fraud.

The reasons given for this false and reckless assertion were that in round numbers the census shows over 15,000 colored Republican voters in the district, and that so large a number would not abstain from voting if they had not been intimidated. The fact is they had no candidate. Were they prevented by intimidation from making a nomination? I will refer the editor of the Inter-Ocean to the 15,000 white voters of the district at large, and will furnish him the names and addresses of 100 of the most intelligent colored voters in the district, Republicans as well as Democrats, either one of whom I would believe on oath as soon as I would him, and if he will send an honest reporter down there to investigate, and he finds a man among them who will say on oath that he was intimidated, or saw any one else of any color or politics who was intimidated at that election, or in any wise interfered with or denied the right to vote just as he pleased, I will pay the entire expense of the investigation.

The method adopted by that paper to find the number of voters in a given locality is that usually employed by members on the other side of this Chamber, which is by counting one to every five of population, which is utterly erroneous and unreliable, as the census from which it quotes abundantly and conclusively proves. On that basis the census of 1880 would show a majority of over 3,000 colored voters in the district I represent, but an actual count, which I had made by the Census Bureau under Republican administration in the spring of 1882, shows but a very small majority of colored voters therein. That was during the Forty-seventh Congress while my seat was being contested by the Republican nominee, who was a white man and an ex-Confederate soldier, and with whom I canvassed the district in joint discussion. The case was decided by a Republican committee of the House of Representatives in my favor. Lee, one of the counties of my district, contains 2,824 more colored than white people, yet the actual count showed about 100 more white than colored voters in that county.

The last census shows in Alabama a white population of 662,185 and a colored population of 600,103—an excess of white over the colored of 62,082. One voter to every five of the whites would give 132,437, while the same census shows the actual number of white males of the voting age to be 141,461, or 9,024 more voters of the white race than the 1 to 5 theory gives. At one voter to every five colored persons it would give 120,020, while the actual number of colored males of voting age is shown to be but 118,423, or 1,597 less than the 1 to 5 theory gives. It will therefore be seen that, while there is an actual majority of white voters in Alabama of 23,038, the 1 to 5 theory gives but 12,417 majority, which is less by 10,621 than the true number. This is a demonstration that the theory is deceptive and unreliable.

Gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber claim that there is a majority of colored voters in three States of the Union, to wit, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana. The black population in the latter, by the census of 1880, exceeds the whites, while the same authority shows a majority of 800 white males of the voting age. The one voter to five of population is deceptive and unreliable, yet that is the theory relied upon by the advocates of this bill.

Northern men do not understand the negro question at all. They can not see how it is possible that a Democrat can be elected to Congress in a district where there is a majority of colored population except by intimidation or fraud.

How can better capacity be expected among colored voters in the South, where there is greater ignorance, than is displayed by the colored people of the District of Columbia? Look at Hayti to-day and read the history of San Domingo. How, then, can Republicans in the Northern States expect the negroes, unaided by the genius and energy of white men of character, to maintain an efficient party organization in the South against a party controlled by the talent of the white race, owning and controlling the money and property of the country?

The only Republican party organization in the South is a mere semblance without any sort of efficiency, and is kept up in a slipshod, half-handed way on the part of a few men for the purpose of getting Federal appointments whenever there is an opening, or to make a good draw as they did on Alger's funds at the late Chicago convention. The better class of negroes see and understand the motives of their assumed leaders, and are not inclined to follow them unless they can have a share of the fat when it is fried out, and hence they do not care to vote unless some inducement is offered.

In the election on the 6th of November, 1888, there were polled in the district I represent, for me, 13,347 votes, and for Harvey, a colored Republican, not the nominee of his party, for there was no convention held, but who was put up by some of his colored friends in one county, 2,869 votes. In four counties he did not receive a vote because there were no Republican ballots distributed therein. There were but two votes cast for the Harrison electors in my county, and they were two specimen ballots I had in my pocket and gave them to two honest old darkies who always vote for a Republican President and for me for Congress. One of the Harrison electors resided in an adjacent county, and yet no ballots were distributed to Republican voters in four of the eight counties of the district. This shows what an utterly inefficient and contemptible organization your Republican party has. You make their inefficiency the basis of attack on Democratic honesty.

If the editor of the Inter-Ocean, Chicago Tribune, and some other misguided Republicans, like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], will attend to these facts they will see how it was possible for DIBBLE, TILLMAN, COTHRAN, PERRY, HEMPHILL, DARGAN, TURNER, CRISP, GRIMES, STEWART, BLOUNT, CARLTON, CANDLER, BARNES, CLARK, HERBERT, ALLEN, HOOKER, ANDERSON, BLANCHARD, PEEL, and others as well as myself to be honestly and fairly elected in our respective districts. They will see by attending to the facts instead of idle rumors how false their charge that twenty-five Democrats from Southern States are usurpers and not elected to the seats they hold in this House. As a test of the extent of their knowledge and the reliability of the statements of those newspapers, the blackest districts in the States named are entirely omitted from their outrage lists. Your party organs lie about Southern elections and you make their publications the basis of your action.

You have some proof in contested-election cases of frauds committed by Democrats on colored Republican voters in some few localities, but not extending to a half dozen districts; and having this small modicum of proof, you add to it the lies of your newspapers and stump orators, and proclaim that elections in all the Southern States are honey-combed with fraud, and that Democrats are notoriously dishonest in their politics.

Why, sir, every member of this House knows, and the whole country knew at the time of the completion of the returns of the last election, that the Republican majority in this House would be very slender and that a change of but three members to the Democratic side would have given that party control of the organization of this House. The Clerk to whom the certificates of election were sent was a Southern Democrat, a "rebel brigadier," but thoroughly honest, and obeyed the law. The prize was a great one; the temptation about as great as any that could be offered. How did Democratic governors respond to the demands of duty and their respective oaths of office?

Mr. STIVERS, a Republican member of this House from New York, received but 74 majority over Mr. Bacon, his Democratic competitor; yet a Democratic executive gave STIVERS the certificate of election.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, a Republican member from Maryland, received over his Democratic competitor, Mr. Raynor, but 80 majority; yet a Democratic executive gave Mr. STOCKBRIDGE his certificate.

Mr. EVANS, a Republican member from Tennessee, received but 208 majority over his Democratic competitor, Mr. Bates; yet a Democratic executive gave him the certificate of election.

Mr. COLEMAN, a Republican member of this House from Louisiana, had but 174 majority of votes over Mr. Elliott, his Democratic competitor; yet a Democratic executive gave COLEMAN the certificate of election.

Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE, a Republican member from Virginia, had but 414 votes majority over Kendall, his Democratic competitor; yet a Democratic executive gave him the certificate of election.

HENRY PLUMMER CHEATHAM, of North Carolina, a Republican member of this House, and a colored man, received but 653 majority over Mr. Simmons, his white Democratic competitor; yet a Democratic governor gave CHEATHAM the certificate of election.

All this was done when it was known that a change of three members would have given the control of this House to the Democrats. When did the Republicans, in the face of such temptation, make as good a record of honesty?

During the period of reconstruction of the Southern States, and for the years thereafter while the "carpet-baggers" were in power, it was very rare that the negro failed to attend an election and to cast his ballot for the Republican ticket. Why? He was aware that the Republican party had enfranchised him, and for this he was grateful, without regard to the motive which influenced them to do so.

This, together with the novelty of it, largely influenced his action. But fear had a more potential influence over his conduct. He was told by the carpet-baggers that if the Democrats ever got into power again they would rob him of his franchise and re-enslave him; and he believed the story. Thus informed, they banded together and marched to the polling places at elections as solid and compact as ever well-drilled troops moved to an assault upon a fortress. They would not listen to any arguments or assurances from white Democrats. They proscribed and sometimes beat and maltreated their own color who voted the Democratic ticket, which frequently produced riots, race conflicts, and bloodshed, the entire responsibility for which throughout the North was invariably charged upon the white Democrats. White men whom they trusted implicitly, and to whom they went for advice in all matters of business, could have no sort of influence over them in politics. No thoughtful and just white man blamed them; their course was a most natural one; but the results which their course produced were to put bad and incapable men in office, whose incompetent and dissolute administrations tended directly and very rapidly to the destruction of material interests, lawlessness, and bankruptcy, which within a few years presented to the property-owners the alternative of abandoning their possessions and leaving the State, or of taking control of the State and local governments. The latter they resolved at any hazard to accomplish.

Why, sir, such a thing as fraud in elections was never heard of in Alabama until your Republican reconstruction measures sent a horde of scoundrels down there from the Northern States to steal what little property the war had left us. They brought with them the fine art of cheating at elections. On October 8, 1868, the Legislature, composed entirely of Republicans, with the exception of Dr. Worthy in the senate and Howard in the house, passed an election law, the thirty-fourth section of which made it a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $500, or imprisonment for six months, to "question, challenge, object, hinder, or delay any person offering to vote," and under its encouragement and protection they voted early and often, and almost all ages, sizes, and colors. They had things their own way for two or three elections; but the Democrats and Conservatives at last learned how the game was played, and then they took a hand and beat the rascals at their own game.

In 1874 the Democrats regained complete control of the State. After they did so there was no longer any necessity to have recourse to such practices; the odious law was repealed and an honest election law was enacted, and challengers of opposing political parties at each polling place were provided for; and under the equal laws of the State the rights of no man, white or black, are discriminated against or denied, with the exception, perhaps, already alluded to.

But since the colored voters of the Southern States have seen the predictions of the carpet-baggers falsified by Democratic rule in all the Southern States which did not interfere with their franchise nor their freedom, and since, in addition, they have seen the Federal Administration pass into the hands of a Democratic President who appointed some negroes to important offices, and gave satisfactory assurance to all of that race throughout this country that they were just as secure in the enjoyment of their liberty and the elective franchise under Democratic as Republican Administrations, the large majority of them, especially those who have to labor in the fields, the factories, and the shops for a livelihood, have ceased to take an active interest in elections. They have all along exhibited a commendable zeal for the education of their children.

In Alabama the carpet-baggers and scalawags, when in power, embezzled the school fund and closed the public schools. The Democrats there and in all the Southern States tax themselves and their property to raise funds to keep open the public schools one-third to one-half the year, and distribute all the funds equally to white and black children alike. The colored voters are not unmindful or unobservant of these things, and while the large majority of them are still Republican in politics, they are not afraid to trust their rights in the hands of Democratic officials, and hence are less active in elections than formerly. A much larger percentage of them of late years vote the Democratic ticket in obedience to the friendly solicitation of their white neighbors. And I believe that when they are informed, as they will be, of the hypocrisy of their professed friends, the Republicans, who, with a majority in each House of Congress, have refused to pass the Blair educational bill, a much larger percentage of colored men will vote the Democratic ticket than ever before. They are learning to think for themselves, and are about to throw off the yoke of political slavery.

None of that turmoil and partisan strife characterizes elections in the Southern States which is almost invariably observable in elections in the Northern States, which accounts for the polling of a larger vote. Our Congressional elections in Alabama and Georgia are not held on the same day of State elections, and, consequently, are remarkably quiet and tame affairs, except in districts where there is an earnest contest. In the district I have the honor to represent, at the election of 1896, I received less than 7,000 votes, which is not one-half the number of white voters in the district. About 1,000 of those I did receive were the votes of colored men. I had no opposition, and in such a case both white and colored men find it more profitable to remain at home gathering their crops than to go to the election.

The object of the bill under consideration is political slavery; the Republicans here do not want the negro to enjoy his liberty of voting or not as he pleases. But I tell you, gentlemen, that he is a free man, and he knows it and will remain so. You will be disappointed if you think you can through your Federal supervisors manacle him, drive him to the polls, and vote him as the carpet-baggers did. He has to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow when Republicans are in power the same as when the Democrats are, and now that his liberty is safe he votes or not as he pleases. Your bill is intended to rob him of that much of his freedom and compel him to vote the Republican ticket.

By this proposed law you invite the return of the carpet-bagger, with his secret league, his midnight conferences, his falsehood and deception, to lead the Southern negroes and have them vote him into office again in the Southern States. But they now know him too well; the colored voters remember how he deceived them and robbed the white people, and they will never put such another lot in office again.

In 1870 all the members of Congress from Alabama were white scoundrels; there was not an honest negro among them.

William H. Smith, the first Republican governor of that State, in a fit of virtuous indignation, impelled by a profound sense of the justice of the remark, said:

Our entire delegation in Congress, excepting perhaps Hoy, are a set of unprincipled scoundrels.

You can neither induce nor compel the negroes of Alabama to send such another delegation to Congress. Which would the substantial business men of the Northern States prefer to have sit in Congress and aid in making the laws of the country, the delegation now here from Alabama or the set which Governor Smith denounced? I leave them to say.

Mr. Speaker, I charge that the Republicans enfranchised the negro for the purpose of keeping their party in power. I do not think the motive was merely to humiliate "conquered rebels," by making their former slaves rule over them, nor because the ballot in their hands was deemed necessary for their protection. I know that enfranchisement was alleged as necessary to protect their newly acquired rights of citizenship, and Mr. Blaine, in his very able and instructive book, Twenty Years in Congress, defends the policy of his party in this respect entirely on that ground. There were abuses which he cites tending to justify the policy, but these were but temporary and transitory expedients designed to break the force of the shock produced by the sudden change in the condition of 4,000,000 of people from slavery to freedom; and omitting all reference to the revolutionary method by which it was accomplished, it was a very unwise and mischievous error, born of a necessity which was not real but apparent and at most but temporary. It presents a case wherein the remedy applied is worse than the disease.

The manner in which that party received into its ranks and honored Longstreet, Mahone, Mosby, and other distinguished Confederate soldiers proves that the purpose of proclaiming universal manhood suffrage, which, however, was not extended to the Chinaman and Indian, but confined to the black race, was to perpetuate itself in power.

The scheme succeeded by aid of the military in putting all of the "conquered provinces" under Republican control, but as soon as the prop of the bayonet was removed, these "picbald" governments passed into Democratic hands, and the Republican party realized the wisdom of the great speech of Senator Morton, of Indiana, against the adoption of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution. It greatly increased the representation of the South both in Congress and in the electoral colleges; and now they are attempting by this force bill of Davenport, LODGE, and ROWELL, instigated by Speaker REED, to recoup their former mistake, instead of acknowledging it like men and making the best of a bad bargain.

The facts of the case show that the Republican party was much more concerned to secure the votes of the colored men of the South than they were to secure any benefits to them as voters. Does the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution secure to the negro voter any right to hold office?

In the case of Cruikshanks against the United States, 92 United States, 542, it is said:

Under the fourteenth amendment each State has the power to refuse the right of voting at its elections to any class of persons, the consequences being a reduction of its Representatives in Congress in the proportion which such excluded class should bear to the whole number of its male citizens over the age of twenty-one years.

This is understood to mean and did mean that if one of the late slave-holding States desired to exclude its colored population from the right of voting at the expense of reducing its representation in Congress it could do so before the adoption of the fifteenth amendment.

In the case of the United States against Reese, same report, page 214, the Supreme Court said:

The fifteenth amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one; it prevents the States of the Union from giving preference in this particular to one citizen of the United States over another on account of 'race, color, or previous condition of servitude.'

The first section of the fourteenth amendment declares—

That all persons born or naturalized in the United States or subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they reside.

The Constitution does not say that a negro shall not be disfranchised, but it prevents his disfranchisement on account of his "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." He may be disfranchised because he does not own property of any given value; he may be disfranchised because he can not read or write, or because he is not a believer in the Protestant or Catholic religion, or because he was foreign born, or because he can not read Latin, Greek, or Hebrew, or because he can not speak French or German; yet the law which disfranchises him for any of these causes must be made to apply to all white men within the State in like condition.

Citizenship which is secured by the fourteenth amendment does not confer the right to vote. Women and children born in this country or naturalized are citizens, but they can not vote. Neither does citizenship nor the right to vote, nor both combined, confer the right to hold office by reason of anything contained in the Constitution of the United States.

When the fifteenth amendment was under consideration in Congress on the 11th of January, 1869, the House Judiciary Committee reported a proposed amendment, to be known as Article XV, and recommended its adoption. On the 15th of the same month the Senate Judiciary Committee also reported one. The one reported to the House was in these words:

The right of any citizen to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of any citizen or class of citizens of the United States.

The Senate proposition was in these words:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Thus it will be seen that the House proposition only inhibited the States from denying the right to vote, while the Senate proposition was to inhibit the States from denying either the right to vote or hold office. The House proposition was passed on the 30th of January, 1869, and sent to the Senate on the 3d of February. The Senate amended the House proposition by striking it out and inserting in lieu of it the Senate proposition. On the 17th of February, 1869, the Senate passed its own proposition and sent it to the House. Mr. Logan moved to amend the Senate proposition by striking out the words "and hold office," which was rejected. Bingham, of Ohio, moved to amend by inserting, after the word "color," the words "nativity, property, creed," which was adopted, and thus amended the Senate proposition passed the House, and read as follows:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color, nativity, property, creed, or previous condition of servitude.

The Senate refused to concur in the House amendment, and a committee of conference was ordered by both Houses. The House conferees were Boutwell, Bingham, and Logan, and those of the Senate were Conkling, EDMUNDS, and STEWART—all Republicans, in politics, of the most pronounced type. No Democrat was placed on that committee. Five of the six members signed the following report:

That the House recede from their amendments and agree to the resolution of the Senate, with an amendment as follows: "Strike out the words 'and hold office;' and that the Senate agree to the same."

The report of the conferees was adopted by both Houses and the fifteenth amendment was thereupon passed in the following words:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

So that it is clear from the amendment itself and the history of its origin and enactment, as well as from the debates in each House at the time of its passage, that it secured to the negroes only the right to vote in all cases where white men were allowed to do so and left the States free to prescribe whatever qualifications they deemed essential to the public welfare and safety for office-holding. It is therefore within the power of any State as well as of Congress to declare by law that white men alone shall be eligible to office.

The agreement and compromise among the conferees was that Boutwell agreed to strike out the words "and hold office" if Logan and BINGHAM would strike out the House amendment "nativity, property, creed." To this arrangement STEWART, of Nevada, and Conkling, of New York, assented; but EDMUNDS, of Vermont, refused, and did not sign the report of the conferees and spoke against the adoption of the same. See the debate in the Senate in which EDMUNDS, Wilson, of Massachusetts, Morton, STEWART, and MORRILL, of Vermont, participated.

Senator Morton said:

We are liable to this charge which will now be made, and the force of which we can hardly avoid, that we are willing the negro shall vote, provided they vote for white men, but the office must be reserved for the white men.

What more conclusive evidence can any intelligent colored voter require that the great object of the Republican party was merely to strengthen itself by securing his vote for its candidates, and that they did not enfranchise him for his benefit, but theirs?

ANALYSIS OF THE BILL.

I shall now proceed as briefly as possible to give an analysis of the bill by sections.

The first section continues in office all of the present chief supervisors, but section 22 excepts from that rule such chief supervisors as are, on the passage of the bill, clerks of either the United States circuit or district courts. The chiefs to be continued and the chief supervisors to be hereafter appointed, one for each judicial district throughout the United States, are charged with supervision of Congressional elections and the prevention of frauds in elections, irregularities in naturalization, and with enforcement of the election laws.

Under section 2, in any town or city containing a population of 20,000 or upwards, or in any entire Congressional district, on the petition of "one hundred persons claiming to be citizens and qualified voters," or upon the petition of fifty such persons claiming to be citizens or qualified voters in one or more counties or parishes of any Congressional district, the chief supervisor shall take action to secure supervision therein as provided by the laws of the United States; which means that when the chief presents these petitions to the circuit court the judge has no discretion but to grant them. And the third section provides that the chief may notify the judge and require him to convene the circuit court at the chief's dictation for the appointment of such supervisors as he may need, in his discretion, for the supervision of the election.

Section 4 provides that any person who can read and write may apply to the chief for appointment as a supervisor of election; and thereupon the chief will furnish him with a blank application printed and paid for by the Government, which will enable the "rounders," hangers-on, professional jurors, and court-house loafers to get in their applications to the exclusion of good, honest, and competent men who will never voluntarily apply for any such appointments.

Section 5 makes it obligatory upon the judge to appoint as many supervisors as the chief may desire, and while the chief may in his discretion present additional names to those who have formerly applied, the judge has no discretion, but is bound to appoint the number desired from the list furnished him by the chief, three supervisors at least to each precinct or polling place, two from one political party and one from the other, and gives full authority to the two who are agreed to act independently of the other; that is to say, the two Republican supervisors may act and their action is made lawful if no Democratic supervisor at all should be appointed, and if appointed and he should undertake to expose any rascality practiced by the other two or should fail to pull smoothly in harness with them the chief may remove him and suspend his pay in his discretion.

This section arms the chief supervisor with a complete muzzling process. He can order any amount of cheating and rascality to be perpetrated at any polling place within his jurisdiction, and if either one of the supervisors or the deputy marshal protests or attempts to expose it, or refuses to bear witness that what the majority does is fair and honest, or that what the State inspectors or poll-clerks do is dishonest and fraudulent—in short, for doing or failing to do anything which the chief may desire or order—he may suspend or remove any officer within his jurisdiction, stop his pay, and cut off his rations. In short, this section is framed upon the idea that the chief supervisor, like the king, can do no wrong.

Section 6 establishes a kind of carpet-baggery by authorizing the chief to transfer his subordinate supervisors anywhere throughout a Congressional district. What is more irritating to the voters of one county than to have men who are citizens of another and frequently a distant county sent to supervise them, to watch them, and see that they commit no rascality, and do no dishonest act? And it may be that those sent from another county would themselves perpetrate a wrong or miscount the votes.

This section seems to have been framed for the purpose of provoking collisions, personal encounters, and the shedding of blood. Why, sir, the advocates of this bill would be delighted to have a few negroes killed in each Congressional district throughout the Southern States. Then abuse of Southern Democrats and waving the "blood shirt," themes which have become partially stale, would be revived, and, they hope, prove most fruitful in keeping them in office.

The latter part of this section, in connection with the preceding, invests the chief supervisor with the autocratic powers I have described.

The seventh section declares the chief and all of the inferior supervisors and deputy marshals to be officers of the United States the moment they are assigned to duty; which puts them within the protection of the Nagle case recently decided by the Supreme Court, the effect of which is to exempt them from prosecution in the State courts for any crime they may commit under color of their office, or while assuming to discharge the duties thereof. If one of them should kill or maltreat a citizen of the State he would not be amenable to the State law, but could only be tried in a United States court, and before a partisan judge, whose creature he is.

What will free American citizens, accustomed to seeing those who violate the laws of their respective States tried in their courts and properly punished, think of such a law as this which puts the petty partisan officials of the Federal Government above the laws of the State? Yet that is exactly what this section of this bill does.

Section 8 invests the chief with the power, through his subordinates, to revise and supervise the registration of voters; to examine State ballot-boxes before elections begin; to keep a poll-list and to number the voters; to receive and count ballots rejected by the State inspectors; to make statements and returns to the chief supervisor in whatever form, manner, and to the extent the chief requires, and such returns to be sent up to him by the deputy marshal; and in a city of 20,000 inhabitants and upwards, the chief may require any of the supervisors and a deputy marshal to make a house-to-house canvass, which may begin five weeks before and be continued on the day of election, inquiring into the eligibility of voters and whether they have ever been legally naturalized, which is simply a provision for domiciliary visits to do the work of ticket peddlers in the interest of the Republican party. Neither of the men assigned to this work is required to belong to the opposing political party.

These officers are also authorized to call for and examine naturalization papers of our adopted American citizens, and to go into the courts and examine records to see whether naturalization papers have been regularly obtained. They are authorized to enter any court of any State or of the United States where naturalization proceedings are going on and to take a hand in the business, and aid the courts in the discharge of their duties and to prevent fraudulent naturalization.

They are also authorized to inform all voters in which box to deposit their ballots. And if they see any Democrat go with a voter into any booth or room it is made the duty of one of them to enter and see that the voter is not misled or cheated; in other words, it is made their duty to see that no Democrat induces any negro or other Republican voter to vote the Democratic ticket, which is a well-devised scheme to get the heads knocked off of several supervisors for impudently projecting their noses into the private business of gentlemen. What right have they to participate in the proceedings of any court, much less a State court?

The sixth subdivision of section 8 authorizes the supervisors in towns of 5,000 inhabitants or upward "by proper inquiry and examination at the respective places assigned by or to those registered as their residences, all such names placed or found upon the registration books, rolls, or lists as the chief supervisor of elections shall require to be so verified, and to make full report thereof to such chief supervisor." And the fourteenth subdivision authorizes the chief supervisor, when he shall have reason to believe "that fraud or perjury has been, or is being, committed about the matter of naturalization in any place," to send his supervisors to prevent it, and when thus sent they are to be clothed with "all the power and authority conferred upon supervisors in cities of 20,000 inhabitants and upward." That is to say, whatever in the chief's own opinion gives him "reason to believe" is a matter for his own conscience, if he has any, and in cases where the exigencies of the party to which he belongs require it, his conscience will usually be found to be sufficiently elastic for the purpose, or altogether wanting. In the language of James Russell Lowell—

Some philosophers think a faculty's granted
The moment it's proved to be thoroughly wanted;
As for instance, that rubber trees first began bearing
When political consciences came into wearing.

Whenever the chief supervisor's conscience makes a case where he could send his subordinates they would be clothed with all the powers which they have in cities of 20,000 inhabitants; and then they would proceed to make a house-to-house canvass as ticket peddlers for the Republican party, and no doubt impressing the negroes and ignorant foreigners that if they fail to attend the election and vote the tickets distributed it may go hard with them.

The twelfth subdivision of section 8 beats know-nothingism in its palmiest days. It requires the supervisors, when instructed by their chief, to make a complete list of all foreign-born persons who have been naturalized, with the date thereof, their place of nativity and present residence, and the name and residence of the witnesses used to obtain naturalization papers; and they are to examine and note the original affidavits and application presented to the court, all of which shall be filed in the office of the chief supervisor and there preserved. It establishes political espionage over all of our naturalized American citizens with a view to controlling their votes for the Republican party.

Section 9 annuls the State laws and prescribes a new method of counting, canvassing, and certifying the votes cast at a Congressional election; it provides for counting by tens instead of fives, alternating between State inspectors and United States supervisors, and is so complicated as to create confusion, and will not be understood by one-third of the State inspectors, nor by the supervisors until drilled, taught, and instructed by their chief, and with section 8 completely destroys the secrecy of the ballot.

Section 10 relates to the same subject.

Section 11 requires the inspectors to make their returns under the State law and requires the supervisors to make a copy of such return and to send it with any outside statement to the chief supervisor.

Sections 12 and 13 relate to the same subject.

Section 14 provides that if the State inspectors at any polling place fail to open the polls for one hour from the time they may be first opened, it shall then be the duty of the supervisors present to open the polls and conduct the election for Representative in Congress.

Section 15 authorizes the chief supervisor to notify the judge of the United States circuit court in September that he has business for the court to transact; and thereupon the judge shall open his court the 1st of October, and shall appoint a board of three canvassers, not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party, who shall hold their offices for "so long as faithful and capable."

They shall have a seal and the power of appointing a clerk who shall receive $12 per day, and each of them shall receive a salary of $15 a day for each day actually employed in the work of "canvassing the statements and certificates of ballots cast at any election, general or special, for a Representative or Delegate in Congress, and a further sum of $5 per day for their personal expenses." The board is required to convene on the 15th day of November of each even year, and shall convene at such place in the State as is most convenient to them where a circuit court of the United States is held, and are to have power to finally canvass and tabulate the statements of the votes in each Congressional district of the State according to the returns made to the chief supervisors; they may call before them and examine any of the supervisors who acted at the election anywhere in the district as to the correctness of the returns made by them.

The majority of the board are authorized to act, which is equivalent to saying that the Republican members of the board may decide any matter to suit themselves, and the Democratic member can do nothing more than to protest. When they arrive at a decision their finding is to be made public in triplicate certificates, one to be filed with the chief supervisor, one to be sent to the person elected, and one to be sent to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, unless they find that no one was elected; and then the certificate is sent to the governor of the State.

Section 16 makes it the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives to put on the roll of members-elect the name of the person certified by the board of canvassers to have been elected. And for failure to comply with this requirement they make the Clerk punishable by a fine of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, and imprisonment for not more than five years, one or both, and to be forever disqualified from holding office under the United States.

A certificate of election from the governor of a State is set at naught and made worthless. Never before in the whole history of Congressional legislation were the great seal of a sovereign State and the certificate to which it is attached treated as mere waste paper. The certification of two partisan members of a canvassing board appointed by a Federal judge is to be received as gospel truth, while the certification of a governor who speaks for a sovereign State is to be treated as waste paper and utterly disregarded. Are the American people prepared to submit to such degradation? Have they no longer any State pride?

Section 17 requires the Attorney-General of the United States to formulate and have printed and furnish to the board of canvassers in each State all such blanks as they and their clerks may need in the discharge of their official duties, to be paid for out of the Treasury.

Section 18 authorizes the State board of canvassers in all matters coming before them "to act by a majority of its members;" and if the third member dissents from the decision he may state his reasons therefor and attach a copy to each of the triplicate certificates.

Section 19 provides for the compensation of supervisors and deputy marshals, and the lowest estimate of the cost I have seen made of Federal supervision in every district in the United States is for one selection $10,000,000. It authorizes the chief to refuse to pay any of the subordinates who may fail to carry out his orders.

Section 20 provides for the appointment of such number of special deputy marshals as the chief supervisor may "certify to be, in his opinion, necessary, to observe the manner in which the election officers are discharging their duties, to enforce the election laws of the United States, and to prevent frauds and irregularities in naturalization." One-third of the special deputies shall be appointed from a list of names furnished the marshal by the chief supervisor, and the marshal shall assign these special deputies according to the request of the chief supervisor; and the special deputies shall take charge of returns made by the supervisors "as rapidly as the canvass of each box is completed," and deliver them to the chief.

Just think of it! United States deputy marshals standing around, observing and overseeing State election officers to see how they are discharging their duties. You Republicans know what sort of men will be appointed for this dirty work.

The centralization of our Government strides on apace—stalks forth on stilts—over the prostrate forms of once sovereign States of this Union.

The remainder of this section provides for the location of the office of the chief supervisor, who is made an officer for life, and for the payment of the expenses thereof from a permanent appropriation.

Section 21 requires the chief supervisor to furnish to his subordinates all forms, blanks, maps, and instructions which he deems necessary, and requires him to file and preserve in his office returns, certificates, tally-sheets, poll-lists, and telegrams.

Section 22 disqualifies clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States from being chief supervisors. And in any judicial district where no chief other than a clerk of the court has been appointed "it shall be the duty of the circuit court * * * to appoint from among the circuit court commissioners one of them the chief supervisor of elections * * * for the judicial district for which he is a commissioner."

The remainder of the section fixes the term of office of all chief supervisors to be for life or "so long as faithful and capable;" which means for life or so long as their administration is deemed by the appointing power to be "faithful and capable." But nowhere in the bill is the power or right of removal vested or declared to be in any person, court, or officer, unless it be as a penalty resulting from conviction for malfeasance in office.

It will be observed that no discretion whatever is given to the circuit court to appoint a chief supervisor except within the charmed circle of United States commissioners for the district; and what a sweet bevy, what a glorious lot of officials they are, in a large majority of the judicial districts of the Southern States! Many of them have been removed from other official positions, such as that of deputy marshal, for rendering false accounts and defrauding the Treasury. I appeal to the records of that Department and the accounting officers in charge of them for proof of what I say, and tenfold more. I appeal to the Attorney-General of the United States, who but recently suggested to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this House a thorough investigation of certain judicial officers, marshals and their deputies, clerks, and United States commissioners. Ask him as well as the accounting officers of the Treasury what he thinks of the United States commissioners, not only in Alabama and other Southern States, but in many judicial districts in Northern States as well, as to their integrity and fitness for such an all-powerful office as this bill makes of the chief supervisor of elections.

Why, sir, the records of the Treasury are reeking with bad odors, the multiplied frauds and perjuries committed by many of these officials to put money into their pockets which they never earned. I appeal to my colleagues on the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of this House, Messrs. THOMPSON, of Ohio, and MCCORMICK, of Pennsylvania, to say what they think from the testimony taken and the appearance of the men as to the fitness of the commissioners whom they have investigated for the exalted position of chief supervisor of elections, and I would like for them to say whether they think that all the clerks of the United States courts whom they have investigated are fit and proper men to be trusted with drawing honest, competent, and discreet jurors for service in the court of which they are clerks?

Sections 23 and 24 provide for the manner of drawing from the Treasury and the manner of paying supervisors for their services, including the chief; payments, fees, and allowances, all being extremely liberal.

Section 25 authorizes the chief as a circuit court commissioner to administer oaths to supervisors and deputy marshals, and empowers him to designate such other circuit court commissioners in his judicial district as he sees fit to administer such oaths, and allows 25 cents for administering and certifying the same.

A judicial district usually embraces two, and sometimes a dozen, Congressional districts; therefore, the chief supervisor may administer and certify the oaths to all the supervisors and deputy marshals appointed to serve at all the polling places in all the Congressional districts embraced in the judicial district. For instance, Massachusetts, with twelve Congressional districts, constitutes but one judicial district; Indiana, with thirteen Congressional districts, is but one judicial district, and Kentucky, with eleven Congressional districts, is but one judicial district.

Now, the chief supervisor in each of these States, if this bill becomes a law, is the only person, the only officer authorized by it to administer an oath to any and all of the supervisors and deputy marshals throughout the State, unless in his discretion he sees proper to designate one or more circuit court commissioners to administer and certify the oath. And in view of the fact that he would receive 25 cents for every oath administered and certified, the presumption is that he would exercise that discretion as far as practicable to put as many of those plums in his own pocket as possible, without much regard to the convenience of others. And if he is not an angel, as the advocates of this bill assume that he would be, he could farm out the privilege to other commissioners for one-half the fees received by them, and thus add considerably to his income. So, you see, he is directly interested in having supervision throughout his district.

What is there in this bill to prevent the chief supervisor in each and every judicial district from getting 100 voters, or, in the language of the bill, one hundred "persons claiming to be citizens and voters," for no other qualification is required, to sign a petition for supervision and thereby secure it throughout the district? You make it to his interest to do this, and notwithstanding your assumption of the chief supervisor's angelic qualities, I do not think you will find many who will forego the opportunity of such a harvest of fees. The advocates of this bill violate the sacred injunction of the Lord's Prayer, "Lead us not into temptation."

Another striking feature, striking because of its utter absence, is that the bill nowhere prescribes either the form or the substance of the oath to be administered to any supervisor or deputy marshal. The fees seem to have been a far more important consideration to the framers of the bill. And an oath to conduct the election fairly and to make honest returns would, upon the hypothesis that some of the appointees might have consciences, have been a provision inconsistent with the general purpose of the bill, which is, by any means and at all hazards, to perpetuate the Republican party in power and to pay for it out of the Treasury.

Section 26 authorizes the chief to have appointed a deputy chief supervisor and a clerk, who shall each be selected from that charmed circle of favorites, United States circuit-court commissioners, and that they shall each receive such compensation as the chief in his discretion sees proper to give or allow them.

Section 27 provides that the chief supervisor shall present his account for expenses to a circuit or district judge for approval, and when approved shall be forwarded to the Treasury of the United States and there made "special," which means that they shall be audited in preference to any other accounts or claims, and shall be paid without delay. It also provides that for any items disallowed by the accounting officers, or for the entire claim, without presenting it to the Treasury at all, the chief supervisor may sue the United States either in the Court of Claims or in the circuit court of his judicial district, and recover judgment therefor; that all such suits shall be preferred causes and shall be tried without delay in preference to all other cases pending in such courts, and when judgment is recovered, which will usually be before the same judge who approves the account in the first instance, the same shall be promptly paid by the Treasurer of the United States. And the fees of commissioners for all services rendered in connection with the election laws are placed on the same basis as to allowance and payment.

Section 28 provides a permanent appropriation—a kind of appropriation which is vicious in the extreme—for the payment of all the fees and expenses of the new system provided by the bill.

Section 29, as amended by the House, provides for a review on appeal to the circuit court of any alleged erroneous action upon the part of the board of canvassers. It also empowers the circuit court, upon affidavit filed alleging error in the determination of any board of canvassers, "either national, State, Territorial, county, or any local board," to require such board to correct such error or to show cause why such correction should not be made, and to compel such correction by mandamus, if necessary; and section 30 continues any such board of canvassers for the purpose of being required to make any such correction.

Section 31 prescribes a penalty for any marshal, warden, or keeper of any jail, prison, or penitentiary to which United States prisoners are ever committed or confined pending trial, "who shall refuse or decline to receive and safely keep any prisoner committed to his custody under any warrant or other process of any judge of any court of the United States or any circuit court commissioner," by fine not to exceed $1,000 and imprisonment of not more than one year.

It will be observed that this section is not applicable alone to violations of this particular law, but is general in its provisions. Any State prison to which a United States prisoner has ever been committed or confined, although it be but pending trial, is so far confiscated, or, to speak more accurately, appropriated, to the use of the United States that this high penalty is prescribed against any jailer or keeper of such State institution who shall refuse or decline for any cause "to receive and safely keep any prisoner committed" by any United States judge or commissioner. The institution may be full of State prisoners and there be no room in which to receive and safely keep United States prisoners; no matter, the law is violated, the penalty incurred all the same. I suppose the author of the bill intended by describing the prison as one in which any United States prisoner had ever been confined to plead that as an estoppel of the keeper from denying the right of the United States perpetually and eternally to the use of such prison. To any legal mind that is preposterous and overwhelmingly ridiculous.

Any lawyer who has progressed in knowledge beyond the horn-books of the profession knows that a State officer can not be compelled to exercise a jurisdiction conferred upon him by Congress. The Supreme Court of the United States decided this question long ago. But where a State officer undertakes to exercise a jurisdiction conferred upon him by Congress, he is then and in that matter amenable to the courts of the United States for improper conduct. Congress, however, has no more constitutional right or power to appropriate State prisons for the confinement of United States prisoners without the consent of the State than it has to take and appropriate cemeteries, the capitol building, or any other property belonging to the State; and therefore no jailer could be convicted for refusing to "receive and safely keep" any United States prisoner unless the State whose officer he is previously assents thereto.

A State officer may exercise, in his discretion, a jurisdiction conferred on him by Congress, unless the State whose servant he is refuses to allow him to do so. But if the State does not object and he undertakes to exercise the jurisdiction, he is responsible to the United States for his conduct therein.

Presumably the authors of this bill framed this section with a view to having ample prison facilities for the incarceration and subjugation of numerous offenders against it. Suppression and intimidation of voters and spoliation of the Treasury are its chief features.

Section 32 adopts a large number of sections of United States statutes so as to make them apply and conform to other parts of this bill. It re-enacts those sections of the Revised Statutes referred to as touching "the elective franchise," and providing troops at the polls, and also re-enacts "civil rights," several sections of which were declared by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Reese, 92 United States Reports, to be unconstitutional and void.

The attempt to re-enact those sections is a covert one and done by vague reference instead of a manly and open one. That is the way that silver was demonetized. That is nearly always the style of legislation adopted when the people are to be enslaved or robbed.

Section 33 repeals many sections of the Revised Statutes in conflict with the bill saving prosecutions and actions already accrued thereunder.

Section 34 requires State inspectors or local election officers to paste a label on the front of the ballot-box for the reception of Congressional ballots and to point it out to all voters who may not be able to read the label. It requires such box to be kept upon a shelf, table, or counter in plain sight of the electors and easy of access to them and so that the voters themselves may deposit their ballots therein in plain view of all the election officers, national and State, and that the box all during the day of election shall not be shifted, changed, or otherwise moved from the place at which it is put on the opening of the polls, and that it shall not be removed from the room during the day or night following the election until all the ballots are "fully ascertained, tallied, counted, and canvassed, and the statements and certificates therefor have been made out, signed, and sealed."

The only objection I see to this, aside from that of inconvenience, is that the voter in depositing his ballot precludes the idea of numbering it in States where the law so requires, and enables the voter to deposit several ballots inclosed within each other which may have the appearance of but one. This will facilitate the perpetration of fraud by allowing one dishonest man to cast as many ballots as six honest ones. This provision, however, is in harmony in this respect with other parts of the bill.

Sections 35 and 36 provide penalties and punishment for stuffing ballot-boxes, frauds, bribery of voters or officers, and are free from objection.

Section 37 prescribes regulations comparatively free from objection, except in a matter already referred to.

Section 38, as it came from the committee, was a proposition to amend the law in respect to the drawing of jurors in the United States courts. The law now provides that they shall be drawn by the clerk of the court and a jury commissioner of opposite politics, and the proposition was to repeal it as to the jury commissioner and to allow the clerks, nearly all of them being Republicans, to select and pack juries, to convict Democrats and acquit Republicans charged with the violation of election laws. Fortunately there were enough on the other side of the Chamber to rebel against this injustice, who, uniting with the Democratic minority, struck out this odious feature; but they afterwards adopted a provision for a jury commission.

The remaining sections of the bill, from section 39 to section 57, inclusive, are definitions of offenses and prescribing penalties for violations of the election laws, and are free from objection, except section 52, which makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, to "willfully disobey any lawful command of a supervisor of election given in the execution of his duty at any election at which a Representative is voted for," etc. It is so vague and uncertain as to leave the person in ignorance of what commands of the supervisor are lawful. Perhaps it is designedly so, that the supervisor may command and no one will know whether disobedience is lawful or unlawful. It is a "blind tiger," which answers the purpose of the advocates of the bill much better than a plain provision defining what commands the supervisor may lawfully give.

But the other provisions tending to suppress fraud and securing an honest count of votes at Congressional elections are comparatively free from objection. I do not believe that any legislation is necessary. The present laws, if enforced, would fully accomplish fair counting in any localities where cheating is resorted to. But your laws are not enforced. The Republican party in such localities may have the numbers necessary to outvote the Democrats, but they are too ignorant and inefficient to enforce the law or to see that their ballots are counted. You make this bill a law and you will provoke contention, strife, and conflict, and injuriously affect material interests in the Southern States. But you will secure very few, if any, additional Republican members of Congress. My opinion is that you will lose more than you will gain by it, even in the Southern States.

Your grievance, gentlemen of the Republican party, is the solid South. Why is it solidly Democratic with a largely increased representation? I will tell you. Your policy toward the South ever since the close of the war has been one of repression instead of encouragement. You reconstructed us a second time. We willingly accepted and ratified the thirteenth amendment, abolishing slavery. We were States in the Union for that purpose. You offered us the fourteenth amendment, which would have been accepted and ratified with equal alacrity but for the fact that you inserted a clause in it disfranchising our comrades in the struggle who ever had taken an oath to support the Constitution and afterwards engaged in the rebellion. They were no more to blame than we were. We had engaged in a common cause, and while we were conquered and had surrendered our arms we had not surrendered our honor, and we rejected the amendment solely for that reason. Then you declared that we were not States in the Union. The Supreme Court said that we never got out and were still in the Union. You admitted that we were in, but not as States with a republican form of government and entitled to representation in Congress.

You reconstructed us and made voters out of the negroes in violation of all precedent and constitutional authority and in that way you adopted the fourteenth amendment. Not content with this, and overrunning all the Southern States with your carpet-bag thieves and their allies, you adopted the fifteenth amendment. You were so intoxicated by your thus far successful campaign against the white people of the South that you adopted that amendment over the protests of some of your most thoughtful and considerate leaders. You supported your incompetent and corrupt State governments in the South by the Army; but when that was withdrawn you were surprised and chagrined to find what a mistake you had made. Now, to correct that error, you propose this force bill as a sort of third reconstruction. You do not disguise the fact that this measure is intended for the Southern States.

Do you ever expect to win the confidence, the friendship, and respect of the white people of those States by the continuation of your repressive and unfriendly policy? Are they of this generation or their sons who succeed them the men to kiss the hand which smites them?

How can you so think of the men you conquered only when their substance was gone, their means of transportation destroyed, their living upon less than half-rations, with more than four to one against them; when three hundred thousand hillocks marked the last resting places of their dead comrades; when the whole land was draped in mourning; when the cries of the orphan and the moaning of the widow were borne to the ear upon every breeze; when nothing but Omnipotence or death could have averted their surrender; for it was then, and not until then, that their sublime courage succumbed to the inevitable? They accepted in good faith the decision of the high court of force; in good faith they renewed their allegiance to the Union. Too much must not be expected all at once of human nature; they did the best they could as honorable men. All that was involved in the war and as incidental thereto was settled, and they turned their attention to the rehabilitation of their devastated country.

Adverse circumstances and unfriendly legislation have contended against them for the mastery, but with that tireless energy and dauntless courage that have ever characterized them they have brought every State of the South into a fairly prosperous condition, and notwithstanding the present heavy blow the South will yet be the Eldorado of North America, if not of the world.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have always thought it a serious defect in the laws, rules, and customs relating to the organization of this House that the determination of the question who are the members of this House has been in many cases postponed to so late a stage in the life of a Congress. It certainly can not be right that gentlemen on either side of this House, from the North or the South, should sit here participating in the election of a Speaker, acting as members of important committees, voting on important bills, perhaps passing such bills by a casting vote, and then, when they have done this week after week and month after month, have it determined, after the lapse possibly of almost two years from the beginning of the Congress, that they never had any right to sit here at all. I believe that every point of evidence relating to the election of a member of this House ought to be made available at the earliest possible moment. The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina proposes that the evidence furnished by the supervisors shall be postponed until a period when it ceases to be available for a very important purpose for which it would otherwise be available.

Gentlemen say that these supervisors, appointed by Federal authority, are liable to political prejudice. I admit it; but we know that as political parties are constituted in this country the State returning boards, Republican or Democratic, the local officers and the general officers, are also liable to the same disability. The amendment prepared by the gentleman from Louisiana, and which the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, proposes to offer, gives, as I believe, a certain superiority to the evidence furnished by the United States officers over that supplied by the State officers. Suppose that these local supervisors do make errors; suppose that the canvassing board, appointed by United States law, makes errors; any candidate can appeal; and if he does so he has a right to an immediate decision of the question, under the supervision of the circuit judge.

Why, sir, I was surprised to hear the gentleman from Texas say that it was a disability on the part of a judge authorized to determine a question of that kind, that he might be a judge resident in a distant State. It seemed to me, as it seemed to Mr. Madison, as quoted by the gentleman from Iowa, that that would be rather an advantage than a disadvantage.

The people of the different districts elect their Representatives in Congress or attempt to do so. The matter is all left to the people; and after the people of the Congressional district have attempted to do their duty, the sole question is a question of evidence as to what in fact has been done. This, in my judgment, is just as much a judicial question as a question of right in regard to any other office that may be held; and I believe it is the common law of England that a question of office is a question of right that may be tried in the courts.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. Is not the pending proposition, as well as the one in the bill, simply an attempt to evade the jurisdiction which the Constitution vests in this House as the judge of the election returns, and qualifications of its own members? How can you by this bill authorize some other body of officers to make a preliminary examination to determine for this House who shall sit here?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly the House is the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members; but you do not make the House the judge of the right of a man to have his name placed on the roll. You impose that duty on some one else. It must be imposed either on State officers or on United States officers.

Mr. OATES. It is for the House to do that. But what is the necessity for this wide departure from the practice which has prevailed?

Mr. ADAMS. The practice, in my judgment, has no value whatever. The constitutional provision that the House may judge of the "election and qualifications" of its own members was similarly lodged in the House of Commons. But they have provided, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] has said, that the courts should first pass upon the question of fact involved, though it was admitted that if the House of Commons chose to overrule the decision of the court it could do so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the two amendments to sections 15 and 16.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. LODGE. These are to perfect the text before the motion to strike out is submitted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think, under the order, the time for debate was closed after thirty minutes had expired on the one amendment. Now the gentleman seeks to bring forward these amendments on which no debate has been had.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House it is in order to perfect first the text of what is proposed to be stricken out. There can be no question upon that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HEMPHILL. The difference would be that this amendment would come in for a vote now and there is no debate at all upon it.

The SPEAKER. But the House is at liberty to debate the question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The order was made that the debate should be limited to thirty minutes on the amendment I offered, and then a vote was to be taken upon it.

The SPEAKER. Only on that particular amendment offered. But the gentleman had notice of these amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman from Massachusetts, referring to the amendments himself, said that he would have them read for information.

The SPEAKER. The amendments are clearly before the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The language of the Record will show that they were read for the information of the House only.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. LODGE. I gave notice of the amendments.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there can not be two amendments pending to an amendment at the same time.

The SPEAKER. But this is a motion to strike out, and before the motion to strike out is submitted the friends of the paragraph have a right to perfect the text of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point—

The SPEAKER. The principle of parliamentary law is perfectly simple and clear. The friends of the paragraph have the right to amend the provision and present it in the most satisfactory form before the House. If the House then wishes to strike out it is disposed of satisfactorily, but if the House refuses to strike it out prior to the amendment of the text it causes members to vote in uncertainty as to what is being stricken out.

Mr. McMILLIN. But, Mr. Speaker, and I address the remark to the gentleman from Massachusetts, when the debate was limited by the House on this amendment, the gentleman from Massachusetts gave no notice that he would seek to have these amendments voted on without discussion.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said I was not aware of the fact whether it would be in order to offer them at that time or not, but I would propose them at the proper time.

But I have no objection to further discussion on these amendments if it be the wish of the House to do so.

Mr. McMILLIN. And when the gentleman suggested the amendments and the propriety of their being in order at that time, the Speaker said, as I remember now, that he would decide at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said he would consider the question, and in the mean time that the debate would go on. The Chair has considered the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana seems desirous of addressing the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose some time ago to present a question of order, which the Chair has thought proper in the mean time to decide upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desired to make the point of order that the first proposition submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts is an independent section. Here are three, I believe four, sections involved. Now, the gentleman offers an independent section.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the gentleman from Massachusetts offers his amendment to the text of section 15.

Mr. HOLMAN. But as an independent proposition.

The SPEAKER. Not as an independent section.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say, without dissenting from the enunciation of parliamentary law, as announced by the Chair, that it seems to me the present status takes this question from under the operation of the rule. The majority of the committee were allowed, in pursuance of an understanding, to offer all the amendments they had, beginning with the first section of the bill and running entirely through it without interruption on this side, because it was understood to be their right; and that was to be followed by the right guaranteed to the minority members of the committee, when that process had been concluded, to offer amendments themselves. In pursuance of that understanding the gentleman from South Carolina has offered one amendment and now he has offered a second. I repeat, in pursuance of a well understood agreement in the House this was done.

Now, if these agreements are not executed I can not see how the minority, under the order of the House, can have any assurance that their amendments are to be voted upon at all. If it is in order here now for the gentleman from Massachusetts to submit these amendments, it is in order for him to continue offering amendment after amendment; and it seems to me good faith requires that the gentleman should not now obstruct the clear right of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. There is no better witness of the ample good faith with which this question has been treated than the gentleman from Georgia himself. The Chair desires to say that it is not possible to anticipate a motion to strike out until the motion is made. After it is made it must be made in conformity with the rules of the House; and under the rules of the House the gentleman has a right to perfect the text of the section before the House considers the question of striking it out. It is not only a well established principle of parliamentary law, but it is a sound, common-sense construction of the rule, and has always been followed for the orderly conduct of the business of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not question the right or any right the gentleman has to perfect the text of his bill before the motion to strike out is submitted. It was in contemplation of all of his rights that I spoke. But it was understood, when the right of amendment was given him on yesterday, that he should perfect his bill. That he proceeded to do, and offered a series of amendments, which were adopted by the House. But the motion now made to strike out does not add to his right in that direction under the agreement which was entered into.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in charge of the bill—

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts announced yesterday that he was through offering amendments.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But the gentleman from Massachusetts could not anticipate a motion to strike out until it was made.

Mr. BLOUNT. What has that got to do with the question of perfecting the bill? He offered all the amendments he desired to in order to perfect the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is subject to the rules of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. What has that got to do with this matter? You have gone on and perfected your bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is subject to ordinary rules of the House. It is stated on page 23:

If it is proposed to amend by striking out a paragraph, the friends of the paragraph are first to make it as perfect as they can, by amendments, before the question is put for striking it out.

We could not anticipate your motion to strike out.

Mr. BLOUNT. You had the opportunity to perfect your bill, and you went on and did it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What is the object of that rule unless it is to meet just such a case as this?

Mr. HEMPHILL. What did you do all day yesterday except to try to perfect your bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. It seems to me this is not offered in good faith at this time. You ought to have offered your amendment in the beginning. You defeat all our rights by any such course of procedure as this.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I think it is a pretty serious thing for one member of this House to charge another with acting in bad faith. I have not acted in bad faith with anybody. I said, when I offered these amendments that I did offer, that I was through and that I would stand aside for the gentlemen upon the other side to offer their amendments. I did not say, I never intended to say, and of course no man would say that he would offer no more amendments to the bill. The bill might be changed at any point, so that it would become essential for the committee to offer amendments. That was a right that I never abandoned for one moment.

If this motion to strike out had not been made I should not have offered these amendments until the gentlemen on the other side were all through. It is impossible for me to withhold the amendment now, for they are moving to strike it out. It is impossible for the House to deal with the matter intelligently unless they know what it is proposed to do. I have acted in the most absolute good faith in the matter. I have not the slightest desire to do anything in the least unfair, but I think we ought in justice to the bill and in justice to the members of this House to put that section in the condition in which the committee means it to be before we pass upon the question of striking out.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as the gentleman is concerned personally I did not mean to reflect upon him. I was discussing the proposition involved in this motion, and that it was not in good faith, and I still claim that it is not in good faith. The majority have had the right to perfect their bill. They occupied hours of time; they went through the bill paragraph by paragraph and perfected it to their hearts' content. Having offered all they had to offer, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], on the part of the minority, comes in with a second amendment to that perfected bill, or supposed to be perfected bill, to strike out a section. At once the gentleman from Massachusetts says we must have more perfection before we can have a vote.

The SPEAKER. What objection can the gentleman from Georgia have to perfecting the section before the question is put for striking it out.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know what perfection means. It has been perfected once, and the right to perfect is not determined or affected by the motion to strike out or by any motion that the gentleman may have made. If this rule is to be carried out the gentleman from South Carolina may be taken off the floor for one amendment after another at any time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, if I may be indulged one moment in reply to the inquiry to the Chair, I will make this suggestion: Here is the injustice that can come from it and will come from it. The gentleman from Massachusetts was given an opportunity to perfect his bill, and it will be remembered by those who were present yesterday that there was desistance from resisting a number of those amendments, in order that we might have the opportunity to present amendments on this side. Now, after the gentleman from Massachusetts has taken all the time he wanted for that purpose, if when we present an amendment he is allowed to come in with other amendments to that section and take up the time that is remaining, or supposed to be remaining, for the offering of amendments on this side of the House, the right to offer amendments is curtailed and cut off. That is the injustice of it.

The SPEAKER. The desistance of the gentleman from Tennessee and his friends was of their own motion.

Mr. McMILLIN. But impelled by the fact that we did not want to take up the time which might be used for the offering of amendments on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not be guilty of the obvious injustice of refusing, by its action, so far as it is a refusal, to allow the House to perfect a section which it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would not be understood as questioning the Chair's right to administer the rules of the House strictly. What I have to say is addressed more particularly to the gentleman from Massachusetts who is not doing justice by this side of the House in the proceedings that he has instituted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call attention—

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I should like to call attention to the colloquy which took place on the floor of the House yesterday when the amendments were offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It simply shows that the gentleman was asked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to perfect the bill at the time he offered his amendment, and that in pursuance of the proposition to perfect his bill he offered a number of amendments, and then offered one, and said this is the last amendment which I wish to make.

Mr. DINGLEY. He did not say that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is the language of the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, no, it does not go so far as that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Very well; I will read what he said:

Mr. LODGE. The Clerk has now read the various amendments that I have sent up. I have one more, and the last which I submit.

And again:

Mr. LODGE. That is the last of the amendments.

The Clerk read the amendment, and then he said that was the last he had to offer.

Mr. DINGLEY. He meant at that time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is at the end of the submission of amendments?

Mr. DINGLEY. But of course the gentleman does not mean to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] took away from himself the power to offer amendments.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And then he follows it up with the statement that that is the last of the amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. The last that he held in his hand. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to inquire what is the pending question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to call up as a privileged matter the subject of the conference on the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891. As will be observed in a report brought in a few moments ago, the Senate has requested another conference, and I desire to move that the House adhere to its disagreement. This relates solely to the matter of the Senators' clerks. It has been discussed very fully in the House, and because it has been so discussed I move that the House adhere and call for a vote. That ends the matter and the bill fails unless another body interested shall feel called upon to recede.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] moves that the House adhere to its non-concurrence in the Senate amendments relating to the compensation of clerks.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The only amendments in conference.

The motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. TRACEY. Is it in order to speak on this amendment? Is debate closed? Will I be permitted to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the debate is closed on this amendment, but if gentlemen have anything to say upon that point I would be glad to hear from them. The present impression of the Chair is that the debate is not closed.

Mr. TRACEY. Is the question now pending on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The SPEAKER. That is the pending question.

Mr. TRACEY. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will give his attention I would like him to answer a question relating to his amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Let us arrange a limit of time for debate. Mr. Speaker, as the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is an important one and raises a new question entirely, I propose that we have some arrangement about the length of time for debate before we vote upon it. I suggest that there be twenty minutes on a side.

Mr. BLOUNT. How long a time?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of gentlemen on both sides that debate be limited to twenty minutes on each side?

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will modify that somewhat. We do not want to take the time in discussing matters with nothing substantial about them. We have just taken away an hour, and here comes another. Make it ten minutes on each side.

Mr. TRACEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request that ten minutes be allowed on each side. The question is, Shall twenty minutes be allowed on each side? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would withdraw my objection if I can have a couple of minutes of the time that is allowed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suggest fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. BLOUNT. That will do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to an agreement that fifteen minutes be allowed on each side? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the Clerk may read the amendment in order that the House may understand it.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, I have great doubt about this amendment, both as to the legal character of it and as to its practical effects; but as it is thrown suddenly into the House in the great hurry of our proceedings, and concluding our action upon this bill, I do not know, sir, that I can speak with that due deliberation and comprehension of the amendment which ought to exist with any one who undertakes to debate it. I know that the Constitution of our country provides that the House of Representatives shall judge of the election and qualifications of its members. This amendment very clearly turns over to the circuit court the right to judge upon a trial which, whether with the aid of a jury or without a jury, is necessarily judicial in its nature. It is a judgment which is to be pronounced. The parties are to appear before them. Both sides are to be heard, doubtless counsel employed, and the action will be that of a circuit judge.

The provision of this amendment is necessarily inconsistent with the exclusive power of the House of Representatives to judge of the election and qualifications of its members. That is not a power to be exercised by the House of Representatives as an appellate court and after some other court has pronounced its opinion and judgment. It is an original, inherent, exclusive power; and I take it that you can not properly provide by law that the canvassing of election returns, like any other act of ministerial officers—of officers who have simply ministerial power to pass upon questions of ordinary fact and to take such action—does not make them judges and conclude the rights of either party, even as in a nisi prius decision or hearing. In other words, if this be a trial, if it be a judicial proceeding in the circuit courts of the United States, then this House has simply the appellate power to overrule the decision which they may make, and the judgment of the House is to be influenced, if not controlled, by a prior judgment pronounced by a court of law.

Mr. OATES. Will my friend state whether he thinks that it will amount to anything more than a State certificate now does?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes; it is a decision to come here under the laws of the United States, and the decision of one of the highest judicial tribunals of the country upon a question of law and fact, which this House is to decide. It places this court in the same position as an ordinary judicial tribunal from which there may be an appeal afterwards to the Supreme Court.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman object to a question there?

Mr. BUCKALEW. No.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the fact that it comes from a circuit judge give it any higher authority than if it came from a State authority, and has not the House the same right to overrule it as it would have in the other case?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The report from the State now is simply the report of a ministerial officer without power or judgment. He simply sends to us the returns which the people in their precincts have made; sums them up and sends them here.

Mr. ADAMS. And the House can overrule them.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. And so it can in this case.

Mr. BUCKALEW. But this is a judgment of a court.

Mr. OATES. Although it would be a judicial action the House would be competent to examine it and all the evidence.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I want to make an inquiry or two about the object of this amendment.

Mr. ROWELL. The effect of the amendment, Mr. Speaker, is to bring all the papers which were before the canvassing board before the circuit court.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I understand that; but what I wish to direct your attention to and upon which I need information is this: What authority have you to confer upon the circuit court of the United States a case in which by the very terms of your amendment you refuse and reject this power to make its judgment imperative and final? That is to say, if I understand, this amendment provides that when the United States canvassing board has entered its judgment and promulgated its results the person aggrieved may appeal to the circuit court of the United States for a rehearing, not de novo, not upon the case as the aggrieved party may desire to present, but an appeal to the circuit court, to be tried upon the very papers, on the very notes, and the very statements upon which the board of canvassers entered up their judgment.

Now, can you impose upon the circuit court of the United States any function not judicial in its character or can you impose upon any court of the United States any duty which they may not enforce by their judgment? And if you do impose that duty upon the circuit court, then it is clearly unconstitutional, because it takes away from the House of Representatives the right to pass upon the election and qualification of its members.

Mr. ROWELL. Why, Mr. Speaker, this House passed a law imposing a duty upon one of the Federal courts, the Court of Claims, to take charge of a certain class of cases that might be referred to that court by the House, or by committees of the House, not to enter up a judgment, but to report to the House its opinion upon the facts and the law.

If that jurisdiction could be conferred upon the Court of Claims, it is certainly competent to confer upon the circuit courts of the United States the power to try in the first instance any contested-election case, to examine all the facts and hear all the testimony, and to authorize that court to give a certificate upon the facts and the law to the person found by the court to be elected, which certificate shall entitle that person to take a seat here; and it is competent to do all that without taking away any right from the House, in the second instance, to determine the qualification and election of its own members.

Mr. BLAND. Does not this amendment confine the contest simply to such evidence as the election officers may lay before the court? In other words, do not they determine beforehand how the court shall decide?

Mr. ROWELL. I was about to say that this amendment proposes to bring before the court, any party being aggrieved, all of the papers of every kind and character in the hands of the original canvassing board, so that that court may review the decision which that canvassing board has made with reference to any of the returns and determine whether that decision has been properly made, so that no one can thereafter say that any partisan court or any dishonest board has, by false or partisan ruling, excluded or included returns which would change the result, but that the judicial body of the United States, that great authority which is the conservator of law, to which the people look in all emergencies for protection against usurpation and against unconstitutional legislation, in which all parties, Democratic, Republican, and every other, have confidence—that that judiciary shall review the action of the canvassing boards, so that no one can say that there has been improper, illegal, or unjust action by those boards.

Mr. CHEADLE. Will the gentleman permit a question for information?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHEADLE. When the papers are brought before the circuit court are they only the papers in possession of the supervisors or are they the papers in possession of the supervisors and also those in possession of the various State officers who have held the election?

Mr. ROWELL. There is no power to get possession of the papers of the various State officers; but, under the provisions of this law, all of the reports that go up from the supervisors contain an exact statement of the reports that go to the State officers, and a statement of the differences, if any, between their reports and those that go to the State officers; so that the canvassing board, and eventually, on complaint, the circuit court has before it as complete a statement as the local canvassing boards of the State; not the same statements, perhaps, that are in the hands of the governor, because it frequently happens that large numbers of the reports down in the hands of county officers are never tabulated and sent up to the governor; but there is a complete statement showing what each precinct has returned, under the requirements of this law. There is no power to get possession of the papers in the hands of the various State officers.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois another question. Pending this trial in the circuit court, where is the original certificate that is issued by the board of canvassers to be kept?

Mr. ROWELL. One certificate is to be delivered to the person found to be elected and another is to be sent to the Clerk of the House.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. But you will observe that in the original bill, or in the substitute which is under consideration, it is provided that one of these certificates shall go to the person claiming to have been elected and the other shall be sent to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and that thereupon the Clerk shall enroll the name of the beneficiary of the certificate upon the roll of the House. In the mean time, however, as soon as it is promulgated that a result has been reached by the board of canvassers an appeal is provided for by this amendment—

Mr. ROWELL. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Now, does that appeal under this amendment suspend the action of the board of supervisors and arrest the certificate which is then en route to the Capitol?

Mr. ROWELL. One of the clauses in this amendment provides that if there is a reversal of the action that reversal shall be binding on the Speaker of the House.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. But in the mean time the Congress may have organized and organized upon a certificate which the circuit court of the United States may subsequently hold to be void.

Mr. ROWELL. That can not possibly be. There is a fixed time when the canvassing board shall meet, and it could not possibly be that the certificate would arrive before this determination would have to be made.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. The gentleman is mistaken there, because, if he will observe, this amendment falls short of what would be a fair and just proposition on this subject. As soon as the appeal is made to the circuit court of the United States, the original certificate which the board of supervisors prepared to be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives should be sent to the clerk of the circuit court of the United States, and not sent here. Because it will happen in many cases—at any rate it can happen and probably may happen—that the trial in the circuit court will be continued beyond the time at which the House shall be convened; unless it be the object on the other side (which I would hardly now charge) to organize the House upon certificates pending at the time in the courts, it seems to me you ought to ameliorate this amendment a little.

Mr. ROWELL. If there is anything in the amendment that does not cover the question of having the certificate of the court prevail—if it is necessary, on notice that an appeal has been taken, that the Clerk of the House shall not put the name on his roll, and if a proper amendment covering that matter can be formulated, no one would object, because the purpose of this proceeding is to obtain on complaint the decision of the circuit court.

Mr. CRISP. Let the appeal supersede the first judgment.

Mr. ROWELL. By putting in a provision that the hearing should be had before the 4th day of March the objection would be obviated.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. No, we do not want a provision of that kind; we want to lap over the organization of the House of Representatives.

Now, if I understand this amendment fully (I have only heard it read from the desk) it seems to me we are imposing upon the circuit court a duty which ought not to be imposed upon it. In the first place, I believe that Congress has no power whatever to impose upon the circuit courts of the United States any duty which is not strictly judicial in its character. It will be remembered that a few years ago we raised a commission—

Mr. FRANK obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Texas, and I desire at a convenient time to ask him a question in the line of his remarks.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Availing myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANK] I wish to say that a few years ago we raised a commission with quasi-judicial powers to inquire into the state of the accounts between the United States and the Pacific railroad companies, and it was provided in the bill that the commission might refer to the United States circuit court of the particular district certain questions that might arise during the proceeding or investigation.

The commission held a session and had before it several witnesses who refused to answer questions propounded to them. The matter was referred to the circuit court of the United States of that district, then presided over by Mr. Justice Field, who held that Congress had no right to impose upon a circuit court of the United States a function or duty not strictly judicial.

Now, it seems to me this amendment undertakes to impose upon the circuit court the duty simply of looking over a lot of papers and seeing whether or not the board of supervisors has made a wrong footing of the figures. That is all there is in it. The court is not authorized to hear any additional testimony whatever, but is to try the case upon the statements and the figures which were before the original board of supervisors. If the court should find that the board of supervisors made a mistake and gave the certificate to the wrong person, and should enter up a judgment of that kind, of what effect is the judgment? The court has no power to enforce it, because at the doors of this Capitol its action is met by the constitutional provision that this House shall be the judge of the election of its own members.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FRANK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] a question.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I hope you will not. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] for a moment in regard to the effect of this amendment upon the existing law of the State of New York. I notice the amendment provides that in case of an appeal to the judge a number of papers, including the tickets, shall be brought before the court. Now, the law in the State of New York is that after the canvassing board has counted the tickets and has reserved one of each kind to paste upon its returns, the balance of the tickets are to be destroyed. The question therefore presented here is whether in destroying the tickets in pursuance of the law of the State of New York the canvassing board would not violate the law of the United States if this bill should be enacted. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois explain in what way the canvassing board can act or how this difficulty can be obviated.

Mr. ROWELL. If the gentleman had read the bill carefully he would have found that it provides, precisely as does the law of New York, that sample tickets shall be pasted to the returns. No other tickets except those found in boxes where they ought not to be taken possession of by the Federal supervisors; all other tickets are left in the custody of the State officers, so that the tickets which will come before the court under this amendment will be the sample tickets pasted to the returns—

Mr. TRACEY. That may be so, but the amendment does not so state.

Mr. TUCKER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] to the wording of this amendment:

The said returning officers shall produce before the circuit court all returns, reports, protests, tickets, and all the evidence upon which they acted in awarding the certificate.

Mr. ROWELL. Precisely; that refers to such tickets as the law provides shall go into the hands of this canvassing board; and those are the sample tickets pasted to the returns and the tickets that have come out of boxes where they ought not to be.

Mr. TUCKER. Why, the gentleman must see that the wording of this amendment shows for itself that all of the tickets are required to be sent to the circuit court, and yet the law of the State of New York requires that these tickets shall be destroyed. Now I ask him, which are you to obey, the State or the Federal law?

Mr. TRACEY. And the inspectors must destroy the tickets in New York.

Mr. ROWELL. I understand that the inspectors destroy all but the sample tickets in New York. Now this law will require the sample tickets also to go with the returns, and they would not be destroyed; that is all.

Mr. FRANK. They can only produce the tickets they have.

Mr. ROWELL. Of course they can only produce the tickets they have; and there is no provision in the bill that any tickets can be so returned to the chief supervisor, except that sample tickets—

Mr. TUCKER. Let me interrupt the gentleman to read the forty-seventh paragraph of the law of the State of New York on that subject.

Mr. ROWELL. I understand that provision.

Mr. TUCKER. It provides—

That the remaining ballots not so pasted or attached shall be destroyed, and the board of inspectors shall be dissolved.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir, I understand that; and this law, to the extent of getting only so many more sample tickets, will overrule the authority of the New York inspectors to destroy the ballots, precisely as the law of 1871, as found by a Democratic committee and sustained by this House, overruled the statute law of Massachusetts and took the ballots out of the hands of the supervisors and counted them at a place where the supervisors were not permitted to come, and by which action a Democratic House seated a Democrat as against a Republican. And the law of the United States as reported by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] on that occasion was held to overrule the law of Massachusetts.

Mr. OATES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: This amendment simply allows any defeated candidate to bring the action of the board of canvassers before the United States court for review.

Mr. ROWELL. That is all.

Mr. OATES. Now is there any provision which allows, when such complaint is lodged, the United States circuit judge to reassemble the court and correct any error that may have been made?

Mr. ROWELL. My friend has made a mistake there. There is no such provision in the bill. You know that in some of the States the canvassing board of the county, which becomes functus officio after counting the ballots, is for the purposes of the law continued in existence, and the United States court may compel that county canvassing board to reassemble and count the votes.

Mr. OATES. But section 29 of your bill reads:

Whenever it shall appear by affidavit that errors have occurred in the determination of any board of canvassers, either national, Territorial, county, or other local board in any State or Territory in the matter of the votes cast for Representative or Delegate in Congress, the circuit court of the United States may, by order, require any such board to correct such errors, etc.

Now, as I understand the gentleman from Illinois, your construction is that this would require alone the county canvassing boards to reassemble?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, that is the provision of the section.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], my colleague on the committee, that he misapprehends the force and effect of this language. What is before the returning officer? The returns of the supervisor are sent to the chief supervisor and by him sent to the clerk of the circuit court of the circuit in which the Congressional district lies over which there has been this supervision. All they have before them, these three citizens appointed by the judge of the circuit court—and that is the provision to which I am most heartily and unalterably opposed, putting these three men paramount over the State officers—and what have they got? They have only the tabulated statements, the returns, sample tickets, and certain protests or challenges, if you please, of the votes. Now this provides—

The State returning officers shall produce before the circuit court all the returns, reports, protests, tickets, and all of the evidence upon which they acted in awarding the certificate aforesaid.

That is merely in the nature of further supervision by the circuit court over the returning board, that being a sort of supervisory board to supervise the supervision over the election, and in my judgment removes one of the worst features of the bill, that to which I briefly alluded, namely, that the three citizens become and take the place of the persons elected by the people of the State, namely, the governor and the secretary of state. This removes the temptation on the part of the Federal supervisor from doing the electing himself, whereas the people have been supposed to do it.

Mr. MILLS. But you turn it over to the circuit judge.

Mr. FRANK. Well, of course, it has got to be lodged somewhere. I yield the balance of my time, if I have any, to the gentleman from South Carolina, my colleague on the committee [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. ANDREW. Before the gentleman takes his seat will he allow a question?

Mr. FRANK. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDREW. Under the Massachusetts law—the ballot act there—all ballots must be returned whether counted or not. There are official ballots printed by the government. All of these must be returned to the city or town clerk, otherwise these election officers are liable to imprisonment. Now, I would like to ask how the sample tickets are to be obtained to be sent by the supervisors to the court without conflicting with that law?

Mr. FRANK. The sample ticket, as I understand it, is not the ballot that is cast.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ANDREW. But even in that event it does not matter. Under the Massachusetts law every ballot furnished by the State, whether cast or not, must be accounted for in these returns.

Mr. FRANK. Then the Massachusetts-Australian ballot law must yield to the paramount law of Congress.

Mr. ANDREW. Then, I understand you propose an act here which will conflict with the law of Massachusetts, a law which after a great deal of difficulty we have secured in that State and which meets the approval of everybody, Democrat and Republican, in the State. You propose to conflict with a law which nobody would like to see interfered with.

Mr. TRACEY. And the same in New York.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, unless the time allotted to debate has expired I would like to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the time has been exhausted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would only like to say that this amendment, I suppose, is intended to ease the consciences of some gentlemen; but it amounts to nothing, because the circuit judges are simply to tabulate and add up what the returning officers have furnished. They are not to hear outside evidence, but they are simply to add up figures which these boards shall return, and hence it is only a sham and a humbug.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has no time to yield for anything.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3711) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 3711) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10716) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. CALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11223) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for compensation of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

A bill (S. 3034) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Muskegon, in the State of Michigan; and

A bill (S. 4171) to authorize the leasing of school lands in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 4562) to provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union; and

A bill (H. R. 9048) to confirm the title to certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein.

The message further announced that the Senate requested the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3430) to confirm the title of certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments to the District of Columbia bill and ask a further conference thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, calls up the District of Columbia appropriation bill and moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the District of Columbia appropriation bill Mr. McCOMAS, Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, and Mr. CLEMENTS.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think we had better let it go. It is a mere sham. It does not amount to anything.

The SPEAKER. The request for a division is withdrawn. [Laughter.]

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina to strike out and insert. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out sections 15, 16, 17, and 18, and insert the following: "Sec. 15. From the returns of the supervisors the chief supervisor shall tabulate and forward to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to be by him submitted to the House, the results as they appear therefrom in each Congressional district under his jurisdiction in which this act has been enforced."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think we might as well have yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 137, nays 144, not voting 47; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I am paired; otherwise I should vote "ay."

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Paired until further notice:

Mr. REYBURN with Mr. REILLY.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CLUNIE. I desire to announce that I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANDALL]. Were he present, I should vote "ay" and he would vote "no" on the amendment.

Mr. ANDREW. I would like to announce that my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL] is paired with General COGSWELL. If Mr. O'NEIL were present, he would vote, "ay."

The Clerk began to recapitulate the names of those voting.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to know if I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the negative.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minority of the committee, I move to strike out the thirty-eighth section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the section that it is proposed to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 38. Section 2, chapter 52, acts of 1879, is hereby amended by striking out all after the words "by the clerk of such court" as far as and including the words "placed therein."

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, I propose that debate on this amendment be limited to twenty minutes on a side.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the provision contained in the thirty-eighth section of this bill develops as clearly the gross partisan character of the measure as any other provision in the bill, and the motion of my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW], ought to prevail.

From 1789 to 1862 the laws prescribing the qualifications of jurors for service in the courts of the United States and regulating the manner of their selection were not materially changed. Jurors to serve in the courts of the United States in each State respectively were required, under those laws, to have the same qualifications and to be entitled to the same exemptions as jurors in the highest court of law in such State.

In June, 1862, an act was passed by Congress which made a radical change in respect to the qualifications of jurors. By the provisions of that act every person was disqualified for jury service in the courts of the United States who had voluntarily taken up arms against the United States, or had joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or had adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort, or who had given, directly or indirectly, any assistance in money, arms, horses, clothes, or anything whatever to or for the use or benefit of any person whom the giver of such assistance knew to have joined or to be about to join any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted or to be about to resist, with force and arms, the execution of the laws of the United States, etc.

The act of 1862 further provided that, at any term of any court of the United States, the judge might, in his discretion, require the clerk to tender to any person summoned to serve as a grand or petit juror, or venireman, or talesman, in said court, the test oath substantially, commonly called the "iron-clad oath," and any person who declined to take the oath was summarily discharged by an order of the court from serving on the grand or petit jury.

This statute remained in force until 1879. And during all that long period, made memorable by war and embalmbed in our memories by the oppression and wrongs of reconstruction, no Democrat accused of crime under the provisions of the elective franchise or crimes articles ever entered the portals of a United States court-house in the South believing that he would be granted a fair and impartial trial. And, Mr. Speaker, no Republican charged with the violation of a penal statute of the United States during that period entertained the slightest doubt of a triumphant acquittal and a free deliverance at the hands of a Republican jury and a partisan Republican court.

In 1879 Congress passed an act which repealed sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes, which contained in substance the partisan provisions of the act of 1862, and that act further provides that—

All jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the court, should be publicly drawn from a box containing at the time of each drawing the names of not less than three hundred persons possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held, and a well known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in the box alternately, without reference to party affiliations, until the whole number required shall be placed therein.

This beneficent statute not only repealed the partisan provisions of the act of 1862, but guaranteed to the citizen, North and South, Democrat or Republican, a fair and impartial trial. I have observed to some extent the operation of this law, and I can confidently assert that it has in the main destroyed partisanship in the trial of civil and criminal causes in my section of the country, and has done more than any other thing to sweep behind us the bitter memories of the war and the persecutions in the courts which followed it.

The awe and terror with which a court of the United States was regarded during the reign of unfettered and unbridled partisanship in the conduct of judicial proceedings have ceased to exist, and in their stead has come the universal belief that party spirit or partisan hate no longer employs the machinery of the courts to crush opponents or reward friends.

The proposition of the Committee on Elections of members of Congress, as presented by this section of the bill under consideration, is to amend the act of 1879 by striking out all that relates to the appointment of a commission to act with the clerk in placing the names of suitable persons in a box from which the jurors for each term of the court are to be drawn.

If this proposition should become the law what would be the result?

The answer is plain. The clerk of the court would then be required by law to place the names of the persons in the box and to draw from the box the number of names required to compose the juries for the term.

Perhaps I ought not to say that the object of this proposed change in the law is to place the Republican party in absolute control of the machinery of the courts in order that Republicans may be screened from the just punishments of the law and political enemies intimidated, outraged, and persecuted by the perversion of this great and powerful arm of the Government, the judiciary, to the basest of all purposes. But while I will not charge such a motive on the part of any member of the House, such will be the inevitable effect and result if this amendment to the law of 1879 should become the law.

The circuit and district judges of the United States, the district attorneys, and the clerks of the circuit and district courts, with here and there an exception, are all Republicans, and if the change of the act of 1879, as proposed by the bill, shall become law, none but Republicans will be permitted to serve as jurors.

Our friends on the other side can not appreciate the horror with which we contemplate such a condition. They have never lived in the South. Their courts have never been polluted by the filth of partisan politics, disgraced by brutal and ignorant jurors, or prostituted to partisan purposes by tyrannical and unscrupulous judges.

I will not, Mr. Speaker, trespass further upon the time allotted to my colleagues on this side of the House.

Mr. WADDILL. Mr. Speaker, this is in many respects the most important provision of this bill, and I doubt not that gentlemen on the other side who have fought this bill with so much persistency do look upon it with horror. I am glad to know that there are some things that they can not charge with being sectional. The same power in this country which makes a Federal judge in the North makes a Federal judge in the South. The President appoints the judges for the Federal courts all over this country and the Senate of the United States confirms his appointments.

I admit that any provision of law that seems to mix politics with the jury system of a country is unfortunate, but I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to put his finger upon any other statute passed by any law-enacting power in any civilized land before the act of 1879 that did bring politics into the jury box. The act of 1879, which we repeal, provides in effect for political juries, and I say that under that law you can not convict of a political crime, North or South. Think of it, Mr. Speaker, setting out to convict a man for stealing an election, with half of the jury consisting of one party and half of the other! These gentlemen say: "Ah, but you want to have all on one side." I deny it. I want to say here that in the community in which I live, and in the community in which every Democratic member lives, there can be found Democrats who would convict a Democrat for an election fraud as quickly as any Republican would. I can go to my city and walk up and down the streets and find numbers of Democrats who would be as quick to convict a Democrat for violating the election laws as a Republican.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then, why do you wish to exclude them from the jury?

Mr. WADDILL. We do not. What we complain of is that they never get on the jury under the existing system which we propose to repeal. That is the very gist of this law. We propose now to have the juries selected by an impartial tribunal that will put these men on, and when you select a jury of non-partisans, or business men, I do not care whether they be Republicans or Democrats, they will treat all criminals alike.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Why is the clerk of the court more non-partisan than the jury commissioner?

Mr. WADDILL. I will answer that, too. The clerk is the arm of the court; he selects the jury under the supervision and direction of the court. But by the existing system one of the jury commissioners is from the Democratic party and the other from the Republican party, both chosen because they are of different political parties, and the result is that the Republican commissioner feels that he should select his party friends, or partisans, and the Democratic commissioner feels that he should do likewise, and we hence start out with not only a partisan jury, but as a rule with a jury of politicians, and not unfrequently the most violent politicians in the community.

Theory will not do, gentlemen. Experience is the best teacher. Show me any criminals that have been convicted in the United States courts since the enactment of this law. If you will show me one I will show you one hundred who have laughed at the law and defied it. In the Presidential election of 1888, in the city of Richmond and in other places in the eastern district of Virginia, the fraud was bold, open, and audacious. I stood and looked with my naked eye for eight hours that day upon men who were openly defying the election laws of this Union. Now, you would be surprised if I were to tell you that there has been scarcely a United States jury convened in the city of Richmond since that transaction that has not had some of the prominent election criminals upon it. Mr. Speaker, whatever may be said against the proposed system, and I admit there are some objections to it, I say that the present system will not work. It is a guaranty to criminals that they shall go scot-free. The people who committed frauds in the Harrison election have kept it up since, and unless you change this law they will always do it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I had expected some gentleman from the North upon that side of the House to rise in his place and attempt to defend this most infamous and outrageous feature of this bill. Who has arisen? I had expected that some of our friends from the North would do that if they hoped to satisfy the country that they were not actuated by a partisan spirit in the passage of it. The gentleman who has just taken his seat has given no good reason for this peculiar feature, this obnoxious change in the jury system of the Federal courts. He has admitted to you that there can be found, even in his own district, Democrats as pure as any Republicans who might be put upon the juries. Yet we are now confronted with the proposition, insinuated if not directly asserted, that in the whole United States, in my district as well as in yours, gentlemen, your Democratic fellow-citizens can not be trusted upon a Federal jury. That is the simple proposition. Starting out with a Federal election law providing for the appointment of Republicans only as canvassing boards, Republicans two to one as supervisors and inspectors of election, Republicans only as marshals, you come now to the proposition that you will have Republicans only to try the cases, both civil and criminal, that arise in the courts of the United States.

That proposition, strangely enough, is made in a proposed election law. I call your attention as Republicans to this feature. It has been said that the Democratic party has made colossal blunders. If you Republicans shall vote for this bill you will have taken from the Democracy the palm in that respect; you will have made such a blunder as will justify the people throughout the United States in giving you the distinction that has heretofore been given by you to the Democracy. You now will outdo what you, in your hypocritical assumption of all the cardinal virtues, assert that we have been guilty of.

You pass this bill upon one of two assumptions, either that you are the United States of America or that you are the embodiment of all the patriotism, wisdom, and honesty there is in this country. You pass it upon the proposition that the Republican party can do no wrong, that Republican politicians can do no evil, or else you are passing it upon the other assumption, that if Republican politicians in the minor offices that are to be created by this bill shall do any wrong they must be protected in the courts by Republican juries. That is the proposition that you gentlemen must face. I yesterday described the character of some deputy marshals that have been appointed heretofore to guard an election in a city in Ohio, and I cite the report of a committee of the Congress of the United States to sustain me in the assertion that among the deputy marshals then appointed there were criminals of the worst kind:

That the deputy marshals appointed by Marshal Wright were largely in excess of the necessities of the situation.

That they were appointed as Republican partisans and political workers, and in most cases prostituted their official positions to partisan ends.

That they were armed with revolvers and other deadly weapons furnished by the national committee of the Republican party.

That many of such deputy marshals so appointed and armed were notorious criminals and men of known vicious and brutal habits, and many of them were non-residents of the State of Ohio.

That many of such deputy marshals, acting under the orders of Marshal Wright, aided, abetted, and encouraged fraudulent voting, intimidation of voters, and committed gross outrages upon the elective franchise and the rights of honest voters.

And the report of the minority, signed by the gentleman from Maine, I believe, does not say that this was not true, but says that out of fifteen hundred not more than a dozen of them were the criminals that they are charged to have been in the report of the majority.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman will allow me a moment. "The gentleman from Maine" found it a tremendous task to tell everything about the Democratic party in one report.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have before me the report of the gentleman, and he does not pretend to submit any other answer than that I have just stated. Is it to protect such men that you must change the jury laws so as to insure like men, or men who sympathize politically with them, will constitute the juries in the court which might be called upon to try them for violations of the election laws and trampling upon the rights of the people?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything on this subject and I have not taken pains to hunt up the technical evidence of particular facts. There are a great many things which we know in a general way and which we are not required to prove by formal evidence; so with regard to this matter there are a great many things that every intelligent citizen of the United States understands very well, and I am not under the necessity of pointing out particular instances. Every intelligent citizen knows that for a number of years not only political assassinations growing out of elections, but hangings, wholesale slaughters, and frauds of every character and description imaginable, from the murder of political opponents down to the swindling of the ignorant voter, have been going on. And no one has ever accused more than one party of having been guilty of these great offenses in the South.

Every intelligent citizen knows another thing: that, so far as the political jury system now in force is concerned, instead of having worked well in the ordinary sense of the term, it has worked well for the Democracy only.

Under the present system, so far as I am informed and so far as the public is informed, no man, however vile and mean or however red-handed a murderer he may have been, has ever been brought to justice. In the majority of cases in the South, when these murders and other outrages are perpetrated a grand jury can not be found under the existing system to indict them, the effect of which is that the law can not be and is not enforced. And I do not blame gentlemen on the other side for seriously insisting on this amendment, because by its adoption you will destroy the power of the courts to enforce the law against the parties who may violate it.

I had a little experience myself in the Federal courts prior to the enactment of 1879 and under the law now proposed to be reinstated. While the clerk of the court selected the jury under the supervision of the court, it did not in my State have the effect to put all Republicans on the jury, nor did it have that effect anywhere else. Under that system all parties proven guilty were convicted and punished. The circuit and district court judges of the United States are, in my judgment, a class of men, be they called Democrats or Republicans, who are above that species of political trickery and corruption that is intimated against them on this floor. They want honest, intelligent, non-partisan jurymen who will enforce the law against all violators of it, Republicans and Democrats, and they do not get such under the present system.

I am not one of those who believe that a man, because he differs with me politically, is a scoundrel and I am not prepared to believe that the jury system of this country, as it was before 1879, especially the Federal jury system, or that the Federal judiciary, is of the character that gentlemen would intimate. Nor will the supervisors who may be appointed under this bill be the class of men that gentlemen on the other side charge will be appointed. I can only imagine that they "measure other people's grain in their own half-bushel" when they charge wholesale rascality upon everybody else; for in point of fact, so far as regards the passage of a Federal law and the passage of laws for the purifying of elections, no effort has ever been made by the Democracy in this House or elsewhere to purify or protect the exercise of the elective franchise. In fact, the Democratic party is, in my judgment, greatly to be excused; for it has never been able to or accused of originating, advocating, and carrying into effect a single great, grand measure protecting the interests of the people of the United States. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] Point me out any such measure, if you can; tell me one. I defy you to point to a single such measure.

I defy gentlemen on the other side to name one great measure that their party has ever originated, looking to the interests of the people of the United States. You may sneer, but you can not escape your own history. You have been fertile in objections to whatever the Republican party proposed to do. Thus we have, from necessity, been compelled to adopt measures which you called radical. But we have originated and enforced measures which have brought about the prosper-perity of our people and made our country to-day the wonder of the world and the hope of the nations.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And you have brought the people to the point that in your estimation they are so corrupt they have to be watched like criminals.

Mr. FINLEY. That I understand to be the opinion of the gentleman, and it is only an illustration of the remark I made a few moments since, that he desires to measure our grain in his own half-bushel.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman allow a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, soon after this Congress assembled the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] introduced a bill embodying his ideas of what should be contained in a Federal election law. My friend from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] introduced another bill expressive of his ideas on the same subject, and the two bills were entirely inconsistent the one with the other. Some time since we learned through the public prints that a Republican caucus had been called to pass upon the two bills and decide upon a measure to be brought before the House.

Shortly thereafter it was given out that the notorious John I. Davenport was here conferring with gentlemen on the majority side and giving them the benefit, as the dispatches stated, of his "experience" in framing an election law. Now, I have not time to read, in the moments at my disposal, but I find in the New York Commercial Advertiser an editorial which makes clear the value of Mr. Davenport's "experience." The Commercial Advertiser is published in New York, where Davenport lives. It explicitly charges that on all questions of elections he is so utterly corrupt that wherever he is known to be in consultation with any party, it is understood to be for the purpose of perpetrating fraud.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is the character of the paper from which the gentleman quotes?

Mr. CRISP. I gave the name of it, the New York Commercial Advertiser.

Mr. MILLIKEN. A Democratic paper. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, sir; a Republican paper.

Mr. CRISP. This bill, called the Lodge-Rowell bill, is in fact the Davenport bill. You are robbing that notorious gentleman of the fame or the infamy to which he is entitled as the author of this bill.

Now, gentlemen, you claim that you want fair elections, that you want publicity to insure fair practices, and you assert that this bill is to amend the existing laws so as to insure that. The existing laws enable you to have entire publicity. Why is not that satisfactory? The existing law permits home-rule. The existing law requires that a supervisor of election shall reside in the district where he acts, where he is known, where he knows the voters, where he is responsible to public sentiment and to public opinion. Under the proposed law a supervisor may be appointed to manage and control an election in a county or community where he is a perfect stranger. Publicity would be attained by providing for scrutiny of votes. You do not want publicity so much as you want power.

You authorize the circuit court to appoint State returning boards. Now, in the fifth circuit the judge of the court lives in Louisiana, and yet he is to appoint a board to certify who is elected in the State of Georgia. The judge is practically responsible to no one for the manner in which he discharges his duty. He is not responsible to the people. Impeachment can reach him, but he can be impeached alone through the action of this House. This House is to be organized by persons holding certificates from canvassing boards appointed by him and removable absolutely at his will and pleasure.

Then, again, to illustrate and show that your purpose is to remove this question entirely from the control of the people, you repeal the statute which was enacted for the purpose of securing impartial jurors in the Federal courts; and you do this upon a bill providing pains and penalties for political offenses. Oh, Shame! Shame! where is thy blush?

You say you want impartial and fair trials in the Federal courts. You pass an act creating many new offenses, an act bristling with pains and penalties, and in that act repeal the law which provides for impartial juries to try persons indicted or prosecuted under its provisions.

Gentlemen say the present law has a tendency to mix politics with jury trials. Since 1879 we have operated under the existing law, but significantly enough you seek to change it for the first time when you are considering a bill creating political crimes. The present law has worked well enough for ten years past; it has enabled parties to obtain impartial juries to try questions of contract, questions involving life and liberty, but now when you create political crimes you so fix the law that a Republican clerk, and they are all Republicans, I believe, can provide a jury composed entirely of members of his own political party for the trial of such cases. This letter shows how juries will be obtained if you repeal the present law:

OFFICE J. R. MIZELL, UNITED STATES MARSHAL FOR NORTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA,
Jacksonville, Fla., July 5, 1889.

SIR: You will at once confer with McBulby and make out a list of fifty or sixty names of true and tried Republicans from your county registration list for jurors, United States court, and forward same to Hon. P. Walter, clerk United States court. And it is necessary to have them at once, as you can see. Please acknowledge this.

I am, yours truly,

JOHN R. MIZELL,
United States Marshal.

C. C. KIRK, Esq., De Land, Fla.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROWELL was recognized.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to ask the gentlemen on the other side what is the matter with this man John I. Davenport, against whom gentlemen declaim so loudly?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. CRISP. I have a complete answer here to the gentleman's question, if he wants it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, the Speaker rules us both out.

Mr. CRISP. I will print it, and the gentleman can examine it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, I can not print, but I would like to hear what the gentleman has got to say on that point.

Mr. CRISP. Under leave to print I insert this editorial from the New York Commercial Advertiser of June 18 last, so that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] and all others may see "what is the matter" with John I. Davenport:

HOW PURITY IN ELECTIONS IS TO BE SOUGHT.

On Saturday last a most interesting political episode occurred in Washington. According to a dispatch in an esteemed Republican contemporary of this city, John I. Davenport—that life-long advocate of purity in politics—"was with the House caucus committee, giving the members the benefit of his experience in the execution of the election laws to aid them in the preparation of the national election bill."

It would be idle to undertake to instruct anybody in New York as to what Mr. Davenport's "experience" is. It is sufficient to say that wherever or whenever a questionable thing has been projected in regard to the elections of this city there the "experience" of Mr. Davenport has been found valuable. In every conspiracy against the purity of the ballot he has been recognized everywhere as one of the brightest and shrewdest of the leaders. In other words, his reputation is so bad and questionable that it is much to be doubted whether any man in either party, who had any regard whatever for his own reputation for honesty or the least familiarity with Davenport's ideas or methods, would be found associating with him in political combinations.

It has heretofore been assumed, and that without question, that Davenport would not think of doing an honest or creditable thing in politics if the opposite was a possibility. The very idea of calling John I. Davenport in to consult about the enactment of laws looking to purity in elections is very much akin to a suggestion that might have been made in times past to call in Dick Turpin or Jonathan Wild to confer about the condition of the roads on which they were to rob the rich but unsuspecting traveler. It is also very much like asking advice from Ferdinand Ward, or men of his kind, in regard to strengthening the laws for the punishment of embezzlement. Davenport could give just about as good advice concerning the purity in elections as could the late Mr. Tweed, and not quite so valuable as that which could be procured from "Blocks-of-five" Dudley or from his fellow-worker, Mr. QUAY.

Nothing could more emphatically indicate the condition of sentiment in the Republican party than such an announcement as this. Nothing could show more pertinently the fallacy of any and all of the pretensions put forward that the purity of the ballot is the first consideration with the Republicans in the Fifty-first Congress. While it shows the condition of shamelessness which has been reached, it also shows their desperation that such a man should be chosen as the adviser of a caucus committee.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not discuss the method of drawing this bill, its authorship, or anything of that character, nor shall I engage in any discussion in regard to the character of John I. Davenport or any other supervisor. I simply propose to leave the Commercial Advertiser of New York with the gentleman from Georgia to combat with the testimony of the late S. S. Cox and with the further testimony of Secretary Whitney in regard to the work of that special supervisor.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROWELL. I have but five minutes and if I answer many questions it will take up all the time.

Mr. CRISP. I only want to know if Davenport did not in fact draw this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. I want to say a word about the amendment proposed. Every lawyer and every right-thinking man desires that the courts should be assisted by upright and intelligent juries. That the present system is not calculated to secure fair and impartial juries the reading of the language of the law ought to convince every one, because it proposes that there are to be two men of opposite political parties to select the juries. Necessarily every man selected under that system feels that he goes to the jury box as the representative of his political party.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does not that follow if one politician selects them as well as if two do?

Mr. ROWELL. I will answer that in a moment. There are always coming before the courts questions which involve partisanship, growing out of the elections and out of a good many other circumstances that get into the courts. The operation of the present law since 1879 has demonstrated, and I think it is the observation of all lawyers practicing in the United States courts, that where these questions have arisen this law has worked badly and produced hang juries, that the juries have divided upon party lines and have failed to secure what ought to be secured in the jury box.

Mr. STOCKDALE. By that you mean conviction.

Mr. ROWELL. Now, this amendment is to strike out—

Mr. OATES. I would like to ask the gentleman what proof he has of the statement he has made with reference to the workings of the jury system.

Mr. ROWELL. In five minutes I would be unable to read the accounts that have come from the various courts or to bring up the hundreds of instances of absolute party division, one party against the other, in cases of that kind. But the history of the courts in the last ten years is literally full of the evidence of the fact which I am speaking about. Now, it is proposed to strike out of the present law that there shall be a commissioner of opposite party politics from the clerk. It simply makes the clerk the special confidential secretary of the court.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, right there will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Would not it be better to make him of the opposite political party?

Mr. ROWELL. Then you would accomplish just what I would seek to overcome.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is, you wish to put it all in your own party.

Mr. ROWELL. You will have the clerk—the confidential clerk of the court—advising with the court, always desiring to have a good jury [derisive laughter on the Democratic side], selecting men from all over his district without reference to party affiliations, but with reference to having a successful term of the court with an intelligent and impartial jury. The different States have different laws with reference to the securing of juries, and so it will be impossible to pass one law which should conform to the laws of the various States and so secure the juries in all the States in the same way that the States secure the juries. The various States have provided various forms for drawing juries, which are impossible of execution so far as the United States courts are concerned. So far as I am personally concerned I only desire to get partisanship out of the jury, to make the court and its jury impartial, and to make the jury intelligent and well qualified for the discharge of its duties.

Mr. YODER. And Republican.

Mr. LODGE. I would like to know how much time there is remaining?

The SPEAKER. There are five minutes at the disposal of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

[Mr. MASON withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW].

Mr. HEMPHILL. Before we go to that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that there have been some requests upon this side for further general debate, without offering any amendments upon this bill, and if it be entirely satisfactory to gentlemen on the other side I would ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess after this vote shall have been taken until 8 o'clock and that the evening session be devoted to general debate. Let it be that we take a recess at 5 o'clock.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And that the debate shall go on in the evening session under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, general debate. I suppose I had better make a motion that after we shall have finished the vote the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. LODGE. I hope if there is any desire on the other side of the House for any gentleman to take part in general debate there will be no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina, it being understood that there will be no amendments offered or voted upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be half past 5.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will make the request after the vote is taken.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCKALEW. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 134, not voting 54; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, the recapitulation of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, but for the fact that I am paired I would vote "ay."

Mr. CLUNIE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANDALL]. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to section 2 of the bill the following: "Provided, That the said chief supervisor of elections shall lay before the circuit court when convened, as required in the subsequent section of this act, all such applications so received by him, and thereupon said court shall fix a day for the consideration of the matters set forth in such application or applications, giving at least ten days' notice therefor in two newspapers of the largest circulation published at the place where said court is held, in which notice the court shall request all persons who may desire to be heard as to the necessity for granting such application or applications to be and appear at the time and place fixed in such notice. On the day appointed for such hearing said court shall hear the testimony of such witnesses as may be offered in favor of the granting of such application or applications, and also such testimony as may be offered against the granting thereof, and also the arguments of counsel on either side of the question; and if upon such hearing the court shall be of the opinion that a free and fair registration and election will not be held at the times and the places mentioned in such application or applications, and a true and honest count of the votes cast thereat will not be made and returned under the laws of the State applicable to such election, and that there is necessity for Federal supervision thereof, as provided in this act, then and in that event said court shall grant such application or applications as to the election mentioned therein, and proceed as hereinafter provided. In passing upon such application or applications the judge of the circuit court shall associate with him the judge of the district court of the judicial district in which such election is to be held, and unless both of said judges shall concur in granting such application or applications the same shall be dismissed and no further proceedings shall be taken under this act in reference to the registration or election mentioned therein or in reference to the canvass or return of the votes cast thereat.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I stated a few moments ago that I would renew the proposition for an evening session. Carrying out that statement, I desire now to ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess at 5 o'clock and reconvene at 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be for general debate upon the pending bill, it being understood that no amendments shall be offered and no vote taken.

Mr. McKINLEY. And that the speeches shall be limited to ten minutes each.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to have an understanding with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] as to the time to be allowed for the debate on the amendment which I have just offered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty long and complicated amendment, and I should like to see it in print before I should feel competent to discuss it. I do not feel ready to agree to any limit of time until the amendment is before the House in a more comprehensible form than it is now. If the gentleman from Virginia desires to explain his amendment at this time of course I have no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts agree to take a vote on this amendment at half past 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. LODGE. I do not care to agree to any time being fixed until we have an opportunity to read the amendment in print. It seems to me to alter the entire machinery of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, as this bill now stands, section 2 provides that one hundred citizens and voters in a city of 20,000 inhabitants, or in a Congressional district, where it is desired to put the machinery of this bill into operation may petition for that purpose; and in any part of a district, to wit, a county or a parish, fifty persons may petition in the same way. If such petition is filed with the chief supervisor he has no discretion in the matter, but is obliged to grant the application and set the machinery of this legislation in operation. The bill provides no means of revising the names upon such a petition as to whether they are those of citizens or voters, but when the petition is presented to the chief supervisor his discretion is gone and this legislation must be put into operation within the district.

Now, it is well known to every one here that in any district of the United States, in any town or village, you can obtain in fifteen or twenty minutes fifty or one hundred names to set this machinery in motion. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] suggests to me, there will be enough persons looking for offices under the bill at $5 a day to have the machinery set in motion for their benefit, not for the purpose of securing a fair election, but for the purpose of getting their hands into the Treasury of the United States.

This amendment simply provides that before any such application shall be granted the petition shall be submitted to the United States court that appoints the chief supervisor, and the court, upon ten days' notice, shall fix a day when all persons who so desire may be heard as to the propriety and necessity of setting the machinery of this law in operation within that district; and if the court, after hearing the parties who may appear, is of opinion that a fair and honest election can not be had otherwise, the application will be granted and the machinery of this law set in motion.

Mr. MCOMAS. If the proceeding contemplated in the amendment is to be had upon ten days' notice, and after that testimony and argument are to be heard, might not the determination of the court be extended beyond the time for the registration or the election?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what the gentlemen want to reach.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; the court can regulate that matter as it regulates the hearing of evidence and argument in other cases. I assume that in such a case as this the court will do what is ordinarily done in other cases: limit the time for the taking of testimony and the hearing of the arguments of counsel. The inquiry of the gentleman from Maryland assumes that the court will enter into a conspiracy with persons outside for the purpose of instituting proceedings which will run this matter beyond the time for the election. I have no such apprehension.

Mr. MCOMAS. May not such a thing happen, although the court acts in perfectly good faith?

Mr. SPRINGER. The chief supervisor can institute this proceeding before the court at any time he sees fit, and the application can be determined upon in time to set the machinery of the law in operation before the election. I assume that the judges of the United States courts, with two or three exceptions, will be Republicans. I assume that when the hearing is had the court will hear those in favor of the petition for so many hours and those opposed for so many hours, and will then decide the case. I assume that the proceeding will be conducted in good faith, as the law intends it should be.

Mr. FRANK. Does the gentleman believe that this power can be vested under the Constitution in a United States court? Is there no doubt about it in his mind?

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. I might, replying in Yankee fashion, ask him whether he believes this power can be vested in fifty irresponsible citizens?

Mr. FRANK. That is quite a different question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TUCKER. I yield the gentleman from Illinois three minutes more.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANK] suggests that this is a dangerous or perhaps a doubtful power.

Mr. FRANK. I simply inquired whether the gentleman, after listening to the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], thought it clear that such a power could be vested in the judiciary of the United States under the Constitution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under this bill the judge appoints the chief supervisor—

Mr. FRANK. There is express constitutional authority for that.

Mr. SPRINGER. The judge appoints the chief supervisor; and the bill provides that fifty citizens may come before this officer with their petition, which he is to grant. Now if you can confer this power on the chief supervisor you certainly can confer it on a judge of the United States.

Mr. FRANK. The gentleman is mistaken. The judge does not appoint the chief supervisor; it is the court, and under the Constitution—

Mr. SPRINGER. That is a mere play upon words.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; it has been held that there is a difference between the judge and the court.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, that is technical; for all practical purposes the judge is the court and the court is the judge.

Mr. FRANK. The court is an open tribunal—

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, I understand all that. This is merely a play upon words. I am not here for any such purpose. I want to reach the substance of things; and I submit that the machinery of this legislation ought not to be put in force in any Congressional district of the United States on the petition of fifty or one hundred irresponsible persons.

It ought not to be put in operation unless there is reasonable ground for the belief that a fair election can not be had without it under the laws of the State. I have heard scarcely a gentleman on the other side of the House speak on this question who has not intimated or expressly stated that such a provision was not needed in his district. I believe that every gentleman on that side, if called on now to answer to the question, would get up and say that in his district there would be a fair, honest, and free election under the laws of the State and that there is no need for such a provision as this. And yet, Mr. Speaker, in every district throughout this country this election machinery may be put in force, an unlimited number of deputy marshals, three, four, or five thousand supervisors in your districts, appointed, and the public purse called upon to pay all of the demands of a political party for the purpose of controlling the elections and maintaining its own power.

There is no limit to the expense or to the number of persons who may be employed, and the whole of this vast machinery can be put in operation by the parties interested in getting the offices. What are the provisions in that respect as to compensation? The deputy marshals may be employed for eight days and get $5 a day; that is, $40 for each one employed, and the number is not limited. They can be employed ad libitum, and all that vast machinery, with its attendant expense, is set in motion by the petition of twelve, fifty, or a hundred irresponsible citizens. If gentlemen want the law enforced where it is needed, then adopt this amendment and keep it from being enforced where it is not needed, merely to satisfy the greed for office of a few men in order to get paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TUCKER. If no gentleman on the other side desires to be heard at this time I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to deprive the bill as far as possible of its partisan character and leave the question to a court to be decided upon evidence to be adduced on both sides whether or not it is necessary to put into operation the partisan machinery provided for.

No gentleman can deny that the bill is partisan in every line, and especially in these provisions relating to the appointment of supervisors, who are to be judges of election, and of deputy marshals. If it shall become a law and is put into operation everywhere, nearly every chief supervisor will be a Republican.

Each of these chief supervisors has the appointment or the naming in the first instance of every supervisor who is to act as a judge at the polls, be he Democrat or Republican. A court has no power to appoint any supervisor whatever except he shall have been recommended by the chief supervisor. This chief supervisor will of course have appointed in the first place two partisan Republicans to one Democrat, and when he comes to appoint the one Democrat he will select one who is subservient; and in nine cases out of ten, and experience has demonstrated the fact, he will select one who will vote the Republican ticket.

There was, as I said here yesterday, some years ago a contest in this House between my friend from Alabama [General WHEELER] and Mr. Lowe. Mr. WHEELER was the candidate of the Democracy and Mr. Lowe was supported by the Republicans. Lowe contested WHEELER's election. In that contest every single supervisor who had been appointed to represent the Democrats swore that he had voted for Mr. Lowe. What is the result of having Republicans select Democratic or so-called Democratic election officers? So it will be, Mr. Speaker, every time; and so it will be with the appointment of deputy marshals. Every marshal in the United States to-day is a Republican, I believe, and these Republican marshals will have the appointment of deputy marshals, Democratic or Republican, and we may reasonably infer that they will be all of the one party.

Mr. OATES. No; the chief supervisor can name one-third of them.

Mr. ROWELL. Let me ask the gentleman what authority there is in this bill for the appointment of deputy marshals other than is provided by the existing law.

Mr. HERBERT. I can not answer that now. The chief supervisor can name one-third of the deputy marshals, it is true, but it comes to the same thing. This chief supervisor, as I have already said, will be a Republican, the marshal will be a Republican, and between that Republican chief supervisor and that Republican marshal they are to decide upon every Democrat and every Republican that is to be chosen as a deputy marshal, and the number is without limit.

I am glad my friend from Illinois has called my attention by his question to the statement he made the other day, which shows that he did not then, if he does now, understand the provisions of this bill. He stated then that there was a limit to the number of deputy marshals.

Mr. ROWELL. I stated that there was no provision in this bill that created any other deputy marshals than were provided under the existing law.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, I will show you that there is. Under section 20 of the bill I find this provision:

The number of special deputy marshals who may, under any provision of law, be appointed for election purposes, shall be determined from time to time at conferences between the marshal and the chief supervisor of elections, etc.

Mr. ROWELL. That is it, "under any provision of law." And the only provision of law for deputy marshals at elections is in cities of 20,000 inhabitants and upwards.

Mr. HERBERT. Other provisions of law may determine the manner and purpose, but the words I have quoted give the marshal and chief supervisor the power expressly to determine the number. I have not time to discuss it now, but it is perfectly clear that the number of deputy marshals "shall be determined at conferences between" these Republican officers, and that that number is without limit.

Mr. MCADOO. Will my friend from Alabama allow a suggestion?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. MCADOO. Allowing one hundred and thirty precincts to each district, and that is a sufficiently low number, if this law is applied all over the United States, with three supervisors and three marshals at each, the officials that will be appointed under this law, you have as a total a grand army of 257,400 men, or five times the number of enlisted men in the Army and Navy of the United States combined. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; and not only that, but this bill provides that this appropriation to pay that vast number of supervisors and deputy marshals shall be permanent and indefinite.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And special.

Mr. HERBERT. And that, whenever the chiefsupervisor shall make a requisition upon the Attorney-General, the Attorney-General shall make demand of the Secretary of the Treasury and have placed to the credit of the chief supervisor whatever amount may be determined upon as necessary to conduct the canvass in that district. It may be one hundred, it may be two hundred, it may be five hundred thousand dollars. There is no limitation whatever.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And if the estimate is not large enough the chief supervisor can make a new estimate.

Mr. HERBERT. The chiefsupervisor can make a new estimate and the Treasury is absolutely at his command. The doors are thrown wide open. Whatever amount of money is considered necessary to carry a district the chief supervisor may draw upon the Treasury for. Now, who was it that drew such a bill as this? There is so much craft in its construction that it has become a material question who did draw this bill. It has been charged that John Davenport drew it, and I give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] time, in my time, to answer the question whether John Davenport's hand is not somewhere in this bill.

Mr. TRACEY. Why, he is outside now, watching the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. He is here as a whipper-in.

Mr. HERBERT. There is no answer to my question. There was no answer when my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] made the same charge.

Mr. ROWELL. I did not hear your question.

Mr. HERBERT. My question is whether Mr. John Davenport, of New York, had not a part in the drawing of this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. That is not a proper question to be asked on the floor of the House of Representatives. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Suppose he did draw it, what does that amount to?

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] seems to think that he is not called upon to criminate himself.

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir; I did not say any such thing. The gentleman from Illinois never was called upon to plead whether he was a criminal or not.

Mr. HERBERT. No man is compelled to criminate himself, and so I will not press my question any further.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me a question? Does not the bill speak for itself, no matter who drew it?

Mr. HERBERT. Nobody but a professional election official drew this bill with all these provisions in it. Here is one that has escaped the attention of the House up to this time, in this same section, section 20:

And it is further made the duty of the special deputy marshals, and each of them is hereby required, if directed by the chief supervisor of elections, to take charge of such returns of the canvass of the votes found in any box which under existing law the chief supervisor may require to be made to him by the supervisors of election as rapidly as the canvass of each box is completed and the returns thereof are made out and signed by the supervisors, and to at once, in such manner and at such place as the chief supervisor shall direct, safely deliver to him all such returns so intrusted to their care and custody.

Think of that!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield to the gentleman the remaining three minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. The deputy is to take charge of the returns as soon as they are made out and convey them to the chief supervisor just as rapidly as the canvass of each box is completed. That expression in the law shows that it was gotten up by a professional who knew more about managing elections than he did about legal phraseology. The deputy is to take charge of those returns and as rapidly as possible return them to the chief supervisor. What for? What can be the purpose of hurrying these returns as fast as possible to this particular officer? If Mr. Davenport happened to be the supervisor, as he would be in the city of New York, for that is his business, then, as Mr. Davenport got in the returns, he would fully understand the situation. You are paying to keep him posted. He would always be able to know just how many votes his candidate needed at the boxes that had not been heard from.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that he had approved and signed acts and a joint resolution of the following titles:

- An act (H. R. 1474) for the relief of George W. Madden;
 - An act (H. R. 7217) to amend "An act for the erection of an appraisers' warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes;"
 - An act (H. R. 1110) granting a pension to William J. Bryan;
 - An act (H. R. 1405) granting a pension to Betsy E. Cole;
 - An act (H. R. 1783) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice A. Cunningham;
 - An act (H. R. 3458) granting a pension to Ann Ruffner;
 - An act (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;
 - An act (H. R. 7160) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes;
 - An act (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891;
 - An act (H. R. 8909) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes;
 - An act (H. R. 578) in relation to oaths in pension and other cases; and
- A joint resolution (H. Res. 185) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate further insisted on its amendments numbered 2, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, asked a further conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CORKRELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1546) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sallie H. Michler, widow of the late Bvt. Brig. Gen. Nathaniel Michler, United States Army; and the bill (S. 2076) granting an increase of pension to John E. Walton.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1741) granting an increase of pension to James H. Showalter, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. PADDOCK, Mr. MOODY, and Mr. FAULKNER conferees on the part of the Senate.

BEHRING SEA CONTROVERSY.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the consent of the House for the present consideration of a resolution calling for information from the State Department, which the Committee on Foreign Affairs have been desirous for some time to get, and which I am to-day advised that we can have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks by unanimous consent to offer the following resolution, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the House with the correspondence between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain, touching the subjects in dispute in the Behring Sea, since March 4, 1889.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TITLE TO LANDS, SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate has passed a resolution requesting the return of a certain bill. If there is no objection, the Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 1, 1890.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3430) to confirm the title to certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the bill will be returned, as requested by the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SIMONDS, for ten days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. STIVERS, until Monday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. BAKER, for the remainder of the week, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House stands in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by Mr. PETERS as Speaker pro tempore.

FEDERAL ELECTION BILL.

[Mr. DOCKERY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, it is the most natural thing in the world that the Democracy should oppose this measure. It has ever been the cardinal doctrine of the Democratic party that the perpetuation of the Government in the spirit and form in which it was given to us by its great founders depends upon the preservation of the States in their full strength and integrity.

It is a cherished and time-honored belief of that party that the liberties of the people are so completely in the care and custody of the States that any effort by the Federal Government to make encroachments upon the authority of the States or intermeddle with the individual affairs of the citizen at once excites the gravest apprehension and alarm.

Our people believe that the boundary which separates State and Federal authority is and forever ought to be so plainly marked that there never could arise between them any serious conflict in the execution of the high powers which belong to the two governments. We do not believe that any harm can ever come to the Federal Government from any encroachments by the States upon the rights, powers, and duties of that Government, and we do believe that the greatest dangers which menace the liberties of the people are found in the tendency on the part of the United States Government to make aggressions upon the powers and authority, the rights and duties of the States.

The party which now dominates every branch of the Federal Government and many of the State governments is engaged in a desperate effort to change the form of the Government, and they zealously and unrelentingly push every scheme, even to the very verge of popular indignation and revolt, which tends in any manner to strengthen Federal power and weaken that of the States.

Tariff laws, subsidies, charities, and every character of class legislation in the interest of the few at the expense of the many are but so many agencies now at work in behalf of centralization.

But there are no methods more dangerous in these "piping times of peace" to the liberties of the people and none more potent than the insidious effort by this bill to intermingle the powers, duties, and authority of Federal and State officials in the execution of a partisan enactment devised by a partisan majority in Congress for partisan purposes.

Then, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that the Democracy should oppose the passage of such a bill as that now under discussion? Its scope and purpose is to take out of the hands of the people, where it has rested for one hundred years, the entire machinery of Federal elections and place it in the control of Federal partisan officials, to the end that the elections may be conducted in the interest and for the use and benefit of the Republican party. This must be the judgment of any unbiased man who will seriously consider the entire situation.

The friends of this measure say they want honest elections, they want a free ballot and a fair count; that they believe the humblest as well as the highest citizen in the land should have the right to cast his vote as he pleases, coupled with the right to have that vote counted as he cast it.

Day in and day out since this discussion began this has been the burden of your song. You direct this talk to the Democratic side of the House, you shake your fists at us and look fierce as though you thought all the rascality and fraud and corruption in elections were concentrated in a few districts represented by gentlemen from the South on this side of the Chamber.

We know you do not believe these things. We know you indulge in this abuse and misrepresentation for the purpose of stirring up sectional strife and subverting party ends. You impugn our motives in opposing this bill and continually proclaim to the country that if our elections were fairly and honestly conducted we would not fear the light and would not oppose an honest effort to secure an election law under which absolute purity of the ballot-box would be attained.

When we assure the advocates of this bill that we are as much interested in preserving the purity of the ballot as any people; that the people are abundantly capable of holding and conducting elections for members of Congress as they have done for a hundred years under regulations prescribed by the States without Federal supervision or interference we are met with the lofty, self-satisfied declaration that our opposition to this iniquitous measure proves conclusively our opposition to all honest elections and all free government.

We insist that the people are capable of managing their own affairs; that they have shown the highest capacity for self-government in building up and preserving and administering the State governments which are freighted with the liberty of the citizen, together with all the delicate rights, privileges, and immunities which belong to the individual separately and as an integral part of the political organism of the States.

We contend that the people have from the beginning of the Government down to this moment discharged with incomparable excellence and fidelity in war and in peace the duties which belong to them as members of the great Commonwealths composing this Union. And yet this bill proceeds upon the theory that they have become so thoroughly and universally debauched that they can not be trusted to hold and conduct an election for members of Congress, and that the Federal Government must provide an innumerable host, so to speak, of partisan Federal officials, responsible to no one except as partisans to the party in power, at an expense of some twelve million dollars, to "guard, scrutinize, and supervise" them in the performance of a duty to which they have been accustomed for a century.

It is reasonable to suppose that fraud does more or less enter into the management of elections. It is impossible to eliminate fraud from all human transactions. Still, the advocates of the bill contend that if we will only give them this law they will everlastingly drive from the face of the earth every vestige of fraud and corruption. They set up a standard, or profess to do so at least, utterly beyond the reach of mortals. Men are not angels.

Mr. ROWELL. We will make them angels.

Mr. KILGORE. When you do you will no longer need any human code for their government.

Why, Mr. Speaker, when we remember that the elections are held in more than fifty thousand precincts in the Union by more than two hundred thousand officials, that nearly twelve million men deposit their votes with these officials, who keep a complete record of the transaction, numbering and counting each ballot; when we remember that this is all done in one day, in the midst of a fierce partisan contest between parties nearly evenly matched in numbers, each striving and contending in this unexampled and stupendous struggle to secure the advantage over the other, it is a matter of profound astonishment that there is so little fraud and wrong perpetrated and that there are so few outrages attending this wonderful battle of the ballot.

No other human transaction involving so many people of conflicting views, employing such vast machinery, and performing such an unmeasured amount of labor has ever had so little dishonesty and unfairness to mar its beauty and excellence.

It is insisted, Mr. Speaker, that this measure is intended to be strictly non-partisan, that it is national in its scope and purpose, having in view one single object, free and fair elections, at which every citizen can be afforded the unhindered right to cast his ballot at the dictate of his own judgment, subject to no control but that of his own sovereign will.

These are lofty and patriotic views of the question, and it may be that the advocates of the bill entertain none other; that their motives in urging the enactment of this measure into a law may be as pure and as patriotic as their professions. But when I consider the facility with which the Republican party overlooks the simple rule of meum et tuum, when I reflect on the readiness with which it will on very meager testimony deport a Democratic member of this House and import a Republican free of duty, the duty of being elected by the people; when I stop to think of the exceeding handiness of that party in robbing the nation of the Presidency or a State of its Senators, I confess that I am skeptical as to the patriotic purposes of that party in urging the passage of this extraordinary measure.

But, Mr. Speaker, as to the purity of the intentions of the advocates of this bill, assuming that they are absolutely unsullied, still it will be utterly impossible to administer the law on any theory other than that it is partisan and sectional in its character, and every man called on to execute the law will so interpret the statute and will regulate his conduct in strict accordance with that construction.

We ought to be able to form some conclusion as to the purpose and meaning of the majority in urging the passage of this bill by the circumstances attending its preparation, the manner of the agitation which preceded its report by the committee, and the arguments and opinions of its champions as heard in this Hall, and by the face of the measure itself.

The question of a Federal election law has been the subject of almost constant discussion by leading Republicans during the last twelve or eighteen months in papers, magazines, and public addresses. The necessity for such a law has been urged in season and out of season. The Speaker of this House, now at the front as the leader—distinguished leader—of his party, is credited with saying, in a public address recently delivered, that "we must have our own elections, our own counting, and our own certification." He is certainly not yet prepared to say, as did Louis XIV, "I am the state," and he was certainly not prepared yet to say, "The Republican party is the Government."

Hence we must conclude that the declaration with which he is credited applied to that party and simply indicated its purpose and its duty in that regard. And all this contention and agitation grows out of the idea and is founded on the theory that there are fraudulent elections in the South. The proof relied on to establish this theory is that the South refuses to send a whole drove of Republicans to Congress.

Then the contested-election cases in this Congress have been a most fruitful source from which the opposition have drawn large supplies of capital used in manufacturing sentiment for an election law. The various members of the Committee on Elections on the majority side of the House have made speeches in favor of this bill, and in doing so have argued some contested-election cases, and from that standpoint and their view of the particular case they conclude that there is an imperative necessity upon Congress to provide an election law in harmony with their theory of these cases.

It may be that corrupt and perjured witnesses supply the testimony in such cases. It may be that the evidence was taken ex parte and not in accordance with any rule or regulation provided for such purposes, but in violation of all such rules and regulations. It may be that the case made by the Republican contestant was completely overthrown by competent and proper evidence taken under the regulations provided in such cases, still a partisan majority proceed on the assumption that the case is made out beyond all shadow of a doubt, and it is made the foundation for the enactment of an outrageous election law.

They seem to overlook the fact that each House of Congress is the sole judge of the election returns, and qualifications of its own members, and that under this provision of the Constitution Congress has been able to apply the remedy wherever any wrong has been perpetrated; and, indeed, there is a very strong suspicion that during the present session the House and Senate, too, have applied the remedy where there was no wrong, and in a partisan spirit and for partisan purposes, on insufficient proof, have turned out Democrats and seated Republicans.

If Congress can on a contest inquire into the election, returns, and qualification of its own members, why pass this bill? If a fair and free election in the South is what you want and all you want, there is no necessity for this far-reaching and dangerous measure. This House has full power to correct any evil that may exist, and it is not slow to make the correction.

The history of the election contests in this Congress demonstrate that the charge of fraud against the people of the South is without foundation. There were seventeen contests from the South, which includes one hundred and twenty-two Congressional districts in all. Two from West Virginia were not affected by the usual charge of the suppression of the negro vote. There are hence fifteen contests based on that charge. In six of those cases the House has turned out the Democrat and seated the Republican contestant, thus correcting the wrong, if any was committed.

In three of these cases, one from Alabama, one from Virginia, and one from Mississippi, the committee found for the Democratic contestant, after full and thorough investigation of all the charges of fraud and suppression of votes. There were five contests brought by Republicans from Mississippi; all, it is generally understood, were inspired by the Republican national committee. The Republican Committee on Elections found for the Democratic contestant in one case, two have been abandoned by the Republican contestants, and it is firmly believed that the Republican contestants in the other two cases have no merit whatever to back them. If wrongs and outrages are perpetrated it is in the power of this House to correct such wrong and punish the fraud in a contention for a seat improperly held here.

But suppose for a moment that all the charges of fraud in elections made against the people of the South were true, and suppose it was not in the power of the House to apply the correction, then I assert that the enactment of this measure and its administration according to its spirit and purpose would in the long run, and not a very long run at that, be productive of infinitely more and greater evils than can possibly flow from the abuses which you say exist. Public sentiment, not partisan legislation and party abuse, must correct the wrong, if any there be.

But the fact that Congress has full authority now to deal with abuses said by the Republican party to exist so flagrantly in many districts in the South does not seem to satisfy that party. It goes further in this bill. It insists that the partisan officials who hold their positions from partisan judges shall be clothed with the power to organize the whole system of naturalization into a compact but complicated political machine and run it in the interest of the dominant party; that they shall have the authority to interfere with the right of suffrage as regulated and conferred by the States, and to intermeddle with and in a measure annul the regulations which have been provided by the State governments for the conducting of elections from the very beginning of the existence of the States.

The bill goes further than that, and provides in section 32 for the unlimited increase of commissioners, so as to afford a convenient and speedy means for arrest and examination of persons charged with violating this law, for the appointment of a suitable and unlimited number of persons or deputy marshals to arrest such violators of the law, and for the payment to such special deputies the sum of $5 for every person they may so arrest and take before a commissioner in addition to the usual fees allowed by law. It goes further than that and provides in the same section that the President may empower the officers charged with the administration of the law to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States or the militia as may be needed to aid in the enforcement and due execution of the law and to prevent the violation of its many provisions.

In short, under this bill soldiers may be quartered in every town and village in the country and deputy marshals may swarm at every polling place in the Union.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we find by the provisions of this bill that it is utterly inoperative in the greater portion of the Union, a dead-letter on the statute-book. It remains with no single drop of the blood of life in it, without a single spark of vitality.

Now, if a hundred persons under certain circumstances, or fifty under certain other circumstances, should take it into their heads to set up this law—put it in force in a particular Congressional district—or if they should be instructed to do so by the national committee, Republican or Democratic, they can do it by filing a petition asking that it may be done. The petitioners may be the "scum of creation," worthless, vile, ignorant, and wholly irresponsible, and may all reside in one ward or precinct; yet they have full power and authority to put the entire Federal election machinery provided by this bill in motion in any Congressional district in the Union. It may be said that the law will not be applied to any district unless it becomes necessary.

How on the face of the earth are these petitioners or any one else to know in advance that at an approaching election outrages and frauds are going to be perpetrated and therefore it is necessary to put the law in force? These petitioners under the law need have no other qualification except that they are qualified voters and claim to be citizens of the United States; yet on the mere suspicion which they may entertain that there is not going to be a fair election they may compel the application of this law to any district, and on the mere suspicion by the President of the United States, or by some one he may employ, that some of the provisions of the law will be violated or that the due execution of the law will not be enforced at some ensuing election, may multiply indefinitely United States commissioners and deputy marshals, and may fill the land with soldiers.

Still they say this is a national non-partisan measure intended only to secure free, fair, and honest elections. Still, you refused to adopt an amendment to-day making the law applicable to the entire country and take it out of the control of a few ignorant and depraved people in one community. It is the very sublimity of folly to contend that this bill, if it become a law, will not be administered in the interest of the party which dominates the country.

It might be possible for this House to legislate the salt out of the sea or the spots off the sun, but certainly no reasonable man would insist that the administration of this law can be removed from the domain of partisan politics. You by the terms of the law have not only made it possible for it to be run in behalf of the party in power, you have made it convenient to do so. You do more than that by this bill; you have so framed it, in all its parts, that the officials who administer it will feel that it is their duty to use their positions in constraining and enforcing it in such a manner as to perpetuate in power the party which gives them place.

It will not do to say that it can be kept out of politics because its administration is largely under the direction of the courts. You do not in the least improve the condition by uniting this political machinery with the judiciary. You will not elevate nor purify the methods of politics by this unnatural union. But you will succeed in debauching the courts by dragging them into partisan politics and giving them control of partisan elections. Instead of remaining tribunals for the administering of the law and meting out justice for all alike, they will become the tools and agents of party managers, with no higher ambition and no nobler mission than to serve the party in its efforts to retain power.

In Texas in 1873 we had some experience with the judiciary in politics, and that experience was not of a nature to enhance our respect for partisan courts, which find it convenient or even possible to yield subserviently to the interest and influence of a political party. The constitution of Texas, adopted in 1869 by the reconstruction crowd, "provided that all elections should be held at the county seats of the several counties until otherwise provided by law, and the polls should be kept open four days."

The elections were held in accordance with this provision till 1873, when the Legislature passed an election law, which was approved by Governor Davis, which declared that each justice precinct should constitute an election precinct, and that these might be subdivided into other election precincts, and that all elections should be held for one day only. In the fall of 1873 an election was held for State, district, and county officers under this law. Governor Davis was the Republican candidate and Senator Coke the nominee of the Democratic party. It was not disputed that Richard Coke was chosen governor at the election by a large majority, and the returns were so made. Soon after the result was made known one Rodriguez was arrested for illegal voting, at the instance of the defeated Republican candidate for sheriff of Harris County. A writ of habeas corpus was sued out, and the defendant was carried before the supreme court for hearing. The district attorney who represented the State insisted that the proceeding was fictitious and a fraud upon the court and moved that it be dismissed, which the court overruled. The attorney for Rodriguez claimed he ought to be discharged on the ground that the law under which the election at which he voted was held was unconstitutional and void. The supreme court of the State, composed of three Republican judges appointed by a Republican governor, held the law to be in conflict with the constitution, that the election was null and void, and discharged the relator.

The opinion of the court was based on a semicolon which punctuated this clause in the constitution of the State, to wit, "All elections for State, county, and district officers shall be held at the county seats of the several counties until otherwise provided by law; and the polls shall be opened for four days." Now, the court held that the Legislature had the authority to name places at which elections should be held other than the county seats, but that the latter clause of the section was separated from the first clause by a semicolon; that it was a complete and distinct sentence in itself; that it required that the polls be kept open four days, and the law being in conflict with that part of the section it was void, and therefore no valid election had been held.

The court which rendered this opinion has ever since been known as the "semicolon court" in the judicial history of Texas. Under this decision, rendered on a fictitious case by willing judicial tools, Governor Davis and other Republican officers beaten at the election undertook to hold on to their places, and Governor Davis actually appealed to the authorities at Washington to sustain him in his effort to usurp the place of governor of the State. But when the time came for the inauguration Governor Coke was sworn into office, and he proceeded to punctuate the official chapter of that entire dirty crowd. They were kicked out of places which they had dishonored, and which they had attempted to use to bring confusion and ruin to the people whom they had oppressed and plundered for four years. We hope you will excuse us if we suggest that we are distrustful of the judiciary in politics. We have had our experience. We have seen it tried. It will not work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the people of the South, with deep concern and grave apprehension, watch the progress of this measure. They feel that in the near future, if this bill becomes a law, the horrors of reconstruction will be again precipitated upon our unfortunate section. They know that the party which would enact such a law would relentlessly and without scruple administer its drastic and harsh provisions in the most cold-blooded and cruel manner. To satisfy any one who may entertain any doubt as to the partisan purpose of the advocates of the bill, we have only to suggest that every effort is made to place the execution of the law in the hands of the supple tools of the party in power.

That party has provided in this bill for any number of United States commissioners, deputy marshals, and soldiers, to be paid by the people, who can be used, and no one doubts will be employed, not to prevent a violation of the provisions of the law, not to see to its enforcement in the interest of free and fair elections, but to harass, annoy, and intimidate the people, and to control the elections, that the domination of the Republican party may be made perpetual.

No stronger evidence of the partisan purpose of this bill need be produced than is shown by the persistency with which the majority has sought to change the method of selecting juries in the United States court. After the war and up to 1879 many and foul were the abuses which had disgraced the jury system and the jury trials in the Federal courts in the South. In fact these abuses had been so flagrant that it was well understood that juries were organized in the trial of offenses of a political nature so as to secure the conviction of Democrats, however innocent, and the acquittal of Republicans, however guilty.

The law of 1879 changing the manner of selecting juries was enacted to correct the abuses which had crept into the courts. It provided that the jury should be drawn by the clerk of the court, and by a commissioner appointed by the court to be of opposite politics from the clerk. This system has prevailed since that time, and it has been absolutely fair and non-partisan, and has, so far as I have ever heard, given perfect satisfaction to all classes of people who desire that cases in the Federal courts should be tried by a fair and impartial jury. No valid objection can be urged to the law as it now stands, and there is no objection to it except from those who want to pack the courts and juries for the vilest of partisan purposes.

There has been no clamor against the present system which prevails in many of the States. There has been no demand for the repeal of the law; yet the majority of this House who were defeated yesterday in the effort to repeal the present law and place the selection of juries in the hands of partisan clerks of the Federal courts presented and adopted to-day an amendment requiring the circuit judges to convene their courts within thirty days after the passage of this act, and appoint three commissioners to make up the jury lists and draw the juries.

There is nothing in the law to prevent the judge from appointing all of them from the same political party. And nearly all the judges being Republican there can be no doubt in advance as to the politics of at least a majority of the commissioners, if not all of them.

All these things you profess to do in the name of patriotism, in the name of free government, in the interest of honest elections, and that all the people may be assured of a free ballot and a fair count. I ought to say the whole scheme is infamous. I will say it. I will stop right here and say it is infamous. I do not say the commissioners will be partisan or dishonest, but they ought not to be subjected to the temptation nor given the opportunity.

The people of the South feel, indeed they know, that the enactment of this measure will be signalized all over our section by confusion and feuds and bloodshed growing out of trouble between the races. Whatever may be the purpose of the majority in regard to this measure in that respect they must be satisfied from the demonstration in the galleries and about this Capitol that the negro looks upon it as intended by its framers to place him in control of the affairs of the South and her people, and to keep him there, and he expects the Army and Navy to be invoked to secure that result, if need be. He expects to be able to commit any crime he pleases and that he will find immunity from punishment at the hands of partisan courts and partisan juries.

The low and unscrupulous demagogues will seek to control their votes for the Republican party by parading before them this law, passed by a Republican Administration in their interest and to place them in power in the South. Such will be the argument, and it will not require much argument to convince them that such is really the meaning and purpose of the law. The negro is docile, amiable, and harmless if left to himself and subjected to no vicious influence. The course of that race in the South during the war was calculated to win the gratitude of the Southern people. His incredible fidelity to the helpless women and children of the South during that dreadful period has been the subject of just praise and commendation. He was almost his own master, but he was at the same time faithful, industrious, and, in the main, trustworthy.

Race conflicts were unknown in those times. They seldom committed the higher crimes known to the law, and the best and kindest of feeling prevailed between the two races. The explanation can be given in one short line, "They were let alone." Now, the demagogue, the adventurer, the plunderer, the thief are abroad in the land, and one who is denied recognition and employment among decent, respectable people can easily find his way to the confidence of the negro, and the more unscrupulous and depraved he is the greater his success in imposing on the ignorant and unsuspecting people of that race. His influence is evil, and only evil, but he frequently, for a time, exercises absolute control over his victims, whom he uses for the purpose of promoting his political and pecuniary interest.

This bill adds untold complications to the solution of the greatest problem that was ever cast upon any people, and just as they are on the very edge of its solution, at the beginning of an era of harmonious relations between the two races, founded on education and mutual interest, the Republican party, unwilling to see a peaceful settlement of the question, proposes by the most pernicious legislation to encourage the negro to precipitate trouble and conflicts with their white neighbors. There is but one way to solve the race question—a question now effectually employed to justify this extreme and aggressive legislation—and it can be expressed in three short words, "Let us alone."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much gratified that the scope of this discussion has been so wide as it has been. I am glad that at least six days have been set apart for the discussion of one of the most momentous and portentous questions that have faced the American people for the last quarter of a century. I would have been glad if, instead of six days being devoted to the discussion of this question, there could have been six weeks. I believe that we would have been benefited by a discussion of that length, and if a proper and peaceable settlement of this question could be brought about by six months' discussion it would be time well spent.

In my judgment this question, having been discussed for the last twenty years, is as far from a definite and satisfactory settlement as it was when we began it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was very much gratified at the opening of this discussion to learn that our friend from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] made a frank statement of his position upon this question, a statement that I think covers the whole ground, when he said, after an hour's discussion, in winding up his remarks, that the white people of South Carolina were going to govern the State or leave it, and thereupon took a solemn oath that they (meaning the white people) would not leave it.

Mr. Speaker, my heart, in common with other sympathetic hearts on this side of the House, went out to that large and intelligent class of people who live in South Carolina, upon the statement of this question as made by the gentleman, in feeling for the situation that they would have, and soon have, to meet, for if in the course of human events it should come to pass, as in my judgment it will soon come to pass, that the gentleman will have to choose between the alternative of seeing the Republicans of South Carolina, even though colored Republicans, govern in large part that State, or leave the State, and if he should choose to adhere to his decision not to leave, I shall in that event offer him a little consolation, and that is, that if his worst forebodings should come to pass, that the colored Republicans should govern that State, he would still have the proud satisfaction of knowing, upon reflection, that the blood that coursed through the veins of the Calhouns, the Rhetts, the Haynes, and the Hammonds, and the Hamptons, and the Hemphills, perhaps, is still coursing through the veins of the ruling classes in South Carolina.

So, Mr. Speaker, it may be said of all the Southern or extreme Southern States. In my judgment if the worst of his forebodings should come true, and many of those Republicans, colored though they may be, govern those States, and represent them upon this floor, it will be in my judgment a long time before the first families of those States cease to be represented in the government of those States, especially so far as the paternal side of those families is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman stated further that they were born in that country, and their fathers were born there; that their bones lie buried there.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Their fathers' bones. [Laughter.] Mr. KELLEY. Their fathers' bones lie buried there. Mr. Speaker, speaking for those colored Republicans in South Carolina, I wish to remind the gentleman that they were also born there, their fathers were born there, and the bones of their fathers lie buried there also; and judging from the many shades of many of the people that I have seen among South Carolina Republicans, and judging from the many shades that you may now behold of these colored men and women whom you and I meet in traveling, I can say that not only the bones of their fathers lie buried there, and not only were they born there, but in very many cases the fathers of the white Democrats were also the fathers of the colored Republicans.

Mr. Speaker, I have often been instructed and amused in hearing discussions from a Southern standpoint not only in public, but in a private way, having many times listened to and heard an eloquent discourse of many Southern gentlemen dwelling upon the importance of keeping the Caucasian race pure by legislating in a way that would prevent the intermarriage of the races, and at the same time carefully concealing or trying to conceal from me the fact that they themselves were the fathers of many illegitimate mulatto children, and perhaps at the same time keeping numerous negro concubines. From this standpoint, Mr. Speaker, we are instructed that the white people of South Carolina must govern that State or leave it, and with that portentous statement they would leave you to suppose what they would do under the circumstances.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the gentleman from South Carolina and other gentlemen that these people that he refers to, the Republicans, and colored Republicans though they may be, are not cowards. They inherit some of the spirit of their brethren. They inherit the same spirit of bravery that their white brothers and half-brothers inherit; and I wish to inform the gentleman further that more than 200,000 of these people have already borne arms in support of the honor and the glory of our flag, and for the purpose of securing their own freedom, and they know how to use arms.

Mr. Speaker, with all the prejudice that existed against their being employed as soldiers in the Union armies during the late war, a prejudice that came near exciting mutiny at times on the part of white Union troops, a prejudice that pervaded the regulars and the volunteers, and the civilian as well, a prejudice entertained and inflamed by the Democracy everywhere, a prejudice that caused the Confederacy to raise against them the black flag and no quarter, a prejudice and hatred that absolutely insured the butchery of every colored soldier that surrendered to the Confederate armies—in spite of all these things the 200,000 colored soldiers of the Union Army fought their way to recognition and renown.

In every one of the many battles in which they were engaged they always did their part well, and whether at Baton Rouge, Petersburg, Poison Springs, or Fort Fisher, judging from the list of killed and wounded, the colored soldiers did their full share of the fighting and dying, and this to save from defeat, destruction, and disgrace the flag and country their white fathers and half-brothers were fighting to destroy. Mr. Speaker, in searching the records of the War Department, I find among the regiments that are placed at the top of the column as having lost the most men killed in any one action the First Kansas colored; only two regiments above it, one the Fifth New York, the other the Fifteenth New Jersey.

In view of these figures and these facts, I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will pause and consider, and before he attempts to execute his implied threat to nullify the Declaration of Independence, as well as the Constitution and laws of the United States, I beg of him to reflect that South Carolina is to-day a political volcano, the crater of which is liable any day or night to belch forth the lurid flames of fratricidal war. In that event Hamburg, Ellenton, Barnwell, Jesup, De Kalb, Vicksburg, Hazlehurst, Danville, and scores of other places where butcheries, massacres, and other outrages and indignities have been perpetrated on Republicans, white and black, in South Carolina, Mississippi, and other Southern States will be remembered and avenged.

If the political party that perpetrated these crimes against life, liberty, civilization, and humanity, and the party that encouraged and indorsed these crimes can escape the penalty now, by implicitly obeying all the laws of the United States in the future, it will be remarkably lucky. A further attempt to nullify these laws, or to nullify this bill if it becomes a law, as indicated by gentlemen on the other side of this House, will surely bring on a conflict in this country that will not cease until every drop of blood shed in these murderous outrages that have been for twenty-five years perpetrated on Republicans in places all over the South shall have been repaid by another shed by the sword; and in that event we can only say, in the language of a very ancient philosopher, whose words, in the midst of the agony of the great conflict for liberty and union, were reentered by Abraham Lincoln in his second inaugural address, when he said:

The judgments of the Lord are pure and righteous altogether.

Mr. Speaker, should such a conflict come the penalties would not be confined to the political party that perpetrated and encouraged these crimes, but the party that has had the power and has failed to protect the citizens of the nation against these assassins and murderers would also suffer; in fact, we would be made to realize that nations, no more than individuals, can escape the penalties of wrong acts, and there are wrongs of omission as well as of commission. It has been said that "Liberty is a plant of slow growth." While this is true in the main, there are exceptions to its truth. The exceptions come when conflict comes, as was the case in the war of the Revolution and in the late war for freedom and union, in the latter of which, at a fearful cost of life and blood and treasure, liberty made greater strides in advance in four years than she had made before in a century.

Should the existing conflict between republican government and Southern oligarchy culminate in a conflict of arms, blood would flow and flow and flow freely, but better rivers of it should flow and liberty survive than that the conditions that have existed in many places in the South for a quarter of a century should remain. More Republican blood has been shed in that time by Democratic assassins in the South than was shed by both armies at the battle of Gettysburgh. Chambers's Encyclopedia, an unpartisan, unprejudiced, unbiased, standard work, a work that is relied on as truth, after the most careful research, places the number of Republicans murdered in the South from the close of the war up to 1875 by the Ku Klux and other Democratic armed organizations at eight thousand. Does any intelligent man doubt that since that time this number has been doubled? I notice that in the later editions of this cyclopedia this chapter of shame and horrors and bloodshed has been left out. Whatever the reason for eradicating this darkest spot in American history out of this book may have been (and you can imagine the reason as well as myself), the fact can not be blotted out, and even after the remedy is applied and liberty's triumph is complete and reigns supreme everywhere under the flag, we may say, "Out, damned spot!" as often as we may, that spot will remain forever the deepest, blackest disgrace of this age.

Will we heed this Macedonian cry for help from the South, that for twenty years has come and gone unheeded, or will we heed it, and make and enact some law that will stop this tyranny, this oppression, this assassination?

Mr. Speaker, I read from the address issued by the State executive committee of the Union Republican party of South Carolina, issued to the world in 1880, the closing words of an address that covers forty-five pages of detailed murderous violence and intimidations practiced on Republicans by Democrats all over the State. The almost despairing closing words are these:

The Republicans of South Carolina, through scenes of violence, bloodshed, and intimidation, have voted on the side of nationality against sectionalism, in favor of human rights against intolerance and oppression. Their rights have been ruthlessly trampled under foot whilst they are powerless to protect themselves from injury. They can only wait with patience to see whether the Government of the United States is alike powerless to redress these wrongs and to render impossible in the future similar attempts to destroy its peace by wholesale and systematic pollution of the ballot-box.

Mr. Speaker, these are the methods by which the 50,000 Republican majority of South Carolina in 1880 was made to show a large Democratic majority for Hancock. In view of these things and these facts is it in order now to pass a Federal election law? And as the gentleman from South Carolina has seen fit to introduce Ex-Governor Chamberlin as a witness as to the status of South Carolina, I desire also to offer an extract from a letter written July 22, 1876, while he was governor of South Carolina, to General Grant, who was then President of the United States. Said he:

But the Hamburg massacre has produced another effect. It has, as a matter of fact, caused a firm belief on the part of most Republicans here that this affair at Hamburg is only the beginning of a series of similar race and party collisions in our State, the deliberate aim of which is believed by them to be the political subjugation and control of the State. They see, therefore, in this event, what foreshadows a campaign conducted on the Mississippi plan.

In the light of subsequent events, who can say his fears were not well founded, and in the light of the same events who can say there is no need of a Federal election law? But as General Grant has been represented, falsely I think, by the other side as expressing his belief that all was lovely and that peace and harmony prevailed in the Southern States, I desire to read from his letter of July 26, 1876, to Governor Chamberlin, in reply to the letter above quoted. Said he:

The scene at Hamburg, as cruel, blood-thirsty, wanton, unprovoked, and as uncalled for as it was, is only a repetition of the course that has been pursued in other Southern States within the last few years, notably in Mississippi and Louisiana. Mississippi is governed to-day by officials chosen by fraud and violence, such as would scarcely be accredited to savages, much less to a civilized, christian people. How long these things are to continue, or what is to be the final remedy, the Great Ruler of the Universe only knows. But—

Said he—

I have an abiding faith that the remedy will come, and come speedily, and earnestly hope that it will come peacefully.

Mr. Speaker, were General Grant here to-day to hear the declaration of the gentleman from South Carolina and to hear that declaration applauded by every Democrat on this floor, I fear his hopes for a peaceful settlement would speedily vanish. Sixteen years have passed since that letter by Grant was written; the words therein penned referring to the government of Mississippi by fraud and violence would be true if written to-day. There has not been a day since they were penned that it had not been true if written of South Carolina and of some other Southern States.

I fear this bill, should it become a law, will not be a remedy, but it may be a step, even though it be a blunder, that will finally bring the crisis that will surely bring the remedy, but if the applauded declaration and oath of the gentleman from South Carolina are to be adhered to, the remedy will not come peaceably. If that declaration is to be adhered to, this bill, should it become a law, would only have the same effect to advance liberty that the fugitive-slave law had in advancing slavery.

One year after General Grant penned the above-quoted words Judge Chisholm and his son and daughter, and Gilmer, and McLellan, and many other Republicans in Mississippi went down in death by a Democratic mob, because they were in favor of free speech and a free ballot. Seven years after it was penned brave, glorious Print Mathews and many other Republicans in Mississippi went down by Democratic shotguns in the hands of other Democrats for the same cause. Less than a year ago the Republican State ticket in Mississippi was withdrawn from the field, in order, as proclaimed by the Republican committee of the State, to prevent bloodshed and to save the lives of Republicans from being taken by Democratic assassins who control the government of that State.

Does some one ask, why do not these Republicans in Mississippi appeal to the State government for protection? In answer, I quote again the words penned by General Grant, when he said:

Mississippi is governed to-day by officials chosen through fraud and violence, such as would scarcely be accredited to savages.

Why does not the lamb appeal to the lion for protection?

In the light of these facts I ask again: Do the people in these States need any protection at elections? Do they not need a Federal election law, especially in view of the portentous vow and oath registered here by the gentleman from South Carolina?

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a suggestion of this kind coming from a gentleman living in a State where a very large majority of the people are of the class that he wishes to keep down and that he wishes to domineer over—I say that it is not in good taste, to say the least, for him to discuss the propriety of keeping down by force that class of people.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Does the gentleman say that I used the word "force" in my remarks?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not. I inferred from his remarks that force would be used, and it is the only construction that can be placed on his words and his oath, that was so loudly applauded by your side of the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not be responsible for your inferences.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well; I will take your statement for your intention; but it just amounts to that much in the minds of many people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when you consider the words of the gentleman from South Carolina and the words of the gentlemen upon the other side of this House in all their portentous magnitude and meaning, I have been led to think that history sometimes repeats itself, as the old saying goes; and my thoughts have gone back to a quarter or a third of a century ago, to the time when this question was discussed in another form, and I have thought that at this time the question was nearer a climax than it was two years before it culminated a quarter of a century ago, or more than a quarter of a century ago, in a conflict of arms.

I remember when this question was discussed in Kansas more than a third of a century ago, and I remember that the same means were used in Kansas to repress the Republican vote, or the "Free Soil" vote, that have been used in the Southern States for the last twenty-five years; and I remember the time when by that force and that violence the Democratic party actually thought that they had conquered in Kansas; but soon after that time it was discovered that a mistake had been made, and notwithstanding the Federal power of this Government, as represented by the President of the United States, was against that feeling of the Republicans in Kansas, it was soon developed that the Republicans were not defeated and that the spirit of liberty that inspired all their acts and lent spirit to all their movements was not dead. Soon it was discovered, and the whole country was startled by the fact that one John Brown, from Kansas, towards the headwaters of the Potomac had fired a shot that was heard throughout the United States, and soon that shot was followed by other shots heard throughout the world; and whoever heard that discussion will say that the question warranted the discussion, as it had been based on honesty and integrity and for equal rights, or we would not have resorted to such a scene as we passed through a quarter of a century ago to accomplish what was accomplished.

But, Mr. Speaker, the battles of liberty have not all been fought, nor all been won, but they are ever going on. Our Republican brethren in the South have been waging a battle for liberty for a quarter of a century against fearful odds, and have universally lost, thousands of them have gone down in death, the flower of the land, the bravest of the brave, but the battle is not ended; it will go on and liberty will win, even in Mississippi, and in the glorious years to come, when equal rights for all shall prevail there, as elsewhere, then the lovers of liberty shall gather around the marble monuments that shall tower toward the skies from her capital city, and on which will appear the names of Mississippi's long, long list of martyrs to liberty, and among the highest and brightest of which shall be the Chisholms, and Mathews, McLellan and Gilmer; and below the long list of names shall be written in letters shaded with black, "All victims of Democratic hatred of liberty and equal rights."

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this new John Brown, of Kansas [Mr. KELLEY], rising in his place, calls the attention of this House to the fact that this oppressed and downtrodden colored race of the South (if we are to believe the gentleman and his honorable colleagues on that side of the body) are men of courage, who have shown their courage on many battle-fields. I honor them for their courage, and I say to the gentleman, that if these men are the heroes that he portrays them and that the history of their country shows them to have been, there is very little sense in his talking about 5,000 white men dominating and murdering 20,000 colored men in some sections of the South. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If this race was meant to rule, if this race partakes of those qualities of independence and manhood which every dominant race under the sun has always had, it will defend itself, as it has shown well how it could defend itself, without the assistance of any John Brown from Kansas.

Mr. Speaker, in the South is a condition of things the like of which the sun never has shone on. A great race of people, freed from bondage, are pursuing peacefully their varied walks in life and working out their own salvation; and now a political party that loves the negro only because it wants the negro vote, a political party with a record blackened all over with its attempts against the purity of the suffrages of the citizens of this country, the party of the monopolist, the party that has never pursued any other policy than that which it thought would win the most votes—that party now comes forward and, with all the cant of the sniveling Pharisee, pleads for "political purity" and for the rights of the "downtrodden negro."

You say, gentlemen, that there are more than a million negro voters and that the negro voter is always a Republican. In the last national election the negro voter held the balance of power in Ohio, in Indiana, in Illinois. He voted with you, he gave you his suffrage, and what have you given him in this universal distribution of spoils? Ah, you want to keep his vote by high-sounding professions of love, by cant and hypocrisy, but, as he becomes educated, he sees through the hypocrisy of these pretensions and divides upon political lines. I claim for the negro, and every man who knows anything about him must concede the claim, that he has sufficient intelligence to think for himself, and it would surely be a wonderful thing if, among a million of negroes, they should all happen to think that the Republican party had created them. [Laughter.]

But this bill is to be enacted into law in the interest of political purity! In all these days of discussion that this House has listened to on this bill no gentleman has attempted to show that its various provisions were just or necessary; but whenever the advocates of the bill have been hard pressed some gentleman has been put forward to make a partisan speech, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] did today, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] did yesterday, taking care that they had the last word in the debate so that nobody could answer them. The party whip was cracked. Even the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANK], who so loudly proclaimed his independence yesterday, knelt to-day under the lash of the party taskmaster. And all this was done, I suppose, in the interest of political purity, this marshaling the party hosts to put this caucus measure through, this one party measure of the session, as a New York party organ calls it to-day.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. No, I can not yield. For once I must decline the request of my genial friend from Iowa. This, I say, is the one party measure of the session, and these gentlemen on the other side profess to want the discussion divested of all partisan feeling; yet, in support of every provision of this bill, they have assailed the South and put forward the "down-trodden negro." And of course they have done this in all fairness!

This bill, written in large part by Davenport, as a member of the committee has said it was, is put forward in this manner as the great party measure of this session, and this evening the literary gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], with his long line of Tory ancestors behind him, declined to say even how much time he required for the discussion of an amendment, and proposed to adjourn, in order, I presume, that he might go and consult the real author about the discussion of an amendment to a section of the bill which I suppose he did not know anything about himself. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] And all this is in the interest of non-partisanship and of purity in politics! Why, then, have two inspectors of your own party and only one of the other party, two canvassers of your own party and only one of the other?

We have been told over and over again in the discussion that this bill is but an extension of the beneficent law of 1871, which made pure elections possible in the city of New York. Ah, but, gentlemen, if you knew anything about this bill—and I acquit most of you of any such knowledge—[laughter] if you knew anything about the law of 1871—and I would not impute such knowledge to many of you—[laughter] if you knew anything about it, you would know that the law of 1871 provided for as many Democratic supervisors as Republican supervisors, as many Democratic marshals as Republican marshals.

The State law of New York divides its election officers in the same way. There has never been any question in regard to the purity of elections in New York. Why? Because the election officers are absolutely non-partisan.

Much has been said about the purity of elections in New York under the present system. Why, sir, in the "off years," as they are called, when there are no Congressional candidates to be chosen, the elections are just as pure as the Congressional elections; and no one has ever made any pretense to the contrary.

I say to you, gentlemen, that this question can not be discussed in that fashion. There are none so foolish as to be deceived by the pretenses set up on the other side. Even the negro, who you undertake to say is so ignorant, who you say is cheated and deceived in the South, even the negro, ignorant as you represent him to be, much worse than I believe him to be, can not be deceived by any of this sniveling cant and Pharisaical hypocrisy about the "purity of elections." Why does it require two pure Republican election officers for one Democrat? If this measure is put forward in common honesty, why did you try to change the jury system, an outrage so flagrant that even your own cringing party deserted its leadership—

Mr. ROWELL. Whom do you mean when you speak of people "cringing?"

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Any of you gentlemen who support this bill; it is not a personal allusion. I will relieve my friend from the application of that word "cringing." I believe he is one of the gentlemen who snap the whip.

Mr. ROWELL. I am glad that the other side of the House—

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Take your own time to tell us how "glad" you are. Wait until you hear the verdict of the people before you tell us how "glad" you are.

Mr. ROWELL. You are all prophets over there!

Mr. TURNER, of New York. No; the prophets are on that side; and some of you must be "sons of prophets." When the gentleman read his long catalogue of Southern "outrages," when he lugged into this discussion things which had no bearing upon the bill, he must have been filled with the spirit of prophecy. There was also an animal in Scripture that was a prophet. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, there can be no pretense which will conceal the real purpose of this measure. This is a grab for party power. I am somewhat of a politician myself, and I never saw a shrewder, a more adroit political move. Reprehensible as I believe this bill to be, threatening, as I believe it does, the very perpetuity of our institutions as they have always existed, I can not but admire as a politician this shrewd political move, this Chinese system of warfare that keeps up a great deal of howl and hullabaloo about things pertinent in no way to this measure, while making the attack in an adroit and underhand manner. But, in the name of decency and fairness, throw off the disguise. You have your party all in line, you have your votes back of you. Walk up like men and say, "We have the power and we are going to use it." Do not try to be political purists any longer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SWENEY. Mr. Speaker, the Representative from New York [Mr. TURNER] has just referred to the fact that if the colored people of this country were possessed of sufficient courage they would not need for their protection a law of this kind.

Mr. Speaker, we may admit that the colored people are not possessed of the courage that the white people have. Their courage has been bred out of them by centuries of servitude; but it is being bred into them by freedom; and unless they be treated as men possessing courage, the time when they do become possessed of it equally with the white people will be a sad time for that section of the country in which they constitute the majority of the population.

The gentleman refers to the members on this side of the House and all who would favor a law of this character as "cringing." I want to say to him and other gentlemen on that side that the time has very nearly arrived when we shall cease to "cringe," and when gentlemen on the other side will not have political rights equal to four or five of us and of our people. It is a "cringing" disposition which induces men to submit to that. And I tell you, my friends, that we are humiliated that it is so. It can not continue. Free men can not submit to it, and brave men will not. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Persons in the galleries are there by the courtesy of the House, and all demonstrations of applause must be suppressed.

Mr. SWENEY. No man who has faced men on this floor and their comrades of other days, who have been characterized here to-night as "cringing," would repeat that word in their presence or in the presence of the history of their country.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it to be proper to call attention to an address which was published in the newspapers of this city on the 28th instant, signed by thirty of the Democratic Representatives on this floor from the Northern States. Unfortunately there has never been a time in the history of our country in recent years, in peace or war, when there were not thirty or more Democratic Representatives holding seats here who were willing that the rights and liberties of the people of the country might be subverted in the interest of their party.

As a specimen of 1890 argument, that no power exists in the nation to maintain self-government or constitutional representation here; that fraud, suppression of ballot, and usurpation are constitutional; that there is no power to prevent it, I invite the attention of the House to that address. They do not deny that ballot-boxes have been stolen and false returns made, practically disfranchising the people; they do not deny that for maintaining political opinions thousands of men have been murdered since the war. They deny nothing of this kind. They say that the measure is unconstitutional; that it is revolutionary. This side of the House are accustomed to taking the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as final and conclusive upon questions of constitutional law.

In the parts of the country to which this law will least apply, and in which there is least necessity for it, the Constitution of the United States is studied in the common schools. It is revered and obeyed. We, of that portion of the country, have never had experience with any other national constitution than that, have never denied the binding force of the decision of the highest court nor our obligation to the Constitution; never have appealed from them to the tented camp and the battle-field. We have never had experience with any other flag than that which hangs above your head to-night, Mr. Speaker; and that flag was never followed in a "cringing" manner either, by the people whom we represent. [Applause.]

There are two questions involved in this measure which present themselves for consideration. One is: Is it expedient? The other is: Is it right?

It is right, Mr. Speaker, that every man entitled to a vote in this country should have an opportunity of casting that vote, and it is a right, not only of his, but it is a right of our own and the country that the vote so cast shall be counted and accurately returned. It is always expedient to do right. The evidence which is before the Committee on Elections and that has been presented to the House in the election cases which have been tried, the current history of our country, demonstrates the fact beyond the possibility of dispute that there is necessity for correcting the evils of the suppression of the ballot and falsifying of returns. It is said that it ought to be applied equally throughout the whole country. Mr. Speaker, criminal laws of the land are not applied equally to every class of people in the country. They are enacted for the benefit of all classes, but are applied only to the offenders against the law. This bill comes, too, "to call, not the righteous, but sinners to repentance." It is only partisan in this, that it seeks to purify the elections of the country and is supported only by Republicans. It is in these respects, and only in these, partisan.

It is not intended to apply where, as in the State of Iowa, such a thing as the stealing of a ballot-box was never known. It is not intended to apply it there, where such a crime as falsifying the election returns never occurred; and I ask if you can contradict that?

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I contradict it for Alabama?

Mr. SWENEY. I say in the State of Iowa.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Oh; I do not know anything about Iowa. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWENEY. Well, I do. The distinguished gentleman from Alabama misunderstood me. I say that such a thing as refusing to receive a constitutional ballot and having that ballot faithfully counted as cast was never known in that State. Is there one of you that will deny it? Is it necessary, then, to be applied in the State of Iowa, as it is, in the light of the current history of the country, necessary in the State of Mississippi? I tell you the people of the State of Iowa have rights in this matter in common with the rights of the people of this country. They have a right to send their Representatives upon this floor in the same proportion to their ballots that the people of the State of Mississippi, or Georgia, or of Alabama have. The State of Alabama has no right to send a Representative to this Chamber with twelve or fifteen thousand votes back of him while the State of Iowa requires thirty-six thousand for every one upon this floor. It is a fraud upon their rights; and it is not, Mr. Speaker, a question with the black man and the white man of the South alone, nor of the rights of the black man; it is a question of self-government and involves the rights of the white man of the North as well. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The issue here involved is the perpetuation of self-government among men, government under Magna Charta, Declaration of Independence, and Constitution. Our Declaration of Independence was not the product of Thomas Jefferson alone, nor of his generation. It is the "gathered wisdom of a thousand years." No phase of the constitutional questions involved in this bill remains adjudicated. That our reverence for and knowledge of the Constitution under which we are acting is less than yours is refuted by every page of our country's history; it is refuted by every act, every inspiration, every hope of the party and people whom we represent. The purpose of this side, of the Republicans representing the liberty-loving people of the country, is that under the Constitution, and according to the Supreme Court's interpretation thereof, every elector, North and South, rich or poor, powerful or weak, shall be protected in his right to cast the ballot of his choice at Federal elections, and that his, our, and the nation's rights to have that ballot counted shall be enforced. That is all there is of it. Is that unreasonable, unpatriotic, unconstitutional, or revolutionary?

Here is what the Supreme Court of the United States declared in the case of Ex parte Yarborough (110 United States Reports, 667), Justice Miller speaking for the court:

If the Government of the United States has within its constitutional domain no authority to provide against these evils, if the very source of power may be poisoned by corruption or controlled by violence and outrage, without legal restraint, then, indeed, is the country in danger, and its best powers, its highest purposes, the hopes which it inspires, the love which enshrines it, are at the mercy of the combinations of those who respect no right but brute force on the one hand, and unprincipled corruptionists on the other.

And in the same case the Supreme Court say (pages 657-662):

If this Government is anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated agents of other States and governments, each of which is superior to the General Government, it must have the power to protect the elections on which its existence depends from violence and corruption.

If it has not this power it is left helpless before the two great natural and historical enemies of all republics, open violence and insidious corruption.

Congress has been slow to exercise the powers expressly conferred upon it in relation to elections by the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution.

This section declares that—

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

It was not until 1812 that Congress took any action under the power here conferred, when, conceiving that the system of electing all the members of the House of Representatives from a State by general ticket, as it was called, that is, every elector voting for as many names as the State was entitled to represent in that House, worked injustice to other States which did not adopt that system, and gave an undue preponderance of power to the political party which had a majority of votes in the State, however small, enacted that each member should be elected by a separate district composed of contiguous territory. (5 Stats., 491.)

And to remedy more than one evil arising from the election of members of Congress occurring at different times in the different States, Congress, by the act of February 2, 1872, thirty years later, required all the elections for such members to be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November in 1876, and on the same day of every second year thereafter.

Will it be denied that it is in the power of that body to provide laws for the proper conduct of those elections? To provide, if necessary, the officer who shall conduct them and make return of the result? And especially to provide, in an election held under its own authority, for security of life and limb to the voter while in the exercise of this function? Can it be doubted that Congress can by law protect the act of voting, the place where it is done, and the man who votes from personal violence or intimidation and the election itself from corruption and fraud?

These questions answer themselves; and it is only because the Congress of the United States, through long habit and long years of forbearance, has, in deference and respect to the States, refrained from the exercise of these powers, that they are now doubted.

This language of the court was not used to conform to this bill, but this bill was drawn in conformity with that language.

It is with reference to that language of the court, and to that and kindred decisions in its application to this exercise of power, that the protesting thirty declare to be a "doubtful construction of the Constitution," and the constitutional exercise of this power is absolutely denied in the third paragraph of their pronunciamiento. This bill subjects no locality or people to its provisions, except on application by a large number of voters for protection of their rights in a specific locality. It applies impartially to all parts of the country, and Republicans ask no exemption from its provisions. I do not believe that any candidate for the Presidency, past or future, of the Republican party, would sanction or permit its abuse. I do not believe that any candidate of the Democratic party for that office, past or future—save only such as would buy a seat by bribery with his hoarded gold—would abuse the power.

It will, they say, take money to execute it. Unless, indeed, electors are without its intervention allowed to exercise their rights, it will take money. It has cost money and the richer blood of patriots to secure these rights. It is the poltroon only who values the rights of his countrymen, the foundations of his Government, less than the money which their maintenance costs. It does provide for certificates which shall prevent the seating of members here on returns made by men taking their oath of office with mental reservations justifying fraud and usurpations. These gentlemen, and all of us, recently saw on this floor that ballot-box from the First district of Arkansas, twenty-one of which were provided by the sheriff for the several polling places in one county; boxes which were such instruments of brazen fraud as to make any man with conscience or honor indignant. That box came, too, from a county where, before election, many honest, quiet citizens were taken by armed men in the night and banished under pain of death; a county where several men were murdered because they were Republicans and would not give up their right of ballot. The beneficiary (personally a pleasant, genial gentleman) of those frauds and violences, whereby the will of the people was overthrown, took part in your councils, declared the acts of the Speaker tyrannical and revolutionary; and you, signers of this protest, voted to retain him among your number, and to exclude from the seat to which he was elected the present sitting member.

In the Richmond case of Waddill vs. Wise, the undisputed record shows that hundreds of Republican voters stood in line with ballots in hand from sunrise until the sun set at night and the polls closed, and were refused their constitutional right to vote. By reason of such monstrous fraud there was seated in this House a member of your party. Those Republicans, standing thus, ballot in hand, denied their right, took the ballots, crumpled and soiled as they were, cast them in the box produced here, and, thanks to the God of justice and the Republican party, their votes were counted, soiled though they were by sweat of dusky hands, and from your side was wrested the fruits of that political larceny. My Democratic friends of the South, pause and think of this. There is nothing which a man so desires as the thing which is his of right, but of which he is wrongfully deprived. Possession of that thing becomes the aim of life, the consummation of his ambition. For its attainment he will live and toil and learn, and for it, if need be, will finally die. Some day that dusky line, with ballots in hand, will march up to the polls in Richmond and all over this land, their ballots will be taken, placed in the boxes, and counted. When that consummation becomes, as it is becoming, more dear to them than life, it will be done. Do you know when that time will come in any one locality? These Northern protestants can not tell you. I do not know that they would if they could, because your course tends to give the administration of the country to their party. You know that it is coming, though, and if the storm is compelled to gather much greater force before it breaks, for the man who stands before it it would have been better had he not been born. We, in this measure, seek to save you from yourselves and our common country from your reckless conduct.

The votes in one contest in this Congress from Alabama shows a condition which, were it not a cancer on the body-politic, would be grotesquely ludicrous. Actually, the situation was so well known and acknowledged by all that the two parties entered into an agreement. On the one hand the Republicans were to support a Democratic candidate; on the other hand the representative Democrats gave the pledge of a fair counting of the vote for the Republican candidate for Congress. It gives me pleasure to say that many of them adhered to their contracts for a fair count. Others refused to serve as judges of election, because to make true returns against their party would bring them into disrepute among their party associates. Others refused because they claimed that the contract for a fair count did not apply to their locality and at that election.

In one Arkansas district it is acknowledged that the ballot-boxes containing large majorities for John W. Clayton were captured, carried off, and destroyed by armed bandits. When he contested for a seat upon this floor, to which he claimed he was elected, the assassin shot him as he sat at night with his family at his fireside. The question of who is entitled to that seat is yet to be determined, and I do not pre-judge it.

In the Third Mississippi district, as shown by the votes taken, there is a white population of 25,000, and 104,000 colored. If anywhere in his country the provision in our Constitution that blacks and whites shall have equal political rights is to be observed, then why should not a colored man be elected to this House from that district? Will you gentlemen on the other side answer that? Have not the colored people of that, the Yazoo district of Mississippi, outnumbering the whites more than four to one, a right to elect one of their number to this House?

Gentlemen, Northern Democratic protestants living north of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers, these facts are but a few among the thousands making up the conditions which gave you for years a majority on this floor, which gave you for four years an occupant of the Presidential chair. The country knows it. You know the truth of these statements. In your address to the people of the country you do not deny, nor do you even attempt to present an excuse for them. Since the war in this country, tens of thousands of men have died on account of their political beliefs, and because they insisted on the exercise of their political rights. These men have been from the homes of refinement and in the cabins of the lowly. They met the assassin's bullet in the fields and on the lonely path-ways through the forests; they have fallen at and around the polling places. You know it; you can not deny it. In your presence, and in the presence of us all, your eloquent leader in this debate swore before the God above us that the present should continue.

Viewing the disadvantage in political power in which the people of Iowa stand, compared with the people of Mississippi and Georgia, for instance, I am glad to know that no Iowa member of Congress's name appears on the bill for continued robbery of my people of their political heritage. Using round numbers only, in Mississippi 15,500 votes have a Representative on this floor; in Georgia it requires but 12,200; in Iowa it requires 35,800. In Alabama one man has political power here equal to two and a half men in Iowa. In Georgia one man has like power equal to more than three men in Iowa. This disproportion is much greater comparing some other localities North and South.

We of the North say that you are and ought to be our political equals. We can not concede that you are or ought to be our political superiors. We realize, my friends of the South, the gravity of the social and political problems which are with you to solve. We desire to help you to their solution, in the kindest and most fraternal manner. We have been patient, even to humiliation, while you have absorbed unduly the political powers of the country, without solving the problem before you, except by the destruction of government by the people. We can not consent that this disparity shall longer continue, even though our thirty Northern Democratic friends do appeal to the country to maintain that sectional inequality. These thirty appeal to the country to permit, by non-action, the continuance of the suppression of the ballot, of fraudulent counting, of false returns in any or all parts of the country; to permit the continuance of the disfranchisement of men to whom the Constitution of their country gives the right of ballot. They appeal to their fellow-countrymen to insist that the people of the States and districts from which they come shall be, as they now are, deprived of equal political rights in the affairs of their nation.

I have never before heard of the birthright of one's self and one's kindred and people being offered for so small a mess of pottage. Are they blind? Can it be that they see not? They call on our people to assemble in mass-meeting to protest against this bill to restore their political rights and to restore self-government to the people. Yes; let them assemble in mass-meeting. Let them resolve, if they will, that one man from other States in political power in this country and on this floor shall equal from two to five of themselves; that, regardless of Constitution, of justice, of oaths of office, of humanity's common instincts and honor, men shall, for political opinion's sake, be shot like dogs, driven from their homes, deprived of the right to vote, have their votes stolen or uncounted; that by such means the Presidency and this House shall, as it has been, be held by the Democratic party. Let them do this in answer to your calls if they will. Ah! sirs, the brave, patient people of the North will do nothing of the kind; but the time will come when those who counsel it, who advise them to surrender self-government, equality, and honor will wander, like a leper, in the political wilderness, crying at the approach of a man, Unclean! Unclean!

Men of the South, we are ready and anxious to help you. We have tendered you funds from the national Treasury with which to educate to better citizenship your ignorant black and white. You reject it. Do not refuse the boon of government by the people. Your heritage and ours is one. Your magnificent courage is not doubted. It is known and we proudly acknowledge it. You should recognize ours, and not trespass on our rights as free men and your equals. Remember that it is not the blacks alone whom you deprive of rights in this Government, but all of us. Do not be misguided. The courage and determination which have fixed on that flag each stripe firm as the bands of Orion, and on its azure field each glittering star, immovable as the Sisters of Pleiades, will regain and guard political rights. Self-government and the people's rights are of God, and "there is no conqueror but God."

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, it has not been my good fortune to hear all of the speeches which have been delivered on this subject, and it is possible, in what I may say on the bill now before us, that I may travel over the ground which has been already occupied, far more ably than I can hope to do, by gentlemen who have preceded me. But I shall not imitate the example which has been set in this discussion by following in the line of crimination and recrimination with reference to particular incidents which have occurred in this or in that State.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, presented for the consideration of the Congress of the United States, is a novel measure. For the first time in the history of the Government since the adoption of the Constitution under which we live such a bill is now presented for the action of Congress. It raises at the very threshold of the discussion a grave question as to the constitutional power of the Congress of the United States to pass a Federal election law, in view of the fact that election laws have been declared adopted and carried into execution in every one of the States of the Union. From the time when the Constitution was adopted down to this moment, it has never been found necessary that the Congress should pass an election law; and, in order to ascertain what the power of the Congress of the United States is in regard to the subject, you must go to the Constitution itself and ascertain whether that power exists. If there be doubt about it, then clearly there should be no attempt on the part of the Federal Government to enact such a law.

When the proposition was made to-day to make this law universal in its application and apply it to every State in the Union, it was voted down; and why? It is conceded that frauds in elections may have been perpetrated in many of the States North as well as in the States South; and, therefore, if there is a necessity for a Federal election law, surely there is reason why it should be made universal in its application to all of the States.

This question, Mr. Speaker, was discussed, not in this Hall, but in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, more than fifty years ago, in the Twenty-fifth Congress of the United States; this question was discussed by a man who had his birthplace in the North and who in early life became a citizen of the State of Mississippi, who was elevated from the humble position in which he began his life in Mississippi, that of a school-teacher; who was advanced to the highest position in the esteem and honor and respect of the State of which he became an adopted citizen. He was a lawyer of eminent ability, an orator unsurpassed in his eloquence, a man who retains to-day, in the memory of the people among whom he passed his life, the affection and regard of all who knew him and all who have read his history. He was elected from the State of Mississippi to represent a Congressional district on the floor of the old Hall of the House of Representatives, before this magnificent structure was reared. In that Twenty-fifth Congress, more than fifty years ago, he made an argument upon the constitutional power of the Federal Government to pass an election law, which, in my judgment, has never been answered down to the present time. That man was Sargeant S. Prentiss. In discussing this question he quoted from the Constitution of the United States, in the speech which he delivered in his own contested-election case, where this question arose of the power of the Federal Government under the grant of power in the Constitution in that clause which provides that the States "shall" prescribe, using the imperative language, laws indicating the time, place, and manner of holding elections, but the Congress of the United States may alter or change such laws with reference to everything except the place of election of United States Senators; and I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read the marked pages from the speech of Mr. Prentiss, which will be found on pages 291 and 292 of the life of Mr. Prentiss, in which this speech is given.

The Clerk read as follows:

The framers of the Constitution, in prescribing the general modes through which the right of representation should be exercised, very wisely concluded that the regulation of the most important of all political rights should be placed in the hands of the Legislatures of the States, respectively, as the safest depositories of so important a trust. Accordingly they provided by the fourth section of the first article that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators."

Indeed, so vitally important was it considered to the independence of the States that the legislation should be entirely untrammelled in prescribing the time, place, and manner of holding elections, that it was with great difficulty that the States were persuaded to acquiesce in the controlling power given to Congress to make or alter by law the State regulations. If you will look, sir, into the debates in the different conventions upon the adoption of the Federal Constitution, you will find that no provision was more debated or received with greater jealousy. All the States took the ground that the most important of their political powers consisted in the control, through their Legislatures, over the time, places, and manner of election; and the ultimate supervisory power was reluctantly placed with Congress, upon the express ground that it was necessary for the preservation of the Government; that, without this provision, the State might neglect to make any regulations on the subject or might fix the times of election at such periods as to prevent a representation, and thereby cause a dissolution of the Government. It was admitted in all the debates that this power of providing for a deficiency or failure of action on the part of the State Legislatures did not and could not with propriety reside anywhere else than in Congress. Still the States were so jealous on this subject that most of them accompanied their ratification of the Constitution with a solemn protest against the exercise by Congress of this power, except in cases of failure or neglect on the part of the State Legislature, and also with standing instructions to their delegates in all future time to obtain, as early as practicable, an amendment of the Constitution limiting the action of Congress on this matter to such cases of neglect and failure only. The ratifications of South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, if not others, contain such protests and instructions.

Mr. Speaker, it will be observed, in reading the address, Mr. Prentiss cites that clause of the Constitution under which the power is claimed now for passing such a law. He refers to the fact that in the various conventions of the States which assembled for the purpose of determining whether they would adopt this Constitution they adopted it with a protest. He says that the primary power is granted to the Legislatures of the States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEADLE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for ten minutes longer.

Mr. MUDD. I shall make no objection if the same courtesy is to be extended to our side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to state that he has a very long list here, and that it would be impossible to finish up the list if there is an extension of time. Of course it is in the discretion of the House to do as it pleases.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not like to trespass upon the time of the House, but I would like to finish what I have to say.

Mr. MUDD. I shall object unless it is understood that the same extension will be given to this side of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. We are not lacking in courtesy, and there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. So far as I am individually concerned I have no objection. As the Chair has stated, the time has been divided up and it is with the gentlemen who are to follow. I have divided the time as best I could. It rests with those who are to speak later. If the time is consumed, can not assume the responsibility.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I am last on the list and I do not object.

Mr. WADDILL. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended for ten minutes, that he be allowed to proceed with the understanding that the same courtesy will be extended to the other side.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I make the point of order that this has always been done by unanimous consent, and must be done in a special way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; I give notice that I will claim the floor in the morning to continue what I have to say. I should have preferred to finish what I had to say to-night, but of course I yield if objection is made on the other side.

[Mr. MUDD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CARLTON. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty members have in being heard on this, the gravest proposition which has ever been presented for the consideration of the American Congress impresses me with this conclusion, that the enormity of the measure under consideration is only exceeded by the determined purpose of its partisan promoters to rush it through this, the popular branch of Congress, without due discussion and deliberation. Just to think of a measure so revolutionary in its character as to wrest from the States of this Union a constitutional right which they have enjoyed and exercised for more than a hundred years, being hurried through this House in the short period of four or five days, and that, too, under a rule which gives all possible advantage to the partisan promoters of the iniquity.

This is contrary to all true statesmanship. It is at variance with all safe, fair, honest, and legitimate legislation. It is a procedure which will not be justified or excused by the American people. It is simply monstrous. In the contemplation of these facts, methinks I already hear a distant sound, as the mighty rushing of the waters. Hark! 'tis the voice of an outraged and indignant people coming up from every portion of the American Union, crying aloud, "Down with the Centralists!" "Out with the monarchical desecrators and defamers of the temple of American liberty!" "Away with the usurpers of the rights of freemen!" And as the voice of the people gathers into one mighty sound, methinks I hear above the clamor one united exclamation, "Oh, for a Lodge in some vast wilderness."

Mr. Speaker, it is claimed by the supporters of this bill that Congress has conferred upon it the power to enact it into law under paragraph 1, section 4, Article I, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It is further claimed that the United States Supreme Court has rendered a decision sustaining this construction or this power on the part of Congress. I am not aware of the Supreme Court having rendered any decision upon this particular clause of the Constitution, but if it had it would have been obliged to hold that Congress "may at any time by law make or alter such regulations" consistent with the reserved power herein granted. It could not have done otherwise, as that is the plain letter of the law. But the same court would have been equally obliged to hold that the primary, absolute, and mandatory power was in the States, for the plain letter of the Constitution also says that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof."

The authority here given to the States is certainly absolute and mandatory, while the power given to Congress must, in the very nature of things, be a reserved or alternative provision, so as to enable Congress to preserve the Government in case the States, or any of them, should refuse or neglect to provide for the election of members of Congress. It can not be maintained that absolute power is here given to both the States and Congress to regulate these elections. This would be to establish conflicting powers between the States and the National Legislature and would render nugatory this clause or provision of the Constitution.

Such a view or construction would be inconsistent with sound and effective law and do violence to the framers of our organic law, who were the ablest statesmen and constitutional lawyers of this or any other country. The record and the history as to the adoption of this clause of the Constitution undoubtedly sustain the position that the power given to Congress to pass a law giving Federal control to State elections was a reserved or alternative provision, only to be exercised when the States themselves failed or refused to provide for these elections. The propriety of even giving to Congress this power respecting elections in the States was most seriously questioned in the convention which framed the Constitution.

Mr. Madison, in discussing this clause in the convention, said:

The necessities of the General Government suppose that the Legislatures will sometimes fail or refuse to consult the common interest at the expense of local convenience or prejudice.

He again says:

This clause was meant to give the National Legislature power, not only to alter the provisions of the States, but to make regulations in case the States should fail or refuse altogether.

Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, says:

The regulation of elections is submitted in the first instance to the local governments (the States) which in ordinary cases, and when no improper views prevail, may both conveniently and satisfactorily be by them exercised. But under extraordinary circumstances the power is reserved to the National Government, so that it may not be abused and thus hazard the safety and permanence of the nation.

Referring further to the debates in the constitutional convention adopting this clause, as well as the debates in the original thirteen States ratifying the Constitution, it must be clear to any impartial mind that it was only adopted and ratified as a precautionary measure, a reserved power given to Congress, to be exercised only upon failure of the States or any of them to provide for the election of United States Senators and Representatives.

Is there any such condition of affairs existing at this time in any one of the States of this Union as could possibly justify or call forth the exercise of this reserved or alternative power on the part of Congress? The fact that the elections throughout the country, and especially in the South, do not result satisfactorily to the Republican party, or the mere assertion, without facts to sustain it, that frauds exist in the elections in the Southern States, will not be accepted by the American people as sufficient cause for Congress exercising a power so revolutionary in its character, so subversive of their rights as American freemen, and which will prove the overthrow of the very foundation of our free republican institutions.

From the foregoing and from the plain letter of the law itself, the promoters and supporters of this measure must in some manner reconcile these apparent, distinct, and different powers given by the Constitution to the States and to the National Legislature before they can successfully claim the power of Congress to enact it into law.

I would respectfully invite the attention of this bill to other constitutional provisions touching upon this question, and which are subsequent to that under which they claim the power and authority to pass this law. The ninth amendment to the Constitution says:

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

The tenth amendment to the Constitution says:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Should it be held that these amendments refer and relate to the distinct powers enumerated in the Constitution, then certainly they more forcibly relate to the clause under consideration.

It is now a generally accepted postulate of constitutional construction that the Union must be regarded as a government of limited powers, while the States are governments of general or full powers except as the national Constitution or that of the particular State imposes restrictions. In other words, the State governments are the repositories of all sovereignty, authority, and sway which are appropriate to republican government and which are not prohibited by the national or withheld by the State constitution. Then he who would impeach, repeal, or seek to overthrow the laws of the States must first show that they transcend the limits which by one or the other instrument have been granted as authority to such States.

The statement of the honorable gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. EWART] (and he ought to know, for he comes fresh from the Republican camp) is that this bill is only a party measure, for opposing which he is aware that he will have to pay the penalty. Then, since the announcement of this truth, coming straight and fresh from the Republican ranks, heralded by one who has the patriotism and manhood to serve the true interest of his country and his people rather than obey the despotic dictation of King Caucus, no other reason can be assigned for this measure, which wrests from the States of this Union a right given them by the Constitution, than that it is a want and a necessity of the party in power.

Let me admonish the friends and supporters of this measure that the Nestor of the Republican party, that grand man whose untimely taking off was a calamity to the whole country, announced in undying terms that "this was a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people." There are no divine or hereditary rights in free republican America. All the powers of government, all the authority which government or society can rightfully exercise towards the people or individuals are originally vested in the people themselves. The will of the people is the source of power to create and administer government by written constitutions. Such legislation as you now propose proceeds upon the idea, the violent presumption, that the people of the States are incapable of self-government.

The sovereignty of the States, local self-government, is the very foundation upon which is builded our system of free republican constitutional self-government. This bill is simply monarchical in its tendency. It proceeds upon the further idea that the machinery provided is perfect; that the officials to be furnished are infallible; that the king can do no wrong; that order is to be preserved, society protected, and government perpetuated by a power outside of, and superior to, the people themselves.

Let such ideas be tolerated and advanced, let such legislation as this be enacted, then will the American Congress have laid the foundation for the overthrow of all constitutional government and the destruction of all civil liberty in this country. Despite the attempted argument to the contrary, this bill is sectional in its character and is so intended to be applied. No better or higher proof is needed of this being the undoubted purpose of the promoters of the measure than the unflinching earnestness with which they fought the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], which was to make the law uniform and universal in its application to every Congressional district in every State of the Union.

Gentlemen on the other side of this House have asked stoutly, Why should this bill be objected to if the elections in the South are fair and honest? How can it then hurt or inconvenience any one? Granting this to be true, then why should the Republican friends and framers of the bill object to the amendment which makes it applicable and of force in their own districts? "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander;" but you do not intend that it shall so be. You intend that it shall only be sauce for the Southern States, that your damnable political passions and prejudices may be fed and sweetened, and that sectional strife and discord may be kept alive for the aggrandizement of your party.

I would prefer to attack this most iniquitous and pernicious measure from other than a sectional standpoint, for it is as subversive of the rights of the people of Maine and Massachusetts as it is of the rights of the people of Georgia and South Carolina, but you have forced the argument from another and purely sectional standpoint. Let me advise you, gentlemen, that if you have intended this as a sectional measure, only to be applied to the South, then it will, as has other like sectional legislation, fail of its purpose and fall beneath the weight of its own infamy, burying the Republican party beneath the ruin.

If, perchance, the Republican party has intended by this bill to Mexicanize or africanize the South, then I would say to the members of that party that the honorable gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. EWART] has truthfully forewarned them when he says "that the passage of such a law will sow the foul seed of factional discord among the people, be a fruitful cause of unutterable woe to the unfortunate class it is designed to benefit." Viewed from a political standpoint it will solidify the Democracy of the South and make negro rule or supremacy in the South as impossible as the 25,000 negroes in Indiana, who, as a balance of power, carried that State for Harrison, or the 20,000 negroes on Long Island who voted for Harrison, are unlikely to receive any special favors at the hands of the Republicans or become the rulers and leaders of that party.

It may be pertinent to inquire just here why such continued and never-ceasing declarations of sympathy for the poor negroes of the South, which sympathy finds its expression more in the abuse and slander of the Southern white man than in deeds of kindness to the negro, while the existence of thousands upon thousands of poor, ignorant, unemployed, half-starved, and half-clothed negroes throughout the North seem to be utterly ignored and forgotten by these would-be hypocritical Republican philanthropists? Mr. Speaker, it was not my purpose to take a sectional view of this measure, only so far as to refute some of the charges of slander which have been made against the State and people which I in part have the honor to represent on this floor.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the author of this bill, opened his argument the other day with a broad denial of anything of a sectional character or so intended in his bill. He sought to sustain this position by alluding, not to the election irregularities and frauds in his own State, but with a rather severe criticism of such outrages in the State of New York, notwithstanding one Davenport, of that State, is said to have draughted the so-called Lodge election bill. The champion of the Federal election law had not gone far, however, in his argument when he fully disclosed the fact that this was a mere pretext, an intended blind, which produced more of amusement than conviction, as he hastened to unburden his troubled soul and give forth with much fervor and feeling the true object and foundation of his bill.

The gentleman occupied his full hour in a recapitulation and reiteration of his oft-repeated attacks upon the South, making Georgia and South Carolina the special objects of his more partisan than patriotic lecture. His sympathy and affection for the poor negro of the South grew so intense that really we were alarmed for fear that he would at once "deport" all the negroes from the South to his own bosom and his own State in order that their rights might be protected by making his re-election to Congress the more certain. What a potent argument for his so-called non-sectional bill, when he urged its passage because Democratic Georgia would not surrender her ten seats in Congress to the Republican party.

The gentleman further argued that there was a "race problem" in the South, which he seemed to think could only be settled by the passage of his election bill. I would like to know of the gentleman what an election bill has to do with a "race problem." Was the "race problem" in Massachusetts settled by an election law or a bill of sale? I will inform the gentleman for his enlightenment as to affairs in a section of the country which he has never visited and knows nothing about, that there is no "race problem" in Georgia or the South. There is, down there, a political problem, which the gentleman does not understand, which seems to worry him and his party very much, and which his partisan, sectional bill will never settle, at least to his satisfaction or according to his calculations.

The negroes in Georgia are far better off and better protected in all of their rights than they would be in Massachusetts, and they know it. If not, they would in all human probability emigrate to the Bay State and put themselves under the special protection and guardianship of Mr. LODGE and his Federal election law. There is nothing to prevent such a move on the part of the negroes and nothing to guide or control them in such a choice save their own free will and good judgment.

Let me further inform the would-be friend of the negro of the South that he can not further or longer fool the poor Southern negroes, and that they are not going to emigrate to his State and throw themselves into his loving and sympathetic embrace. He has been fooled so often by the Republican party that he has at last gotten his eyes opened and his mind enlightened, and has no further confidence in that party and its promises to the negro, which are only made to be broken. He knows who his true friends are, and with them he is going to remain. The gentleman is in error when he says, "A movement is on foot in the South to deport the negroes." Let him not be alarmed for fear they might come to his State. The South is the natural home of the negro, and there he is going to stay. We do not intend that he shall go away, or at least we do not want him to go away. When Massachusetts and Connecticut and New York and other Northern States sold their slaves to the South because they could not longer use them, as slaves, to advantage in the North, they said the South was the natural home for the negro. We took them; we have lived peaceably and prosperously with them for a hundred years and more, and we expect, if let alone, to continue to live peaceably, happily, and prosperously with them.

Is it not a little off, or unexpected, in the gentleman from Massachusetts, coming as he does from a State which helped to introduce the slave trade into America, which settled its "race problem" by selling her slaves to the South, and who comes from an ancestry who probably grew opulent from "negro trading," to be moralizing on the "race problem," and attempting to lecture the South as to its treatment of the negroes? "Oh, Shame! where is thy blush?"

Why, Mr. Speaker, I am told that amongst the French spoliation claims that are now being prosecuted before the Court of Claims and in this House are some claims for former citizens of Massachusetts in behalf of their posterity and legal heirs, which former citizens or ancestors had traded their negroes for rum or sold their negroes and bought rum, and while engaged in trading their rum on the coast of Africa for other and more negroes their slave-trading vessels were seized or spoliated.

I will venture to say just here, and under the peculiar history and surroundings, that I think it would be in quite as good taste and the bounds of propriety for me to say to the "race problem" moralist, the would-be lecturer of the South, who hails all the way from Massachusetts, that if he and his party will just hands off and let us and the poor negroes of the South alone, all troubles and problems of the South will be settled much more satisfactorily and much more to the advantage of the negroes than he and his party can possibly do through Federal election laws or any other Republican legislation, and we promise not to trade any of the poor negroes off for rum.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, as well as other gentlemen on the Republican side of this House, seems not to understand why the Georgia members of Congress should have been elected by so small votes. Indeed, it seems a matter of great distress and anxiety to them. This is easily explained, and should not be a matter of surprise or distress to any intelligent Republican who has kept abreast with the political history of the country. In Georgia we have but the one party, the Democratic party. Our contests over elections are in the primaries, when Democrats turn out en masse. The nomination in these primaries amounts to an election; so that when the regular election comes off, there being no opposition, the party as a whole does not deem it necessary to turn out and vote.

In the Presidential elections (reference to which these gentlemen studiously and most carefully avoid), there is always a full vote showing a Democratic majority in the State of more than 60,000 votes. Have these gentlemen forgotten the fact that Georgia and Texas are the banner Democratic States of the Union, having interchanged the banner given to the State casting the largest Democratic majority? When has the seat of a single member of Congress from Georgia been contested in this House? Where is the scandal that has attached to a single State official in Georgia since the Democracy came into power?

But, say our Republican friends, what about the negroes? The census shows a large negro vote or voting population in Georgia and the South. That is true, but gentleman you make a mistake in assuming that the negroes all vote the Republican ticket or are all Republicans, and your bill is simply to count them for your party whether they vote your ticket or not or whether they vote at all. Your bill should be entitled, "A bill to coerce the negroes of the South into the Republican party and to count them for the Republican ticket whether they vote or not." That is all there is in it, and no one knows it better than your party.

I am willing to admit that under a system of political teaching and drilling inaugurated in the South by the Republican party just after the war the negroes were made to believe that this party was the author of their freedom and was their best and truest friend, and having been fooled into this belief they naturally went into the Republican ranks. Has this party kept faith with the negroes of the South, so as to reasonably expect them to continue in the Republican fold?

There is no race of beings on earth more sensitive to false promises and false hopes than the negro race. Remembering, then, the history of the Freedmen's Bureau, how under Republican establishment, control, and influence this bureau, for the deposit and safe-keeping of the hard earnings of the poor negroes, induced and received these deposits only to be squandered by their so-called and unfaithful Republican friends—it is safe to say that had it not been for the Democrats, who at last are the negroes' best and truest friends, as they are fast finding out, this loss would have been complete, final, and forever. How the negroes remember with bitterness this history, as they do the false promise of "40 acres and a mule."

Georgia from the close of the war until 1872 was under the control of the Republican party. Under the laws of that State large revenues were set apart as an educational fund, of which the negroes received a large percentage. The party in power stole this fund absolutely, and it was among the first acts of the Democratic party when coming back into power in 1873 to restore and fully reinstate this fund for the education of both blacks and whites. Many other unfulfilled promises of the Republican party are remembered by the negroes of the South, and now, being fully satisfied that they have been used by that party only for party aggrandizement, they are fast dropping from the Republican ranks.

These facts are well known to you Republican gentlemen, and you are simply alarmed at the result. You expected when the negroes were free and given the right of suffrage that they would swell your party ranks and give you greater and more certain political power. In this you have been disappointed, and to-day, if you could, you would disfranchise every negro in the country, especially as it would reduce the representation in Congress from the South, which representation you so much fear, and forever antagonize. Being disappointed in these fond hopes and anticipations, incident to the freedom of the negroes, you now bring forward this partisan measure to count the negroes of the South for your party, whether they vote or not.

Let me tell you how we treat the negroes down in Georgia.

When the General Government donated the "land-scrip fund" to the different States of the Union, no special provision was made in that act for the negroes receiving their pro rata share of the fund. The State Legislature of Georgia took the matter in hand, passed a resolution readjusting this fund as far as related to Georgia, and gave the negroes of the State some $5,000 more of this fund than their pro rata share, making the sum of $8,000 per annum out of an annuity from the whole fund of about $17,000. Subsequently this provision was ingrafted into our State constitution of 1877, and stands there to-day as a monument of proof of the better friendship and protection to the negroes at the hands of the Democrats than at the hands of the ever-sympathizing, pretentious, and never-performing Republicans.

Then why should the negroes of the South, and especially the negroes in Georgia, be Republicans? There is to-day but a fragmentary element of the Republican party in Georgia, a sort of corporal's guard, just enough to receive and enjoy the limited patronage bestowed when that party is in power. While it is true, perhaps, that the negroes, as a class, do not affiliate directly with the Democratic party, yet they have almost, if not quite, ceased to act with the Republican party, save a few howling leaders who do the bidding of their party by way of keeping up sect onal strife and discord.

Gentlemen of the Republican party, why not let us alone? Are we not doing well in the South? Do the negroes of the South come up here clamoring for Federal election laws and protection at your hands? Where in this broad land, where civilization has planted its foot and where the negroes constitute a portion of the American population, is this race doing so well as in the South? Why endanger the prosperity of the South and the well-to-do condition of the negro? We certainly have had hard enough a time in rallying and recuperating from the ravages and devastations of the war. Let me now tell our Republican friends, and indeed the whole country, what we are doing and what we have done in the South; and for this purpose I propose to insert here, as a part of my remarks, the following statistical facts compiled by the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company:

Everywhere and in all lines the South is at work. Its people are imbued with a spirit of energy and enterprise never surpassed; its vast resources are being opened up and their development is adding to the prosperity of every part of this section, and its manifold attractions and advantages are bringing a steady stream of wealth and of men of enterprise to this fair land. What the South has accomplished in the way of new industrial enterprises may be seen from the following summary of the number organized during four years from January 1, 1886, to December 31, 1889.

Iron-furnace companies.....	126
Machine shops and foundries.....	441
Agricultural-implement factories.....	63
Flour mills.....	535
Cotton mills.....	267
Furniture factories.....	220
Gas-works.....	101
Water-works.....	351
Carriage and wagon factories.....	178
Electric-light companies.....	475
Mining and quarrying enterprises.....	1,891
Lumber mills, including saw and planing mills, sash and door factories, stove factories, etc.....	3,036
Ice factories.....	233
Canning factories.....	425
Stove foundries.....	25
Brick works.....	565
Miscellaneous iron and steel works, rolling mills, pipe works, etc.....	184
Cotton compresses.....	114
Cotton-seed-oil mills.....	148
Miscellaneous enterprises not included in the foregoing.....	4,415
Total.....	13,744

It may be well to sum up only a few leading points in the South's growth during the last few years, as given in the preceding pages, and thus convey some general idea of what has been done in this brief period.

In four years nearly fourteen thousand new manufacturing and mining enterprises have been organized in the South and thousands of old plants greatly enlarged. The list of new enterprises extends over almost the whole range of human industry, embracing pig-iron furnaces, foundries, machine-shops, steel-works, cotton and woolen mills, cotton-seed-oil mills, cotton compresses, fruit-canning factories, carriage and wagon factories, agricultural-implement factories, flour-mills, grist-mills, saw-mills, planing-mills, sash, door, and blind factories, shuttle factories, handle and spoke factories, barrel factories, shingle-mills, furniture factories, tobacco factories, brick-yards, ice factories, fertilizer factories, stove foundries, wire-fence factories, lime-works, soap factories, tanneries, glass-works, gas-works, distilleries, potteries, electric-light works, marble and slate quarrying companies, and companies to mine coal, iron ore, gold, silver, mica, natural gas, oils, etc.

The number of national banks has increased from 220, with a capital of $45,468,985, in 1879, to 472, with a capital of $76,454,519, in 1889, a more rapid percentage of gain than is shown by the rest of the country.

The railroad mileage of the South has been increased by the addition of nearly 20,000 miles since 1880. Since that year over $800,000,000 have been spent in the building of new roads and improving old ones. The assessed value of property has increased over $1,300,000,000. This does not show the full increase in the value of property, since there is a very large amount of manufacturing property created since 1880, which does not appear in the tax assessments, being exempt by law from taxation. The increase in the true value of property was over $3,000,000,000. In 1880, the South made 397,301 tons of pig-iron; in 1888, 1,132,854, and in 1889 the output was 1,566,702 tons.

In 1880, 6,048,571 tons of coal were mined in the South, and in 1889 the output was over 19,400,000 tons. Cotton mills have increased from 161, with 14,323 looms and 267,854 spindles in 1880, to 355 mills, with 45,091 looms and 2,035,268 spindles, while many new mills are under construction and many old ones are being enlarged. In 1880 there were 40 cotton-seed-oil mills in the South, having a capital of $3,500,000; now there are 213, with over $20,000,000 invested.

The value of the South's agricultural products for 1889 was about $850,000,000, against $571,000,000 in 1879. The value of the South's live stock on January 1, 1889, was $569,000,000, while in 1880 it was $391,400,000. The production of grain rose from 431,074,630 bushels in 1880, to 652,291,000 bushels in 1889, an increase of over 220,000,000 bushels.

In every line of industry the same tremendous strides of progress are being made.

Presenting these comparisons in tabular form we have the following:

	1880.	1889.
Assessed value of property.....	$2,913,436,095	$4,220,166,490
Railroad mileage.....	20,612	40,521
Cost of railroads.....	$679,000,000	$1,500,000,000
Yield of cotton, bales.....	5,755,359	7,250,000
Yield of grain, bushels.....	431,074,630	652,291,000
Number of farm animals.....	28,754,243	45,592,836
Value of live-stock.....	$391,412,254	$569,161,550
Value of chief agricultural products.....	$571,098,454	$850,000,000
Coal mined, tons.....	6,049,471	19,497,418

I would add to the foregoing exhibit of Southern prosperity and well-being the additional fact that the negroes of the South are now fast learning industrial and economic habits and are accumulating property. In my State alone they pay taxes upon more than a half million dollars of real and personal property. Then, with such a showing for the South, there certainly can not be anything radically wrong with our people, white or black.

Such prosperity does not indicate "race troubles" or "election fraud" or the necessity of a Federal election law. Suffice it to say that prosperity has fully established itself in the South, and that we expect to go on and on to greater prosperity and increased and ever-increasing power as a section of this great American Union, despite any and all Republican, sectional, and partisan Federal election laws.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take any part in the discussion of this bill until I listened to the views which have been presented on both sides since yesterday morning. I had not heard or read the speeches which were made before that, having been absent a few days attending the Congressional convention of the new district in which I have been thrown by the Democratic Legislature of my State.

Before starting to Ohio I attempted to arrange a pair which would protect me in my absence, but I found it impossible. One Democrat said, "I will pair with you on any other bill, but I can not on this." Another said, "TAYLOR, I would like to accommodate you, but I declare it would ruin me to pair on this bill." Another said, "If I were to pair on this bill I would never get another nomination or election in God's world." Another said, "Nothing will ever satisfy my people but my vote against this bill; no explanation that I could ever make would satisfy them." Another said, "I know that a pair will be worth just as much as my vote, but my district would never understand it; besides the leaders of our party have advised us not to pair on this bill." Another said, "I am now paired on all questions except this bill, and it would never do for me to pair on this election bill." Another said, "You will have to excuse me, Mr. TAYLOR, I would not pair with God Almighty on this bill; it would never do in the world." Hence, I had to go away without arranging a pair, although I had never had any difficulty in doing so before. Of course I could have arranged a transferable pair, but I did not care to do this.

While the matter of pairing is usually unimportant, these replies seemed to me unusually significant. The fate and fortune, the life and future of the Democratic party seemed to hang on the result of this bill. Never before had I witnessed such anxiety in regard to any measure. Although I had expected to remain absent a few days longer, the determination of the Democrats to defeat this bill was so manifest that I decided to return, and did return before a vote on an amendment even could be taken.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to know the cause of the bitter opposition to this bill. Why is it that the Democratic party seems so overwhelmed with wrath and indignation at the very thought of fair and free elections? They charge us with endangering the liberties of the people, with imperiling the life of the Republic, when we only ask that the will of the people shall be freely and fairly expressed. In the olden days we heard this same opposition to the presence of a handful of soldiers in the vicinity of voting precincts, but it has never been shown that an illegal vote was cast or that a legal voter was deprived of his just rights by the interposition of a soldier of the United States. And should this bill become a law, as I trust it will, no such complaint will be made in the future by fair and honest men.

What is the objection to this bill? Thus far I have only caught two fundamental objections. One is that the bill now under consideration gives to the court certain powers of appointment, and will, as they say, taint the garments of the judiciary. The other objection is that the bill is not of universal application in all districts and in all States, because its provisions are only made available on the application of fifty or a hundred citizens who apply for the appointment of election supervisors. They say that every State and every district and every precinct should be required to use this election machinery or none.

Let us examine these two objections. In the State of Pennsylvania they have had for seventeen years an election law which contains both of these provisions and a law which is open to both of these objections. In that State any five men of any precinct can petition the court of common pleas for the appointment of overseers of the election, and they are appointed when this request is made and they are not appointed when this request is not made. Have you ever heard it charged that the making of these appointments has degraded the judiciary of Pennsylvania? Or have you ever heard that this method was odious in that State to Democrats or Republicans, because it is only applied to those precincts which demand it?

This method of holding elections in the State of Pennsylvania is not embraced in the statutes of that State alone. In 1873 it was incorporated into their new constitution. And I wish to call your attention to the fact that Mr. BUCKALEW, now one of the ablest Democratic members of this House, was a member of that constitutional convention, and was chairman of the subcommittee that prepared and reported this measure.

The fact that the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has an election law which embraces both of these so-called objectionable features and has had these provisions in the statutes and in the constitution of that State for seventeen years without objection ought to put at rest these objections without any reference to other States where similar laws prevail.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire what the object of this bill is. They tell us on the other side that one object is to keep the Republican party in power and that the other is to arouse race prejudice. All I can say as to the first object is that if it will keep the Republican party in power it will do a good thing. The Republican party saved the life of this Republic and made this country what it is to-day. Only yesterday a speaker on this side of the House turned to the Democratic side, when the seats were full, and asked what one good or great thing the Democratic party had ever done for this country, and he paused for a reply, but no reply came. If the Democratic party has ever done any one great or good thing for the country history has failed to record it.

If some Democrat had stood in his place and looked into the eyes of the Republican side and inquired what the Republican party had ever done, how quick and fast would have come thrilling responses. I shall not stop to point out the glories or triumphs of the Republican party or the dark pages of Democratic disaster, but I will deny that the object of this bill is partisan success.

The object of this bill is simply justice; justice to all races and to all colors, to all localities and to all conditions, no more, no less. When the clash of arms ceased, when the smoke of battle was brushed away by the welcome zephyrs of peace and order, the great captain of the Union armies said, "Let us have peace."

The armies of the North and the armies of the South repeated these thrilling words, and the whole world shouted, "Let us have peace." And when the terms of peace came to be considered it was agreed that armed rebellion should not be punished according to law; that the forfeiture of the lives and property of the men who were engaged in rebellion should not be exacted, that their treason should be condoned, that their citizenship should be restored, that their disabilities should be removed, that they should be entitled to the right of suffrage and to the privilege of holding official positions.

All this was agreed to after the final victory had been won, and all this was granted to the people of the South by a magnanimous Government on the condition—mark this—on the condition that the constitutional amendments which made the colored man a free man and a voter and a citizen should be acquiesced in and sustained by the people of the South. They accepted this proposition and took an oath to abide by and obey these amendments. This guaranty of citizenship and equal rights to the colored man of the South was the purchase price which the South agreed to pay for their lives and their property and their citizenship. They hold on to the benefit which they derive from this settlement and refuse to grant the conditions to which they then subscribed.

How can Southern Democrats who are engaged in depriving the colored man of his right to vote occupy seats on the floor of this House when they have broken the conditions on which this right and privilege were granted? You insist on counting the colored people when the census is taken and you insist on not counting them when the votes are taken. For fourteen years you held control of this House and locked the wheels of legislation because you obtained your majority by stealing the colored vote of the South. This is history, the pages of which ought to bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every honest Democrat.

Do you deny this? Let me call your attention to the vote which elected members of the last Congress. I will take States which have the same number of Members of Congress. I will compare the seven districts of Kansas with the seven districts of South Carolina, the seven districts of New Jersey with the seven districts of Mississippi, and I will compare the ten districts of Tennessee with the ten districts of Georgia. This is the entire vote cast in these districts for members of Congress:

Fiftieth Congress, vote of 1886.

Could figures show a more monstrous condition of affairs than this suppression of the Southern vote? The contrast between the three States of Kansas, New Jersey, and Tennessee, where elections are fair, with the three States of South Carolina, Mississippi, and Georgia, where they are unfair, speaks for itself.

It took nine times as many votes to elect MORRILL, of the First Kansas district, as it took to elect DIBBLE, of the First South Carolina district. It took six and one-half times as many votes to elect MCADOO, the Democratic member of the Seventh New Jersey district, as it took to elect HOOKER, the Democratic member of the Seventh Mississippi. It took sixteen times as many votes to elect Neal, the Democratic member of the Third Tennessee district, as it took to elect CRISP, the Democratic member of the Third Georgia; and so to the end.

I know that the vote for the present Congress is somewhat larger, and I know, too, how it came to be larger. The same powers that controlled one election controlled the other, and when the demand for more votes was made they were furnished, but the indignation of the loyal people of this country can not be allayed in this way. Nothing short of a free ballot and a fair count will ever satisfy the American people.

But they tell us that this bill is intended to create race prejudice. In this they are mistaken. Fair elections and fair treatment will allay prejudice and bring the North and South more closely together than they have ever been in the past.

There is no need of any antagonism between the North and South, and if the South will secure equal and exact justice to all men of all colors there will be none and the South will be the great gainer. If this is not done, sooner or later the same causes which brought on the war of the rebellion will bring on another conflict, the end of which will not be so peaceable as the last. The Anglo-Saxon sense of justice which put a million men in the field in defense of a down-trodden race will not permit this injustice to continue very much longer. The iniquitous methods of degrading the colored race in the South must come to an end. An enslavement of 8,000,000 of human beings by indirection, by fraud and perjury, by violence and intimidation, is no better than the slavery we had before the war and will not be allowed to exist very much longer. The colored race rebels, the great North rebels, one-half the Southern States rebel, and one-half the people where these franks exist rebel against this flagrant and unblushing wrong.

There is a sense of justice in the South which no aristocratic domination can long suppress. In the last Presidential campaign I spoke in Williamsburgh, Va. The chairman of the meeting was Dr. Wise, a son of Henry A. Wise, who was governor of Virginia when John Brown was hung. Dr. Wise was such an enthusiastic Republican and so bitter toward the Democrats that I had to inquire why this was. He told me. His view was that the South had fought for their rights and got whipped, that the Government had been magnanimous in its terms of peace, and that it is now the duty of the South to stand by the constitutional amendments and give to every colored man his right to vote and his right to have that vote fairly counted. He is an educated gentleman and understands the South as well as any member of this House, and he had no fears of negro domination. He is an earnest advocate of free and fair elections, as was his brother, Hon. John S. Wise, who was recently a member of this House and who pleaded earnestly and eloquently for a free ballot and a fair count.

Everywhere in Virginia where I have been, and in West Virginia, and in Maryland, and in some of the other Southern States, I met thousands of men who had been in the Confederate army who were willing to concede this right. The only Southern State where the clouds of the rebellion seemed to hang thick and low was South Carolina. In other Southern States I felt at home and received a cordial greeting from all parties and all colors, but in South Carolina I felt as if I were in some foreign country, under an unfriendly flag. I know how cordial and how friendly the Southern people are generally and how world-wide their fame for hospitality is, but my friend from Chicago [Mr. MASON] and I had gone there to speak for Republicanism, which was to many of the people of Charleston an unpardonable sin, and they seemed to regard us as the enemies of their homes and firesides.

During our stay of two or three days no white man spoke to us but a newspaper correspondent, who carefully noted our arrival, our stay, and our departure. In a quarter of a century no one had dared to make a Republican speech where treason had first cast its dark shadow on American soil, and of course they regarded our being there on this mission as an invasion of their rights.

I do not refer to this, Mr. Speaker, by way of complaint; I only allude to it to show the bitter feeling that exists in that city and in that State. The South Carolina people believe that the sacredness of their homes and firesides, the protection of their wives and children, demand the suppression of the colored vote. They believe this to be a duty which they owe to their families and their country. They regard the Republican party as the foe of Southern liberty and the firebrand of incendiaryism. They are sincere and honest in these convictions, and we should take this into account when we provide a remedy. It is the teaching of the school, the church, and the press, and nothing short of heroic treatment will ever remove this great shadow which unfortunately falls across the pathway of the people of South Carolina.

An election law is needed in South Carolina for the good of South Carolina. The people of that State are under a delusion. They need to be protected against themselves. If let alone they will be the cause of their own ruin. After leaving Charleston, while in that State and since, I have had interviews with prominent business men who reside in Charleston and do business there, who deplore the unfair and unjust election methods of that city and State as much as we do. They do not hesitate to say that election officers are chosen in South Carolina for the express purpose of defrauding the colored people out of their votes; that everybody knows this; that certain officers are selected to do this, and would not be selected if it were not known that they would secure this end.

But they said also that this perjury and fraud which has been made respectable when used to cheat the colored people is spreading and will ultimately demoralize their whole people. "I have children," said one of these gentlemen, "and how can I expect them to be honest when they see the most respectable men in Charleston assisting in and consenting to these dreadful frauds?" "It may do for the present," said he, "but it will certainly bring a curse upon us in the future."

These gentlemen expressed their regret that they could not call upon us at the hotel and show us the courtesy which they said members of Congress were entitled to, but they said they did not dare to do so, and could not do so without being subjected to bitter ostracism and severe censure. These men were Democrats and had been in the Confederate army, and yet they did not dare to call upon or meet at the hotel men who were going to make Republican speeches in Charleston.

Mr. Speaker, a law like this is needed. It is needed in the South and in the North. It is needed in my own State as much, though not so generally, as it is in South Carolina. It is needed in Cincinnati and in Columbus, where there have been perpetrated as base frauds and as shameless forgeries as ever disgraced any city or any State. It is needed wherever the people believe that a fair election can not be held without the assistance which this law will furnish.

Turn to the statutes of North Carolina if you have any doubt of the necessity of a law like this. At the last session of the Legislature of this State an election law was passed which seems fair on its face, and yet the Legislature put a provision in the law that the judges of the election may obey this law or not, just as they see proper. And finally, as a climax, the law provides that after the elections are all over and the returns are all in the board of county canvassers can judicially determine who were elected. If the law is ignored and if the judges of the election fail to get rid of the colored vote, the board of county canvassers can judicially determine the result of the election, and we all know what judicial minds these county canvassers have.

Our friends on the other side are very much afraid of the interference of the United States judges who have been appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and yet they are willing that judicial powers shall be exercised by a board of county canvassers. United States judges hold their positions for life or during good behavior and are as far removed from politics as men can be. Some of them are Democrats and some are Republicans, and yet the other side of this House prefer to trust a county canvassing board rather than to trust them.

It has been said that the Republican members of this House will have great difficulty in explaining this bill to their constituents. Mr. Speaker, I think they will have greater difficulty in explaining why this bill or some other such bill does not pass, in case no such law is enacted this session. This is not a matter of color or race, it is a question of politics. The Democrats lionize a colored man who votes the Democratic ticket. If he votes the Republican ticket it is otherwise.

Democrats say that the colored men are voting the Democratic ticket in the South now. Then why oppose this bill? Mr. Speaker, they are not voting the Democratic ticket in the South. They are not voting the Democratic ticket in the South any more than they are in the North. In the South, in the presence of several thousand, I put this question more than once and they cried out "No!" in thunder tones. It is because they are not voting the Democratic ticket that they are disfranchised, and it is because they are not voting the Democratic ticket that this bill is opposed.

The colored people of the South are entitled, on the basis of the present representation in Congress, to about forty Representatives. The Democratic party has controlled the election of at least thirty-five of these Representatives for many years and has had the benefit of the entire electoral vote in Presidential elections. The effect of this is that a Democratic minority elected one President and controlled legislation for fourteen years. The question now is whether this shall continue. How long will a patient, patriotic people submit to control of this kind? In a republic the will of the majority should control, and every law-abiding citizen yields assent to this, but when that majority is obtained by violence or fraud the will of the real majority is subverted and republicanism is overthrown.

The ballot is the heart of the Republic; stab it and the Republic will die. The election machinery is the life blood of the nation, and if it is poisoned our national existence must come to an end. The President, who holds in his grasp the pilot-wheel of this great Government, and the Congress, which forges the statutory chains which bind 65,000,000 of freemen, must be chosen fairly and justly, or the Republic will go down amid the fires of anarchy and the bloodshed of communism. The greatest question that has attracted the attention of the American people in a hundred years is the one involved in this bill and the greatest danger that threatens the American Republic at this hour is the evil it is intended to remedy.

Let this bill pass and become a law, and no harm will come to any class or to any locality. It will open up the South to Northern capital and Northern labor. It will dispel Southern ignorance and Southern prejudice. It will elevate the South more in ten years than her present progress will accomplish in a hundred.

Let us look back for a moment. Has the South always been the best judge of its own interests? We all know how freely the blood of the sunny South was spilled in defense of slavery. To-day they rejoice over its destruction, and would not restore the institution of slavery if they could. The South now resist free and fair elections and in their sober moments declare that the colored vote shall not be counted where it will interfere with white supremacy. As they were mistaken in regard to slavery, so they are mistaken in regard to unfair elections. When this last relic of barbarism shall be thrust aside and all men are made free and equal, they will hail the anniversary of its inauguration and thank God for the party and the country that achieved so grand a result.

Mr. WILSON, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would not fairly represent the patriotic people of my district and State upon this floor were I to sit quietly here and fail to give vigorous expression to the deep indignation felt by them at this bold, bad, and infamous attempt to rob them and their State of the right they have always enjoyed to manage their own election affairs.

I denounce this measure as the most vicious and the most dangerous to our institutions of any that have been introduced here for a decade. Under the specious pretext of providing for a "free ballot and a fair count," with ruthless hand it attempts to take from the States that which they have enjoyed under the Constitution since its adoption, and transfer it to the Federal Government in the exercise of a power conferred in that instrument, which it seeks to utilize by the most doubtful construction.

The bill covers over seventy pages and is complex and most difficult to comprehend. So far, however, as we can gather its meaning from the mass of verbiage which conceals it, it relates to the election of members of Congress only, but in its practical operation it affects all State and local officers who are chosen at the same time members of Congress are chosen.

Though the power of choosing Presidential electors belongs exclusively to the States, yet, as they are all chosen now under the laws of all the States on the same day as members of Congress, this bill, if it becomes a law, will necessarily place the power in the hands of the Government to dominate indirectly and control the selection of the Presidential electors. The consequent confusion and mixing of the State and Federal powers will inevitably lead to endless strife, contention, turmoil, and perhaps bloodshed at the polls, and result in disputed returns for members of Congress.

There is not a State in the Union demanding this law. No good reason has been or can be given for its enactment. We are now enjoying perfect peace between the North and South. The pretext that it is necessary to protect the purity of the ballot boxes, presumably from Democratic contamination, in view of the past history of the Republican party and the methods employed by it for thirty years in carrying elections, is not only a hollow sham, but a miserable mockery of the truth, as has been repeatedly shown and exposed on this floor and by the press of the country.

Since its appearance upon the political stage the Republican party has shown itself to be not only extremely sectional, but proscriptive in the last degree. It is not now, nor was it ever, nor will it ever be a national party. Holding to the principles of high taxation, to the doctrines of eternal hate to the South and their belief in a strong government, and favoring as they have from the hour of its birth (and which finds a strong and striking illustration in this bill) consolidation of all possible power in the Federal Government at the expense of the States, it is no wonder it finds itself more than a million of white votes in the minority in this country. I denounce this bill as revolutionary in all its tendencies and designed for no other purpose on earth than to perpetuate power in the hands of that party.

At the opening of the Fifty-first Congress it found itself, unexpectedly, in the full possession of all the departments of the Government, including that citadel of popular rights, the House of Representatives. Recognizing the uncertainty of its hold upon that body, ay, knowing to an absolute certainty that it would not be permitted to remain, it made haste to lay the foundation for its intrenchment within these walls.

The first step taken was the election to the Speakership of a man whose whole life had been passed in surroundings unfavorable to the largest liberty of the citizen, and whose extreme partisanship and sectional animosity to the Southern people, added to his vaulting ambition, great ability, and extensive legislative experience, gave assurance that all the great powers of the Chair would be employed without scruple to enact laws that would in effect repeat if necessary the horrors of reconstruction in the Southern States and disfranchise in their practical operation the Democratic States, well knowing at the time that the Democratic party was composed mainly of the white people of the United States.

The next step taken was to overturn the usages of Congress maintained since it first met under the Constitution, as to its parliamentary rules of proceeding, and in the most insidious way, under the pretext of securing more rapid dispatch of business, and against the violent and indignant efforts and protest of all those from this side of the House, rudely and insolently broke down all the constitutional barriers thrown about the parliamentary proceedings of this body for the protection of minorities and to insure the country against hasty and ill understood legislation, and by a Draconian code made it possible for the Speaker and two others selected for their subservience to his will, known as the majority of the Committee on Rules, to absolutely control the legislation of the country.

The result so far has sorrowfully proven that these conspirators had builded even better than they knew. The Speaker has proven himself equal to every demand made upon him. The incarnation of the bigotry and intolerance of his own sectional party, he defies all the traditions that for more than a century have hedged around the lofty chair he occupies. Oblivious of the fact that the gavel was placed in his hands as a symbol of the authority to be wielded in promoting the transaction of the public business with impartiality as Speaker, not as politician, as patriot, not as partisan, he defies all precedent, and, shamelessly disregarding the rights of the minority upon the floor, like the Tsars of Muscovy, governs his own trembling subjects by imperial ukase and enforces obedience on their side of the House with political knout and lash.

Having secured the Speaker's chair, the next important step to be taken was to secure a "good working majority," and to this end the majority of the Committee on Elections was evidently warned to proceed at once to increase the Republican majority, and however repugnant this ukase may have been to some of them, yet well they knew the political knout awaited any disobedience. By prior orders, evidently promulgated from the headquarters of the Republican party, eighteen victims had been selected from the ranks of the Democrats elected to the Fifty-first Congress, all of whom, or a sufficient number to answer the purpose, were to be sacrificed to appease the insatiate greed of the Molochs of that sectional party which affects to despise and spits upon the Constitution of our fathers and in this Hall impiously mocks at their traditions.

Not finding it really necessary to do so, and becoming alarmed at the roar of indignant protest coming up from the people and the unbought press of the country, with a show of virtue and a mock display of magnanimity, a few are permitted to remain.

The fact, however, remains, that if this infamous measure obtains in this House it will in all probability be due to the presence here of those persons who have by the triumvirs been appointed to represent the vacancies thus created.

And now, sir, as the action of the majority of that committee and their reports of outrages at the various polls in the South have evidently been relied upon, judging from the tenor of this debate, to manufacture reasons to present to the people in extenuation of the deep damnation of their unconstitutional action, should this bill pass—as one of the minority of that committee, taking an active and anxious interest in all its proceedings, I declare before this House and the country there can not be found, I believe upon this continent, a jury of intelligent, disinterested, impartial, unbiased men, who, upon a full hearing of all the testimony in any or all of the cases presented to that committee, would find, as the majority of that committee has found, in the vacated seats.

I repeat, there is no good reason for disturbing the existing law upon this subject; the people do not ask it; they do not want it.

Do you believe that the people of this country are ready to assume a burden of more than ten millions of additional taxation, in excess of the incredible amounts with which they are menaced by the McKinley bill? Do you believe they want an enormous army of perhaps a quarter of a million of janizaries of the Republican party billeted upon them to hector them on election day and thwart their will when expressed at the polls, in the name of Southern outrages, which they know, as we all know, are false?

Are the owners of the millions of capital which has in a steady stream been pouring into the New South ever since the downfall of the carpet-bagger and the scalawag prepared to behold and not rebuke this second attempt to paint hell upon the Southern sky, to the end that the triumvirs may still reign here, autocratic and overbearing as those of ancient Rome, their exemplars and their prototypes?

I do not believe it. I am certain it is not true in the great West. There are none but imaginary lines separating State lines out there, in spirit as well as in fact. Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska are in all material things the same. We can take care of our own elections in Missouri, for a part of which I am commissioned to speak. We are not rich enough in the "Platte Purchase" to help pay, if we can help it, ten or may be twenty millions of dollars every two years, in addition to what we already pay and will have to pay under your McKinley bill, if you pass it in the Senate, in addition to our State, county, school, and municipal taxes. This bill makes us pay double for election expenses.

While the people will be taxed the enormous amount spoken of to carry on these elections under Federal control, to keep up the immense army of fresh office-holders, as supervisors, United States deputy marshals, and the like, no abatement is made in the State expense for the same purpose; both sets of officers will have to be paid.

I denounce again this infamous measure in the name of the people of my district, without respect to party. I denounce it because the Constitution of the United States provides that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States," and this measure practically places the election in the hands of a returning board of partisan canvassers.

I denounce the extravagance of the measure again and again. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the Platte purchase in Missouri, which I am so proud here to represent, though they inhabit the fairest, richest country the sun looks down upon in its course, yet, in common with the other agricultural districts in the West, it bears a heavy burden of taxation now, more than it ought to carry, and we can not, will not if we can help it, permit the Federal Government, the State government, or any other government found in our complex system of government to confiscate any more of our property by taxation unnecessarily.

Why, sir, it is estimated that to carry out the provisions of this bill it will require from one and a half to two and a half millions of dollars for chief supervisors alone; that it will cost from six to eight millions of dollars for supervisors, and from five all the way to ten millions of dollars for deputy marshals; and all of that for what? In order that the Republican party may continue to harass the poor people of the United States with their baleful financial legislation and load them down with taxes until you have all the people of the States, your friends with your enemies alike, at the verge of bankruptcy.

Why, sir, these millions you propose to add to the already intolerable burdens of our taxation are nothing more than a political assessment in the interest of your party, to be handed over to the myriad "blocks of five" to be established hereafter all over the country under the sanction of law, to run the elections of the country. The much-talked-of surplus is rapidly vanishing. The people will soon have no money in the Treasury at all for the ordinary expenses of the Government. Hardly a day passes that you do not find some new object or invent some new scheme to squander the people's money.

An old Roman maxim declares that the "gods first make mad those whom they wish to destroy." Another tells us the Mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small.

No reflecting person can calmly and in the light of the financial affairs of this country read over this bill without coming to the conclusion that its promoters and supporters are either drunk or mad with the power they unfortunately possess, or that they desire deliberately to revolutionize and mexicanize our Government.

We ask for free coinage of silver, and you give us a Federal election force bill. We ask for a reduction of taxation, and you give us a McKinley bill. We ask that the people of the States may be restored to their ancient rights under the Constitution and be permitted, unmolested by Federal power, to work out the problem of their own destiny, and you threaten with another election bill, called the McComas bill, which is designed to take from the State Legislatures the power to redistrict their own territory into Congressional districts, and hand it over to be consolidated with the other usurped Federal powers with more taxation barking at its heels.

The Fifty-first Congress will in future time be known and remembered as the one of "infamous memory;" for certainly no assemblage in the guise of a deliberative body has ever convened in this or the mother country better entitled to the appellation. It has made haste to work for its purposes every doubtful power in the Constitution. It has tried every bolt and rivet in its armor. No usage has been too ancient and no construction too well settled to withstand their fierce attack in the interest of mere sectional party advantage. It has acted in this House as if they knew their tenure was weak and their time short. With indecent haste it has sought with feverish anxiety to perform that which its leaders knew they would perhaps never have an opportunity again to do.

To those who, like myself, have been taught to avouch the great deeds and venerate the sacred names of the fathers, these murderous attacks upon the result of all their toils and sufferings are especially painful.

One of my ancestors fell at Camden in the Southern department under Greene and commingled his blood on that ill-fated field with that of Baron De Kalb. Another was in the Continental line when Cornwallis delivered up his sword at Yorktown; and thus in war and in peace, in the field and in the council, on the land and on the sea, my people have always been true to the principles of civil and religious liberty, and their veneration for every provision of the Constitution has been sincere and deep, and I, their descendant, can not witness these baleful proceedings without feeling and giving expression to my horror and indignation.

Before the sun goes down to-morrow we will know whether this parricidal act is to be performed; if it is, Mr. Speaker, when the storm of passion has swept past, I know many, many a Representative will live to regret the part he has performed here; if it is to be so, and you pass this force bill, then shall it stand, like the barren fig tree that Christ cursed on his way to Jerusalem, blackened and blasted and withered, at once a monument of the basest ingratitude of faithless sons for the work of their noble fathers, and as a mark to point out the place where fell forever the Republican party. [Continued applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I rise to address the House on the pending measure after so many distinguished gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber have discussed its provisions much more elaborately than the time allotted will permit me to do; and I would not now say anything if I did not feel impelled by a sense of duty to thus publicly enter my protest against its passage.

While I do not charge the framers of the bill with dissimulation or with having purposely employed their art and skill in draughting it so as to conceal its real intent and purpose or to cover from view the extent and scope to which its sweeping provisions may be carried, yet it can not be denied, as it is evident to every one who has carefully read the bill, that it is extremely complex in its provisions and its meaning in many respects is obscure and uncertain, and it is therefore calculated to deceive and mislead those who have failed to give it that thoughtful consideration which its importance demands.

But a careful study of its provisions clearly discloses the fact that the election machinery provided for in the bill is intended to be employed only in the South and in a few Northern cities where it can be made to subserve the interests of the Republican party. And right here it may be well to remark that I see no adequate remedy for the people whose voice at elections may be suppressed by the fraud and villainy of those who may be intrusted with the construction and execution of this bill, if it should become a law.

Mr. Speaker, this measure is one of such paramount importance, one that will so seriously affect the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the people of a large section of this Union; one that is fraught with so many evils and dangers to that section of our country which every Southerner loves and cherishes with ardent devotion; one that is so apt to open afresh the wounds that are almost healed; one that is so well calculated to revive the memories of the past and to arouse anew the animosities which we had hoped were buried by the war forever; a measure so likely to beget and engender hatred and strife between the races that are now living peacefully and happily together, that I ask gentlemen on the other side to pause and consider the wrong they will do if they vote for this bill, not only to the people of the South, but the wrong they will do to republican institutions and to local government in the States.

But, Mr. Speaker, why appeal to gentlemen who are bound down by caucus pledges to support a measure, not because it is right, but because it is a party measure and necessary to continue their party in power? In reply to numerous charges from this side of the House, several gentlemen on that side have disclaimed that the bill is intended to be sectional or partisan in its application, but assert that it is meant to apply to all sections alike, and that its only object is to secure fair elections and an honest count.

But, Mr. Speaker, the insincerity of these gentlemen came to the surface two days ago when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], who is as staunch a Republican as can be found on that side of the House, but who is opposed to this bill, offered an amendment requiring the enforcement of the provisions of this bill, if it should become a law, in every Congressional district in the United States.

This proposition brought terror and dismay into Republican ranks, and the same gentlemen who had been so loud in their praises of the fairness and justness and non-partisan character of the measure, fought the amendment with might and main, and with the aid of the Speaker's parliamentary law succeeded in delaying a vote on the amendment until their forces could be rallied on the next day to defeat it.

The real purpose and design of the Republican party in urging the passage of this measure is too apparent to deceive anybody. Every one knows that the bill was deliberately framed for the purpose of controlling the elections in the South and in the doubtful districts of the North, and this fact is so clear and unmistakable that the country can not long remain in ignorance of the designs which the Republican party has upon the rights of the States and the liberties of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the advocates of this bill have mainly relied upon partisan newspaper accounts and the evidence (much of which is hearsay) in contested-election cases to justify this legislation. They never refer to wrongs committed elsewhere than in the South. Their speeches forcibly remind me of the old fable of the fox whose depredations upon the beasts of the forest and fowls of the air had become so outrageous that he was finally called to an account. When arraigned before the king of the forest many witnesses appeared and testified against him. Some detailed at length the wrongs and injuries they had suffered at his hands; others, in mournful and pathetic tones, related their anguish of mind resulting from the loss of kindred and friends who had fallen a prey to his ravenous appetite. The fox neither confessed his crimes nor entered the plea of not guilty, but contented himself with a relation of the crimes and misdemeanors which had been committed by the witnesses who had testified against him.

So it is with the Republican party. That party has been charged with robbing the people of their choice of a President in 1876 by fraud. It has been charged with corrupting hundreds and perhaps thousands of voters in "blocks of five" by the use of money at the polls in 1888; it has been charged with every character of violation of the election laws; yet that party neither confesses nor pleads not guilty, but contents itself with counter charges of fraud, ballot-box-stuffing, and intimidation of voters on our part.

This might be well enough and perhaps justifiable if the party was sincere and would agree that the provisions of this bill should be made to apply to all sections alike. But not so with the leaders of the Republican party. They are not willing to do unto themselves as they would do unto us, and therefore they bring in a bill which condemns our sins and justifies their iniquities.

Mr. Speaker, the Good Book tells us there was a sect of the Jews called the Pharisees who were wont to pray standing in the synagogues and on the street corners, and who thanked God they were not like other men. We are told by the same high authority that our Savior in addressing them called them vipers and hypocrites, and told them that they would neither enter the kingdom of heaven themselves nor permit others to enter therein; that they had put on the robes of righteousness, and like whited sepulchers appeared beautiful without, while within they were filled with corruption, hypocrisy, and iniquity.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have politicians to-day who, clothed in the garments of peace and justice, proclaim from the rostrum and in the Halls of Congress their own purity and righteousness and outwardly appear honest and patriotic, yet within there lurks the demon of iniquity and hypocrisy, which, unchained, would destroy local self-government in the States, engender strife and contention between classes and races, and rob the people of their substance as well as of their liberty.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to be unfair or unjust to any one or to the Republican party, but when I see a deliberate purpose and a fixed design on the part of gentlemen on the other side to enact a law for my section of the country which they are not willing to have applied to their own districts, I am compelled to say their action is unfair, unpatriotic, and wanting in that generosity and magnanimity that should characterize the action of the majority towards the minority. Uriah Heep was "umble" and pretended to be just and generous, yet his heart was filled with hatred and malignity.

I trust our Republican friends are not actuated by any such feelings; but the unanimity with which they give their support to this bill convinces me that there is something more at the bottom of this legislation than the mere desire, or pretended desire, to protect the negro in his political rights. There has been but one gentleman on that side [Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois] who has admitted that he wanted this law put in force in his own district, and I doubt if he would have admitted this much if he did not live in the Democratic city of Chicago.

I repeat, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the real purpose and design of this legislation is to control the elections in the South and in a few doubtful districts in the North, and to justify this Federal interference with State elections it is pretended that the negro is denied the privileges granted him by the amendments to the Constitution. Mr. Speaker, that there is no occasion for such interference is shown by the fact that peace and tranquillity prevail all over this land, as well in the South as in the North.

Perfect good-will and kindly feelings exist between the races everywhere, so far, at least, as the House has any information on the subject; and such relations would continue to exist forever were it not for a few mean and despicable characters who either reside in the South or are sent there on the eve of an election, and who organize the negroes into secret societies, where, unmolested, they preach the gospel of envy in a strong government, and favoring as they have from the hour of its birth (and which finds a strong and striking illustration in this bill) consolidation of all possible power in the Federal Government at the expense of the States, it is no wonder it finds itself more than a million of white votes in the minority in this country. I denounce this bill as revolutionary in all its tendencies and designed for no other purpose on earth than to perpetuate power in the hands of that party.

The incarnation of the bigotry and intolerance of his own sectional party, he defies all the traditions that for more than a century have hedged around the lofty chair he occupies. Oblivious of the fact that the gavel was placed in his hands as a symbol of the authority to be wielded in promoting the transaction of the public business with impartiality as Speaker, not as politician, as patriot, not as partisan, he defies all precedent, and, shamelessly disregarding the rights of the minority upon the floor, like the Tsars of Muscovy, governs his own trembling subjects by imperial ukase and enforces obedience on their side of the House with political knout and lash.

Having secured the Speaker's chair, the next important step to be taken was to secure a "good working majority," and to this end the majority of the Committee on Elections was evidently warned to proceed at once to increase the Republican majority, and how-ever repugnant this ukase may have been to some of them, yet well they knew the political knout awaited any disobedience. By prior orders, evidently promulgated from the headquarters of the Republican party, eighteen victims had been selected from the ranks of the Democrats elected to the Fifty-first Congress, all of whom, or a sufficient number to answer the purpose, were to be sacrificed to appease the insatiate greed of the Molochs of that sectional party which affects to despise and spits upon the Constitution of our fathers and in this Hall impiously mocks at their traditions.

Not finding it really necessary to do so, and becoming alarmed at the roar of indignant protest coming up from the people and the unbought press of the country, with a show of virtue and a mock display of magnanimity, a few are permitted to remain.

The fact, however, remains, that if this infamous measure obtains in this House it will in all probability be due to the presence here of those persons who have by the triumvirs been appointed to represent the vacancies thus created.

And now, sir, as the action of the majority of that committee and their reports of outrages at the various polls in the South have evidently been relied upon, judging from the tenor of this debate, to manufacture reasons to present to the people in extenuation of the deep damnation of their unconstitutional action, should this bill pass—as one of the minority of that committee, taking an active and anxious interest in all its proceedings, I declare before this House and the country there can not be found, I believe upon this continent, a jury of intelligent, disinterested, impartial, unbiased men, who, upon a full hearing of all the testimony in any or all of the cases presented to that committee, would find, as the majority of that committee has found, in the vacated seats.

I repeat, there is no good reason for disturbing the existing law upon this subject; the people do not ask it; they do not want it.

Do you believe that the people of this country are ready to assume a burden of more than ten millions of additional taxation, in excess of the incredible amounts with which they are menaced by the McKinley bill? Do you believe they want an enormous army of perhaps a quarter of a million of janizaries of the Republican party billeted upon them to hector them on election day and thwart their will when expressed at the polls, in the name of Southern outrages, which they know, as we all know, are false?

Are the owners of the millions of capital which has in a steady stream been pouring into the New South ever since the downfall of the carpet-bagger and the scalawag prepared to behold and not rebuke this second attempt to paint hell upon the Southern sky, to the end that the triumvirs may still reign here, autocratic and overbearing as those of ancient Rome, their exemplars and their prototypes?

I do not believe it. I am certain it is not true in the great West. There are none but imaginary lines separating State lines out there, in spirit as well as in fact. Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska are in all material things the same. We can take care of our own elections in Missouri, for a part of which I am commissioned to speak. We are not rich enough in the "Platte Purchase" to help pay, if we can help it, ten or may be twenty millions of dollars every two years, in addition to what we already pay and will have to pay under your McKinley bill, if you pass it in the Senate, in addition to our State, county, school, and municipal taxes. This bill makes us pay double for election expenses.

While the people will be taxed the enormous amount spoken of to carry on these elections under Federal control, to keep up the immense army of fresh office-holders, as supervisors, United States deputy marshals, and the like, no abatement is made in the State expense for the same purpose; both sets of officers will have to be paid.

I denounce again this infamous measure in the name of the people of my district, without respect to party. I denounce it because the Constitution of the United States provides that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States," and this measure practically places the election in the hands of a returning board of partisan canvassers.

I denounce the extravagance of the measure again and again. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the Platte purchase in Missouri, which I am so proud here to represent, though they inhabit the fairest, richest country the sun looks down upon in its course, yet, in common with the other agricultural districts in the West, it bears a heavy burden of taxation now, more than it ought to carry, and we can not, will not if we can help it, permit the Federal Government, the State government, or any other government found in our complex system of government to confiscate any more of our property by taxation unnecessarily.

Why, sir, it is estimated that to carry out the provisions of this bill it will require from one and a half to two and a half millions of dollars for chief supervisors alone; that it will cost from six to eight millions of dollars for supervisors, and from five all the way to ten millions of dollars for deputy marshals; and all of that for what? In order that the Republican party may continue to harass the poor people of the United States with their baleful financial legislation and load them down with taxes until you have all the people of the States, your friends with your enemies alike, at the verge of bankruptcy.

Why, sir, these millions you propose to add to the already intolerable burdens of our taxation are nothing more than a political assessment in the interest of your party, to be handed over to the myriad "blocks of five" to be established hereafter all over the country under the sanction of law, to run the elections of the country. The much-talked-of surplus is rapidly vanishing. The people will soon have no money in the Treasury at all for the ordinary expenses of the Government. Hardly a day passes that you do not find some new object or invent some new scheme to squander the people's money.

An old Roman maxim declares that the "gods first make mad those whom they wish to destroy." Another tells us the

* * * Mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small.

No reflecting person can calmly and in the light of the financial affairs of this country read over this bill without coming to the conclusion that its promoters and supporters are either drunk or mad with the power they unfortunately possess, or that they desire deliberately to revolutionize and mexicanize our Government.

We ask for free coinage of silver, and you give us a Federal election force bill. We ask for a reduction of taxation, and you give us a McKinley bill. We ask that the people of the States may be restored to their ancient rights under the Constitution and be permitted, unmolested by Federal power, to work out the problem of their own destiny, and you threaten with another election bill, called the McComas bill, which is designed to take from the State Legislatures the power to redistrict their own territory into Congressional districts, and hand it over to be consolidated with the other usurped Federal powers with more taxation barking at its heels.

The Fifty-first Congress will in future time be known and remembered as the one of "infamous memory;" for certainly no assemblage in the guise of a deliberative body has ever convened in this or the mother country better entitled to the appellation. It has made haste to work for its purposes every doubtful power in the Constitution. It has tried every bolt and rivet in its armor. No usage has been too ancient and no construction too well settled to withstand their fierce attack in the interest of mere sectional party advantage. It has acted in this House as if they knew their tenure was weak and their time short. With indecent haste it has sought with feverish anxiety to perform that which its leaders knew they would perhaps never have an opportunity again to do.

To those who, like myself, have been taught to avouch the great deeds and venerate the sacred names of the fathers, these murderous attacks upon the result of all their toils and sufferings are especially painful.

One of my ancestors fell at Camden in the Southern department under Greene and commingled his blood on that ill-fated field with that of Baron De Kalb. Another was in the Continental line when Cornwallis delivered up his sword at Yorktown; and thus in war and in peace, in the field and in the council, on the land and on the sea, my people have always been true to the principles of civil and religious liberty, and their veneration for every provision of the Constitution has been sincere and deep, and I, their descendant, can not witness these baleful proceedings without feeling and giving expression to my horror and indignation.

Before the sun goes down to-morrow we will know whether this parietal act is to be performed; if it is, Mr. Speaker, when the storm of passion has swept past, I know many, many a Representative will live to regret the part he has performed here; if it is to be so, and you pass this force bill, then shall it stand, like the barren fig tree that Christ cursed on his way to Jerusalem, blackened and blasted and withered, at once a monument of the basest ingratitude of faithless sons for the work of their noble fathers, and as a mark to point out the place where fell forever the Republican party. [Continued applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I rise to address the House on the pending measure after so many distinguished gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber have discussed its provisions much more elaborately than the time allotted will permit me to do; and I would not now say anything if I did not feel impelled by a sense of duty to thus publicly enter my protest against its passage.

While I do not charge the framers of the bill with dissimulation or with having purposely employed their art and skill in draughting it so as to conceal its real intent and purpose or to cover from view the extent and scope to which its sweeping provisions may be carried, yet it can not be denied, as it is evident to every one who has carefully read the bill, that it is extremely complex in its provisions and its meaning in many respects is obscure and uncertain, and it is therefore calculated to deceive and mislead those who have failed to give it that thoughtful consideration which its importance demands.

But a careful study of its provisions clearly discloses the fact that the election machinery provided for in the bill is intended to be employed only in the South and in a few Northern cities where it can be made to subserve the interests of the Republican party. And right here it may be well to remark that I see no adequate remedy for the people whose voice at elections may be suppressed by the fraud and villainy of those who may be intrusted with the construction and execution of this bill, if it should become a law.

Mr. Speaker, this measure is one of such paramount importance, one that will so seriously affect the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the people of a large section of this Union; one that is fraught with so many evils and dangers to that section of our country which every Southerner loves and cherishes with ardent devotion; one that is so apt to open afresh the wounds that are almost healed; one that is so well calculated to revive the memories of the past and to arouse anew the animosities which we had hoped were buried by the war forever; a measure so likely to beget and engender hatred and strife between the races that are now living peacefully and happily together, that I ask gentlemen on the other side to pause and consider the wrong they will do if they vote for this bill, not only to the people of the South, but the wrong they will do to republican institutions and to local government in the States.

But, Mr. Speaker, why appeal to gentlemen who are bound down by caucus pledges to support a measure, not because it is right, but because it is a party measure and necessary to continue their party in power? In reply to numerous charges from this side of the House, several gentlemen on that side have disclaimed that the bill is intended to be sectional or partisan in its application, but assert that it is meant to apply to all sections alike, and that its only object is to secure fair elections and an honest count.

But, Mr. Speaker, the insincerity of these gentlemen came to the surface two days ago when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], who is as staunch a Republican as can be found on that side of the House, but who is opposed to this bill, offered an amendment requiring the enforcement of the provisions of this bill, if it should become a law, in every Congressional district in the United States.

This proposition brought terror and dismay into Republican ranks, and the same gentlemen who had been so loud in their praises of the fairness and justness and non-partisan character of the measure, sought the amendment with might and main, and with the aid of the Speaker's parliamentary law succeeded in delaying a vote on the amendment until their forces could be rallied on the next day to defeat it.

The real purpose and design of the Republican party in urging the passage of this measure is too apparent to deceive anybody. Every one knows that the bill was deliberately framed for the purpose of controlling the elections in the South and in the doubtful districts of the North, and this fact is so clear and unmistakable that the country can not long remain in ignorance of the designs which the Republican party has upon the rights of the States and the liberties of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the advocates of this bill have mainly relied upon partisan newspaper accounts and the evidence (much of which is hearsay) in contested-election cases to justify this legislation. They never refer to wrongs committed elsewhere than in the South. Their speeches forcibly remind me of the old fable of the fox whose depredations upon the beasts of the forest and fowls of the air had become so outrageous that he was finally called to an account. When arraigned before the king of the forest many witnesses appeared and testified against him. Some detailed at length the wrongs and injuries they had suffered at his hands; others, in mournful and pathetic tones, related their anguish of mind resulting from the loss of kindred and friends who had fallen a prey to his ravenous appetite. The fox neither confessed his crimes nor entered the plea of not guilty, but contented himself with a relation of the crimes and misdemeanors which had been committed by the witnesses who had testified against him.

So it is with the Republican party. That party has been charged with robbing the people of their choice of a President in 1876 by fraud. It has been charged with corrupting hundreds and perhaps thousands of voters in "blocks of five" by the use of money at the polls in 1888; it has been charged with every character of violation of the election laws; yet that party neither confesses nor pleads not guilty, but contents itself with counter charges of fraud, ballot-box-stuffing, and intimidation of voters on our part.

This might be well enough and perhaps justifiable if the party was sincere and would agree that the provisions of this bill should be made to apply to all sections alike. But not so with the leaders of the Republican party. They are not willing to do unto themselves as they would do unto us, and therefore they bring in a bill which condemns our sins and justifies their iniquities.

Mr. Speaker, the Good Book tells us there was a sect of the Jews called the Pharisees who were wont to pray standing in the synagogues and on the street corners, and who thanked God they were not like other men. We are told by the same high authority that our Savior in addressing them called them vipers and hypocrites, and told them that they would neither enter the kingdom of heaven themselves nor permit others to enter therein; that they had put on the robes of righteousness, and like whitened sepulchers appeared beautiful without, while within they were filled with corruption, hypocrisy, and iniquity.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have politicians to-day who, clothed in the garments of peace and justice, proclaim from the rostrum and in the Halls of Congress their own purity and righteousness and outwardly appear honest and patriotic, yet within there lurks the demon of iniquity and hypocrisy, which, unchained, would destroy local self-government in the States, engender strife and contention between classes and races, and rob the people of their substance as well as of their liberty.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to be unfair or unjust to any one or to the Republican party, but when I see a deliberate purpose and a fixed design on the part of gentlemen on the other side to enact a law for my section of the country which they are not willing to have applied to their own districts, I am compelled to say their action is unfair, unpatriotic, and wanting in that generosity and magnanimity that should characterize the action of the majority towards the minority. Uriah Heep was "umble" and pretended to be just and generous, yet his heart was filled with hatred and malignity.

I trust our Republican friends are not actuated by any such feelings; but the unanimity with which they give their support to this bill convinces me that there is something more at the bottom of this legislation than the mere desire, or pretended desire, to protect the negro in his political rights. There has been but one gentleman on that side [Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois] who has admitted that he wanted this law put in force in his own district, and I doubt if he would have admitted this much if he did not live in the Democratic city of Chicago.

I repeat, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the real purpose and design of this legislation is to control the elections in the South and in a few doubtful districts in the North, and to justify this Federal interference with State elections it is pretended that the negro is denied the privileges granted him by the amendments to the Constitution. Mr. Speaker, that there is no occasion for such interference is shown by the fact that peace and tranquillity prevail all over this land, as well in the South as in the North.

Perfect good-will and kindly feelings exist between the races everywhere, so far, at least, as the House has any information on the subject; and such relations would continue to exist forever were it not for a few mean and despicable characters who either reside in the South or are sent there on the eve of an election, and who organize the negroes into secret societies, where, unmolested, they preach the gospel of envy and hate toward their white neighbors and plan schemes for producing strikes and open rupture between them.

Such detestable characters, Mr. Speaker, have been, in my judgment, instrumental in producing nine-tenths of the riots and conflicts that have arisen between the races in the Southern country, and should be held responsible for the bloodshed that has followed. The relations of the whites and blacks are so well understood by both races that there ought not to be, and there would not be, any clash or conflict between them if they could be let alone.

I am aware that there are a few alarmists and sensational wisacres, not to say cranks, both North and South, who have tried to impress upon the country the belief that there exists a great problem to be solved—a negro problem—but I say to this House and to the country there is no such problem, or, if there is, it is not difficult of solution, and it is this:

Let Congress pursue the policy of non-intervention in the affairs of the States; keep within constitutional limitations; cease encroaching on the rights of the States and the people thereof; stop trying to force social equality by legislation; let the whites and the blacks alone, and as sure as God reigns supreme the intelligent and conservative elements of both races, between whom the most friendly and cordial business relations now exist, will solve whatever problem some suppose may exist.

But, Mr. Speaker, if this election bill should become a law, and the Congressional districts of the South are to be filled with Republican supervisors, which may be done on the petition of one hundred voters, and these supervisors go and canvass among the people and furnish and obtain information, etc., as they are required to do in cities of 20,000 inhabitants or more, for a period of five weeks preceding the election, making a house-to-house canvass, to use the language of this bill, then, sir, I can imagine there might arise such a complicated condition of affairs as to constitute a problem that would not be of easy solution.

This bill requires that there shall be three Federal supervisors for each voting-precinct, only two of whom shall belong to the same political party, but these two constitute a quorum, and as they will be Republicans the whole machinery created by the bill is placed in the hands of that party. These supervisors are not amenable to the laws of the States for frauds or violations of the State election laws, and to assure these officials immunity from punishment for crime committed against the State or United States laws, the bill changes the method of drawing juries, and has placed the same in the hands of three Republican jury commissioners, who may, if they choose, secure a friendly jury for any supervisor who may have outraged justice and decency by ballot-box-stuffing, making false returns, or any other crime he may have committed.

Mr. Speaker, there is another section of this bill which shows its meanness and its partisan character; that is, the supervisors are not required to be citizens and voters of the precinct where they are appointed to supervise an election, nor are they even required to be citizens of the county where they are appointed to serve, a citizenship in the district being sufficient.

Thus men who are in no wise identified with the people, men who are not amenable to the laws of the State, men who may be without honor or honesty, men whose hands may be stained with the blood of our fellow-citizens, men who may have at their command any number of deputy United States marshals, and may even command the service of the military and naval forces of the Government, are appointed over us to hold our elections! And if they see proper they can put the returns of the election in their pocket and make no returns of the result, or if they prefer, take the ballot-box to another county to count the votes, as they did in my own county some years ago, and still be shielded from prosecution and punishment by a corrupt set of jury commissioners.

And why is all this? Is it done to insult or humiliate our people? Are our people less honorable or honest than the people of Maine or Massachusetts? I deny it, and assert that in the settled portions of the great State which I in part represent life and property are as secure and as well protected as in any part of these United States, and the people, without regard to race or previous condition, are in as full and complete enjoyment of civil, religious, and political freedom as any people in the world.

But some one may say that this bill when enacted into a law is not intended to apply to such a district as the one I have the honor to represent. In reply I will say that there is not a Congressional district in the United States where the Republicans are in the minority that one hundred men can not be found who will petition for the enforcement of this law, if for no other reason than to secure the compensation paid to the supervisors, marshals, etc., which is $5 per day.

The minority of the committee, after careful examination, have estimated that if the provisions of this bill should be made applicable to all of the Congressional districts throughout the United States it would cost the Government for each election $10,000,000. There are three hundred and thirty Congressional districts, and if the sum aforesaid was equally distributed among them each would receive over $30,000.

To suppose that the Southern Republican politicians would let such an opportunity to replenish their exchequer pass without availing themselves of the "boodle" is as unreasonable as to suppose the brook trout would not nab a minnow.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth section of Article I of the Constitution, which is as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators—interpreted in the light of the debates of the fathers of the Constitution and of the Legislatures of the States that ratified it, means that the States shall primarily control the elections for Senators and Representatives by such laws as their Legislatures shall prescribe; but in case the States fail or refuse to send up their Representatives the Congress may make laws regulating the election of members or may alter State laws, etc., and this power is given in order to perpetuate the Government and prevent its destruction by the failure and refusal of the States to act. That this has been the settled construction of this clause of the Constitution is evidenced by the fact that for a hundred years the Congress has not sought to interfere with the States' control of the elections, except temporarily under the reconstruction acts providing for the readmission of the seceding States.

It is not pretended now that any of the States have failed to perform their duty to the General Government or have refused to provide just and fair election laws for the election of Senators and Representatives, and certainly it has not been shown that there exists anywhere such a condition of things as will warrant Federal interference in State elections.

Even in the contested-election cases, if I do not err in my recollection, it has not been claimed that any violence was used or that voters were intimidated, except in the Cate case; and the alleged violence in that case occurred many months before the election came off. So, therefore, there can not be the slightest excuse for this legislation at this time, except it be to control the elections, regardless of the means employed, for party purposes.

I have substantially admitted that under certain circumstances Federal intervention in State affairs, in so far as to prescribe rules and regulations for the election of Senators and Representatives, would be justifiable, though I do not admit that there exists at this time any reason for such interference. But were I to admit all I would nevertheless hold that this bill confers powers and imposes duties upon supervisors unauthorized by the Constitution.

Congress has no power to prescribe the qualifications of electors. The power is reserved to the States, the only exception being that the States can not make any distinction on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; yet this bill undertakes to authorize the supervisors to receive the ballots of persons rejected by the State election officers, and to refuse to receive the votes of persons admitted to be qualified by the State officers. In this respect, as well as in many others, the bill is clearly unconstitutional.

It is intended to dominate and in some particulars to annul State election laws where State and Federal elections are held at the same time. In certain cases the supervisors are required to forward to the chief supervisor certain ballots that have been voted, which, if permitted by the State officers, will subject them to heavy penalties. Thus a conflict of State and Federal authority is produced, in which case the sovereign power of the State must yield to the usurped power of the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to foresee all the evils that will flow from the passage of this bill. It will produce gloomy and dark forebodings in the minds of our best people, who desire above all else peace and good government where they live. It will not only humiliate the people, but will provoke anger to send strangers who may be irresponsible and corrupt to preside over their elections. It may embitter men of different political faiths who are now friends. It may stir up strife and conflicts, engender hatred and malice, not only between the races, but between political parties, which may bring upon the country untold misery and suffering.

Mr. Speaker, the South is fast recovering from the effects of the war. She is on the high road to prosperity. Men of education, refinement, and wealth from all parts of the country—from the North, the East, and the West—of all political parties—Democrats, Republicans, Greenbackers, Prohibitionists, and non-partisans—are coming among us and employing their brain, muscle, and money in great enterprises and in developing the resources of the country.

They have come to stay; their personal and social relations with our people are close and cordial; their sons and daughters are marrying and being given in marriage to our sons and daughters. Why, then, Mr. Speaker, throw this apple of discord into our midst to disturb the happy situation?

There is no occasion or necessity for it. This bill will solve no problem, but will make problems to be solved by strife and bloodshed. No man, whether he comes from the North or the South, the East or the West, who is imbued with the principles of free republican institutions and who desires to see perpetuated the cardinal principles of the Constitution, which divides the powers of the Government into three co-ordinate branches—the executive, legislative, and judicial—can conscientiously support this bill, for the reason that it subordinates the legislative branch of the Government, or the election of the members thereof, to the supervision and control of the judiciary or its appointees.

The Constitution makes each House of Congress the judge of the election and qualifications of its members, but this bill provides for the seating of members on the certificates of supervisors and a board of canvassers appointed by circuit judges of the Federal courts. Thus the Constitution is violated by subordinating one branch of government to the power and influence of another, when the Constitution makes each independent of the other.

Mr. Jefferson, in a letter to Nathaniel Macon, written in 1821, said:

Our Government is now taking so steady a course as to show by what road it will pass to destruction, to wit, by consolidation first, and then corruption, its necessary consequence. The engine of consolidation will be the Federal judiciary; the two other braughes, the corrupting and corrupted instruments.

Mr. Speaker, we are about to see this prophecy fulfilled. I sincerely trust this House will not become the corrupting and corrupted instrument to hasten the Government on to ruin and destruction by clothing the Federal judiciary with the power to control the election of the other two branches of the Government.

[Mr. FEATHERSTON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan). The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STUMP] is now entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman will allow me to occupy the floor for a few minutes by unanimous consent before he begins, I shall be obliged to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules it can not be done. But the gentleman from Maryland has the right to yield such part of his time as he chooses.

Mr. MCRAE. The objection, as I understand, comes from the other side.

Mr. FEATHERSTON rose and addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STUMP] has the floor.

Mr. MCRAE. What was the remark of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FEATHERSTON]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STUMP] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MCRAE. I beg the Chair to let me hear the remark of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Both gentlemen are out of order, and must cease conversation.

[Mr. STUMP addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. YODER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOREY. Mr. Speaker, it is assumed by the Democratic side of this House that this bill is aimed at the Southern Congressional districts, and all arguments and objections to the bill are made on that line. It is argued that this is a sectional bill; that it does not operate alike in all the Congressional districts of the whole country. This claim is based on a provision of the bill which brings the law into operation in any district where it is petitioned for by a certain number of electors in that district. This is not an unusual thing in legislation. We have local-option laws in many of the States, as well as other laws that are brought into active operation in the different subdivisions of the States upon petition; and such a provision is found in the election laws of one State at least—the State of Pennsylvania.

I take it, therefore, that this is a law of general application and this objection to it can not be maintained. If I were to have my own choice of legislation on this subject I would prefer a general Federal election law, divorcing Federal from State elections, rather than the provisions of the bill under consideration. Either course is alike warranted by the Constitution.

I do not understand the constitutionality of this bill to be seriously questioned by the other side. It has been considered by the framers of this bill that the evils which are sought to be remedied can be as well reached by perfecting the present supervisors law, which has been in force in this country for nearly twenty years, and which like the law proposed in this bill is only put into active operation in the district upon petition.

It is thought that in this way the law can be used in districts where there is such fraud upon the ballot and such suppression of the vote as to nullify the will of the majority in those districts without incurring the expense of additional election machinery in the districts of the country where the expression of the will of the people is fairly and honestly ascertained and returned. At once the cry is raised that this is a sectional bill; that it is an assault by the North upon the South; that it is calculated and intended to precipitate a war of races. The entire Democratic representation from the North, as of old, is willingly harnessed to the Southern chariot, and that, with quickened pace, to the crack of the Southern whip. Why this cry of pain from the South?

Why this sudden fear of a war of races? Has any white voter in the South been deprived of his vote by the colored men? Certainly not. Why should the white men of the South constantly decry against a war of races? Has the white man of the South suffered in any such conflict? In it not always the colored man who gets hurt?

The distinguished manager of this debate on the Democratic side, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], in his opening for that side set the pace for his colleagues, North and South, and they have followed his lead without a break.

No man on that side, no Northern Democratic Representative, in all this discussion has dared to speak of any political right of the colored men that white men are bound to respect. They have followed their impetuous leader, this Hotspur from South Carolina, in his declaration that political power can not be shared on equal terms by the two races, that the white race must be supreme, and they wildly applauded when he called on high heaven to witness his unalterable devotion to this cause.

I quote his words from the RECORD:

But as to our own State, we know that the honest and intelligent people must either rule it or we must leave it; and for myself, gentlemen, in this presence and before the people of the United States and before that God who sits upon the circle of the heavens, in all reverence, but in all earnestness, I swear we will not leave it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is the home of our fathers. Their bones lie buried through many generations. They bought it with their blood when Concord and Lexington were the battle fields of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They have handed it down to us unimpaired; and, gentlemen, are we not our fathers' sons? Shall the blood first turn back in our veins, and shall we transmit to coming generations a great and noble State which has been overridden and downtrodden by a race whom God never intended should rule over us? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Who are "we?" Who are the "honest and intelligent people?" Who are they who must rule or leave the State, and who swear they will not leave it? It is for the white race that the gentleman speaks. His statesmanship is not broad enough to embrace all races of men who owe allegiance to our flag, and to whom our nation owes protection and defense.

His colleague [Mr. TILLMAN] said in this debate that nearly every decent white man in South Carolina is a Democrat.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, page 6223, volume 56, the same gentleman said:

But, gentlemen, you Republicans have still a fourth cause to strengthen your party zeal and to blind you to the merits of a contested election. That is the new propagandism you have been engaged in for the last twenty years of the doctrine of "universal fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man." In espousing that doctrine you have attempted to subvert the laws of God, and you have failed and will continue to fail.

The average agricultural negro at the South is not only a constitutional coward, and therefore prone to let his fears exaggerate even the slightest excitement or disturbance into a riot, but he is a moral bankrupt also, especially as to such small virtues as truth, honesty, and chastity.

Sir, it is on such assumptions as these that the doctrine of a white man's government is proclaimed on the floor of this House.

If these allegations were true, they would afford no reason for a nullification of the Constitution and a denial of the highest constitutional rights.

The preservation of the rights of the strong and powerful can be permanently maintained only by a jealous protection of the rights of the ignorant and weak. There can be no safety for the Republic and republican institutions when the rights of the people can be disregarded and trampled upon under a plea of race inferiority.

We have been fighting too long the battle for equal rights for all men to abandon the contest now and yield to the demand to be let alone of those who have set at naught the dearest right of the people, "the right preservative of all other rights," and who have defied and now defy the National Government in its efforts to make good to its humblest citizens in all the States the principles guaranteed to them by the great charter of American liberty.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], speaking of his State, says:

It is the home of our fathers. Their bones lie buried through many generations. They bought it with their blood when Concord and Lexington were the battle-fields of this country.

And he proposes to hand it down to future generations not "overridden and downtrodden by a race whom God never intended should rule over us."

Can not the colored man, using the gentleman's language, say: "It is the home of our fathers. Their bones lie buried there through many generations. Through years of unrequited toil they wrought out the material development of the State, and created her wealth while the gentleman and his fathers enjoyed the fruits of their unpaid labor. They bought it with their blood, 200,000 of them, at Fort Pillow and a hundred other fields, when Vicksburg, Charleston, Savannah, and Gettysburg were the battle-fields of the Republic and the Union.

"We were faithful to your wives and your children and your property during that great war for national life. Your success meant the continuance of our race in ignorance, degradation, and slavery. Your defeat meant freedom, education, civil and political equality, and an equal chance in the race of life for our people. While you fought to rivet our chains, we discharged with scrupulous fidelity the trusts that you committed to our care at your plantations and your homes.

"You did not think then that we were bankrupt as to truth, honesty, and chastity, and you can not truthfully say so now.

"You trusted to fear a race war. You trusted to our care those who were dearest to you, while you fought to perpetuate the bondage of our race, and no incendiary act can be charged to our people during that great war. We sent two hundred thousand of our race to contend against you in that great struggle. They did not resort to the knife and the torch, but met you on the open battle-fields of the Union."

A distinguished Democrat of Ohio has said "war legislation." This war brought freedom to the slave; it brought him citizenship of this great Republic; it brought him equality before the law; it brought him the elective franchise. It brought more than these things to the colored man.

With his freedom, and the new responsibilities of citizenship, there came to the colored man desire for education, for property, and for ownership of lands, in order that he might take and honorably maintain his position of a freeman among his fellows.

Let us judge the colored man not by what he was when he emerged from the shadow and degradation of bondage, but rather let us judge him by what he has done with his freedom. There is and there can be but one account to be rendered of these people.

There is a concurrence of testimony, much of it to be found in the arguments of the opponents of this bill, that these people have rapidly progressed in education; that they are industrious; that they are securing homes and acquiring that self-reliance which is befitting the citizens of the Republic. They are the labor supply of the South. That section has never prospered and developed as it has since its labor was free.

The colored Representatives on this floor have been educated and able men and have discharged their duties with credit to themselves and to their States. Representatives of this race are to be found occupying honorable places in all the walks of life. They are eager recipients of the benefits of the common schools. They have established and are successfully maintaining institutions for higher education.

At Oberlin and Wilberforce, in Ohio, they are yearly graduating young men and young women and sending them forth to instruct and lead their people into the higher walks of life. The University of Wilberforce, in my own district, has a curriculum ranging through the following departments: Classical, theological, normal, academic, preparatory, and music. It has enrolled more than three thousand students from all parts of the United States, from Canada, the West Indies, and India. It has sent into the world nearly one hundred graduates. Its graduates and undergraduates are laboring among their people in all parts of the Union, and especially in the Southern States, bringing to them light and knowledge, denied to them through many generations.

We have made them citizens and voters, and imposed on them all the duties and responsibilities of these high estates. We owe to them an equal chance with their white brothers to discharge their duties and to meet their responsibilities. We deny that the doctrine of "the universal fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man" is a new propagandism.

We deny that in espousing that doctrine we have failed and that we will continue to fail.

It is true we have been fighting that battle for more than twenty years, and we shall continue in that fight until "the right of citizens of the United States shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," and until every voter in this broad Union, in every State and precinct, is permitted to cast one ballot without let or hindrance and to have that ballot honestly counted as he cast it. Is this done in the South? Let the following facts answer.

Under the census of 1880 the Congressional apportionment was made on the basis of 151,911 population, or 30,000 voters to each Congressional district. The increase of population has largely increased the vote in all districts the country over.

Now, I append here a table of the elections in twenty-five districts in the Fiftieth Congress.

State.	District.	Representative.	Vote.	Scatter- ing.	Total vote.
Alabama	First	Jones	4,220	16	4,236

Do.	Fifth	Hemphill	4,696	5	4,701
Do.	Sixth	Dargan	4,411	58	4,469
Total			94,841	407	95,245

In these twenty-five districts there were cast only 94,841 Democratic votes, 407 scattering, and not one Republican vote was cast, or at least not one Republican vote was counted. The total vote cast was 95,245. If they had cast their full vote, as we do in Ohio, that vote would have been not less than 750,000 instead of 95,000.

In the election of 1888 for members of the Fifty-first Congress it took 40,000 voters in Ohio to elect one Congressman. In South Carolina in the same year it took only 11,000 voters to elect one Congressman. The total vote in South Carolina in 1888 for seven Congressmen was 76,375 votes. In Ohio in the same year the total vote for twenty-one Congressmen was 837,646 votes.

In the present Congress the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] received the suspiciously even number of 11,000 votes and had no opposition. He was elected to the Forty-ninth Congress, receiving 7,828 votes, no opposition; and to the Fiftieth Congress, receiving 2,411 votes, no opposition. Three times elected to the Congress of the United States and no man dared contest with him for the distinguished honor.

We do not understand this thing in Ohio. There are always with us an abundance, and even a plethora of gentlemen on both sides, not only able, but willing, and I may say anxious, to represent their districts in this great legislative body.

The inquiry will naturally arise why this condition exists. In the election for the Fiftieth Congress there were twenty-five districts in the South where the Democratic candidates had no opposition.

In the election for the Fifty-first Congress five Democratic members from Georgia and South Carolina were elected without opposition. The total Republican vote counted in seven districts in that State was 10,031 votes.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] who has led the opposition to this bill comes here with 9,559 votes, no opposition, 27 votes scattering; total, 9,586 votes. The people of the Seventh Ohio Congressional district in choosing their Representative in this body cast 34,268 votes. This Representative from South Carolina exercises four times as much power on this floor as any member from Ohio, when we consider the number of votes by which he is sent here.

The secret of the opposition to this bill is to be found in these facts: In the days of slavery three-fifths of the slaves were counted in the basis of Congressional representation. Now all the colored people are counted for representation and are not counted at the polls. In this way the South, when many districts are Republican, is made solidly Democratic. The following table tells the story more forcibly than any words I can use:

Fiftieth Congress, vote of 1886.

These figures tell their own story of votes suppressed by the thousands and hundreds of thousands.

Our friends from the South say the colored people there do not wish to vote; that they are tired of voting. We have little doubt they are tired of voting. They are tired of encountering perils greater than of war or pestilence in order to enjoy the privilege of freemen. That they do not wish to vote we do not believe. The colored man holds his franchise to vote in as high regard as any class of American citizens. To him it is the visible sign of his perfect emancipation from the bonds of slavery, which bound not only his body, but set limitations on his mental and moral growth.

Let us have free, fair, and honest elections, an untrammelled expression of the popular will. The people of the country demand this. Our party has declared for a free ballot and a fair count. Give us this, and all honest men will be satisfied. Every patriot desires to freely cast one vote and to have that vote counted as he cast it. He not only desires this for himself, but he desires it and will fight for it for every other voter in the land, however humble he may be.

Sir, the States of this Union may do as they please in respect to their own citizens, controlled only by the inhibition of the Constitution of the United States in its war amendments. They are responsible to themselves, to their people, and their God; but, sir, in this matter of Federal elections, when we come to elect members of this great national body, then the whole country is interested. Of what avail is it that in Ohio we go out and have an equal contest; that we fight our battles for supremacy in the various districts; that every man, black and white, rich and poor, is permitted to cast his vote, register his will, and that there the majority rules? Of what avail is it that we should carry on those equal contests when in other sections of our country that verdict is set aside by the suppression of the voice and votes of thousands of the citizens of those States? It is a matter in which we are all concerned. We have a right to know that in every Congressional district in this broad land there is a fair, free, and honest expression of the will of the voters in the selection of members of this House.

There have been instances in Northern districts, and there may be such instances in the future, where by fraud, violence, and corruption the will of the people has been thwarted. This law is applicable alike to such districts and can be invoked there as well as in the South.

It can be said of the North that in no district there is the doctrine of white supremacy proclaimed. Nowhere there is the vote of any race suppressed on account of race. If frauds are committed there these frauds are upon men, and not upon races of men.

There is one notable exception to this general condition which stands out in barbaric brutality, the imprisonment of the one hundred and fifty-two colored voters in the dungeon at Hammond street station in Cincinnati in 1884 by the Democratic party. The gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE and Mr. YODER] were unfortunate in bringing this hideous crime, which stands without a parallel in any Northern State, to public notice. Better had they asked the waves of oblivion to forever blot it from memory and from sight.

The gentlemen complain of the use of deputy marshals and supervisors in Cincinnati; and well they may, for their use prevented the success of a Democratic conspiracy to control the Congressional elections in her two districts by fraud and violence that year. Their repeaters and ballot-box stuffers were there from Chicago, Baltimore, Kentucky, and other places. They were there to show the people of Cincinnati how to carry on an election.

Nearly one thousand deputies were appointed by the Democratic sheriff to see that order was maintained while these worthies did their work. Among them were such names as "Link" Slattery, "Red" Ferrall, and "Cuckaloo" Murphy. They were met by the power of the United States Government, and the result was that the election was free and fair as any that was ever held, except the frauds committed in the name of the Democratic party.

Hon. John F. Follett, who was then a member of Congress from a Cincinnati district, but who was defeated for re-election at this election, afterwards presented a preamble and resolution in this House impeaching Lot Wright, United States marshal, of high crimes and misdemeanors at that election. A committee was appointed to investigate such charges and report to the House. The committee took six hundred pages of testimony, and they failed to show that a single illegal Republican vote had been cast at that election and they failed to show that a single legal Democratic voter had been prevented from voting at that election.

The Democratic majority of this committee of investigation, failing to find any fact on which they could convict Marshal Wright of the charges against him, contented themselves with a few general resolutions such as would be expected of a Democratic county convention and gracefully slid down out of view in the following words:

In view of the impracticable nature of impeachment proceedings, and especially at this late day of this Congress, your committee will not recommend the adoption of articles of impeachment in this case.

The committee ask leave to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, there were facts developed on the other side by this investigation, and these facts are the reason why that Democratic committee refused to recommend the adoption of articles of impeachment against Marshal Wright, for whom they had no love and upon whom they were burning with desire to wreak their vengeance for having uncovered, exposed, and defeated their conspiracy to carry the Cincinnati district.

But the power of the United States was not sufficient to prevent the commission of crime at that election. Colored voters were almost universally challenged. In many instances they were struck, pulled away from the polls, and driven therefrom with violence, when their right to vote was undoubted. One was struck on the head with a wagon-spoke; one, a bank messenger, was challenged, knocked down, and escaped, glad to get away with his life.

The testimony shows that at midnight the homes of peaceable colored citizens, many of whom had lived there for years, were invaded, and that they, one hundred and fifty-two in number, were marched by the police officers, under the direction of one Mullen, to the station-house where they were shut up and kept from midnight preceding the election until after 6 o'clock the day of the election, and for the sole purpose of depriving them of their right to vote. No charge was preferred against them, and they were turned out as soon as the polls closed.

Mullen was indicted, tried, and convicted for the offense before Judge Baxter, of the United States district court. His judicial utterances in pronouncing sentence upon Mullen are here quoted because the history of the election in its true inwardness would be otherwise incomplete:

The evidence of your guilt was so convincing that your zealous and able counsel voluntarily yielded its irresistible force, and with your acquiescence, manifested in open court, consented to the finding made by the jury. This finding thus obtained is a virtual confession by you that the arrest and imprisonment of the persons named were for the wrongful purpose alleged in the indictment.

Such an unprecedented invasion of the rights of American citizens by any one under any circumstances would be a grave violation of the criminal laws of the United States. But when it is remembered that you were at the time in the exercise of public authority, and acting under the obligations of an official oath requiring impartiality and integrity in the discharge of your duties, your infidelity to your official obligations seems to have been peculiarly flagitious, if not atrocious. You not only outraged the imprisoned parties, but you struck a traitorous blow to a fundamental and vital principle that underlies our republican institutions; and you did your work so noiselessly and expertly as to have eluded the vigilance of three thousand regular and special policemen, deputy sheriffs, and deputy marshals then on duty, and supposed to have been co-operating for the protection of all legal voters in the exercise of their legal rights, as well as the seventy-five thousand other citizens of this great central city, who (if we are to credit the city press) were so thoroughly solicitous on that occasion to preserve the purity of the ballot-box.

The sublime impudence of such a raid upon the constitutional rights of your fellows, in connection with its successful consummation, precludes the idea that the scheme was conceived and executed by you alone. That you had accomplices is manifest. You never would have ventured upon a scheme so full of danger, and from which you could in no event have derived any personal advantage, without assurances of co-operation from others. But your accomplices have thus far escaped detection and punishment.

Before his term of punishment had half expired, Mike Mullen was pardoned by President Cleveland. He was immediately restored to his old position on the Cincinnati police by the Democratic officials, and was promoted to be a lieutenant on that force. He was made a member of the Democratic State central committee. He headed the Hamilton County delegation in the convention which nominated the present Democratic governor of Ohio, and when he is dead he will be a Democratic saint. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I shall not discuss this bill, but will discuss the motives that have led up to the necessity for it upon the other side of this Chamber. Unquestionably it is the logical result of the situation in which they find themselves, after thirty years of control in this country. Commencing with Lincoln, in 1860, his plurality was 491,249, his minority 948,055 votes. In 1864 Mr. Lincoln's majority was 407,342. In 1868 Grant's majority was 305,458; in 1872 Grant's majority was 727,975; but in 1876 Tilden's majority was 157,020, while his plurality over Hayes was 250,918. From that day to this, through fourteen long years, the Republican party, with the aid of the colored vote that they could command, have never been other than a minority of the people of this nation.

In 1880 Mr. Garfield's plurality was 3,834; his minority 314,253. In 1884 Cleveland's plurality was 26,584; his minority 403,773, but Blaine's minority was 430,357. In 1888 Harrison's minority under Cleveland was 98,544, but his minority of the whole vote was 945,060. For twenty years the Republican party have cracked the party whip with more arrogance over the colored vote, as its political owner, than ever their original owners did in the days when they belonged to them. The Republicans crack the whip, I say, of political ownership, with a political arrogance that denies all toleration of possibility for a negro to become a Democrat or vote with the Democracy.

Yet in spite of all this arrogance and control, giving to the Republican party their actual vote, to-day they are, so far as the white vote is concerned, in a minority of 2,000,000.

Before the Republicans should attempt to pass a bill of this nature, if they are in good faith, they ought to be in a clear majority and there ought to be a demand for it coming from every part of the country. Yet the reverse is the fact; not one petition that I have heard of has been sent to Congress. In searching for Republican motives I give it as a fixed conviction that they are driven to the necessity of attempting such an outrage upon the people of this country as this bill because it holds out the last hope by which they can perpetuate themselves in power. Rejected by a majority of the voters of this country for the last fourteen years, growing more and more, year by year, in the minority, as I have said, you are to-day in a minority of 2,000,000 votes of the white people, after giving you the benefit of all the colored votes that are cast.

The Republican party already sees the handwriting on the wall. They know they have been weighed in the balance and they know that they have been found wanting. When one of the greatest men in the Republican party, one often a candidate for the Presidency, openly proclaims in the high places of the nation that there is nothing this side the throne of God nor above the depths of hell that is not correct in law and in morals if it will operate to perpetuate the Republican party and defeat the Democracy, you can not, if worthy of such a leader—and I believe you are—do otherwise than pass just such a bill as this. What else can be expected of a party that would steal the Presidency in 1876 and buy it in 1888? By the way, I do not know an honest Republican in my district that has denied for years past that his party stole the Presidency in 1876, and I have had them to own up and confess it by the hundreds.

A party that will do these things will assassinate the Constitution to perpetuate itself in power as quickly as it would steal a Presidency in 1876 and buy it in 1888. The logical sequence of the waning numbers of the Republican party is that it is absolutely necessary that by some means it should resurrect the negro vote and control it to the last man to the desperate end that it as a party may perpetuate itself in power. There has not been a day for fourteen years that, without regard to the Southern States, if it had not been for the negro vote in four Northern States you would have been repudiated and put under the sod as a party.

Instead of being the savior of the negroes, it is an actual fact that they have been the one and only salvation for the Republican party for a dozen years past.

Look at these figures:

By the census in 1880 the colored population of Illinois was 46,368, of Indiana 39,228, of Ohio 79,900, and New York 65,104. Harrison's plurality in Illinois was 22,201, in Indiana 2,234, in New York 14,373, and in Ohio 19,593. Making no allowance for increase of negro population in the past ten years, except in the one State of Illinois, the negro vote, simply on the basis of the population of 1880, will account for the other three States going Republican, and the many thousands of negro voters now in Illinois amply demonstrates the negro saved the Republican party there. To my mind it is almost hopeless that we can defeat in the House this bill. Why? Because I believe the Republicans in this House almost to a man, under the lash of King Caucus, will vote for it in defiance of their better dictates.

I have always been proud of being a lawyer and of the profession; yet when I saw lawyers, lawyers by the dozen, to-day, members of that profession which for more than a thousand years has been the defender of liberty everywhere, seeking to assail and overthrow trial by an impartial jury, that institution upon which our very freedom is anchored and without which it can not survive, an institution whose origin is lost in the traditions of history, the time when it first originated "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," I felt that liberty had fallen upon evil times indeed.

In addition, I find that besides attempting to strike down the right of impartial trial by jury they go one step further, and, by this cowardly and I believe most infamous bill, attempt to strike down the liberties of the people by depriving this House in the first instance of passing upon the returns and elections of its own members, surrendering that inestimable privilege to a lot of partisan supervisors who are irresponsible to any power but their party, making the votes come here to a partisan Clerk, who dare not do otherwise than obey the behests of his party, and, under heavy pains and penalties, is commanded to put these partisan members on the list of members, thereby striking down the sworn returns of the State. This bill strikes at the very heart of liberty.

You may lose a State by fraud and chicanery; you may have a great wrong done to the whole people in the final result, as was done when Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina were deprived of their rights and electoral votes in 1876, yet the body of liberty lived; but when the rights of sixty-five millions of people are overturned and they are deprived of the right to be represented in this House by their chosen Representatives, and others substituted by a biased partisan majority, whereby the entire body of laws may be changed, then indeed is liberty assassinated in her very home. [Applause.] For these reasons it seems to my mind absolutely logical, both on the figures of past elections and on its past record, that the other side should introduce such a bill. More than that, it is logical to my mind that they should pass it; for I have ceased to believe when it comes to a question of politics we may expect anything from them except those measures that will tend to perpetuate their party in power. They see the political storm riding in the air and in the heavens as well as we do.

Their great leaders know the necessity to provide for it. "He who is ugly, but whom we know to be great" foreshadowed this bill when at Pittsburgh he declared we "must do our own registration, our own counting, and our own certifying." They know that Iowa, that proud State, which in 1880 was the banner Republican State of the Union and gave 78,000 majority for Garfield for President, has been swept away from her Republican moorings, and that on the count of last November State election a majority of her districts gave Democratic majorities instead of Republican. They know that to-day for the first time in over thirty years a Democrat is governor at Des Moines City, the capital of the State. [Applause.] They know—

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MANSUR. No; I can not yield. They know that throughout the West similar influences are at work. They know that the same power that wrecked their party in Iowa is sweeping over Kansas, Nebraska, all the great West. They know as well as we the changes that are going on in the West, and they know that the people of this country are becoming very tired of these attempts at striking down the Constitution for the purpose of perpetuating a partisan party in power, and hence this bill. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SMYSER. Mr. Speaker, before the 1st day of February more than three or four bills looking to the regulation of the election of members of this House were introduced and referred to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress. Your committee believed that it was a subject-matter properly referred, that under the Constitution and rules of the House it had the power to consider, perfect, and report to the House for its consideration a measure calculated to correct the abuses as contemplated in the measure now under consideration. They did not believe, in considering the measure that was finally perfected and brought to the House for its consideration, that they were infringing in any way upon the Constitution; but believed that they were doing simply that which they had the right and power under the Constitution to do. But I confess, Mr. Speaker, when this debate fairly opened, after, on last Saturday, for instance, we read the alarm signed by thirty-eight Democrats from districts north of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers, as hour after hour we heard gentlemen upon the other side of this House declaim vehemently, earnestly, and it seemed to me from the very vehemence of their talk that they were sincere in saying we were overriding the Constitution—I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I stood appalled.

I trembled for my country. I thought "it may be that we have made a mistake and that we are undertaking in the measure now under consideration to do something that will override the liberties of the people and utterly subvert the Constitution." But, Mr. Speaker, I recalled an incident that put me at least at ease. While they were talking about the Constitution being subverted I was reminded of something that had occurred many years ago in my own county. Along in 1845 or 1846 there came to my county a young man to practice law. Bright, intelligent, quick, he gave early promise of the eminence he attained at the bar in later years, for when, in February last, he was gathered to his fathers, there was no man who stood above him in Ohio; he was Ohio's greatest lawyer. When he came to our county to practice law we had a great many lawsuits that grew out of trading horses, and we called them horse lawsuits. He was engaged to go before a magistrate to try one of these horse lawsuits.

We had also in the county an old gentleman whose character my friend from Missouri will recognize readily when I say that he was not a lawyer, but was a pettifogger. He was up to all the tricks of the pettifogger. He knew all the devices which would enable him to secure a verdict from a jury before a magistrate. The distinguished lawyer of whom I have spoken, then, as I have said, a young man, prepared his case, and tried it admirably. He presented his authorities carefully, because he believed there were some legal principles governing even a horse trade.

Mr. TARSNEY. He was a horse lawyer.

Mr. SMYSER. Not exactly a horse lawyer, because, if you speak of John McSweeney as a horse lawyer, God knows what will become of Missouri. [Laughter.] As I have said, this pettifogger was up to all the tricks which would enable him to win a verdict from a jury before a magistrate, and when he came to make the argument upon the other side and had reached the proper point, he turned to the justice and said: "May it please your honor and gentlemen of the jury, if that is the law of horse trades, farewell to liberty." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, as I recalled that incident I took consolation from it, because we have gone on and horse trades have flourished, but liberty has not yet bidden us farewell. [Laughter.]

[Mr. TARSNEY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

PRELIMINARY REPORT ON THE COST OF PRODUCTION.

A preliminary report by the Commissioner of Labor on the cost of production of pig-iron, steel ingots, steel rails, coal, coke, iron ore, and limestone in the United States and in Europe—to the Committee on Labor.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolution was introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. HITT:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish the House with the correspondence between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain touching the subjects in dispute in the Behring Sea, since March 4, 1889; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. OSBORNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported with amendment the following bills of the House; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

A bill (H. R. 4300) for the relief of George M. Wheeler. (Report No. 2595.)

A bill (H. R. 8014) for the relief of Richard M. Edwards, of Cleveland, Tenn. (Report No. 2596.)

A bill (H. R. 7641) for the relief of Daniel C. Trewitt, of Chattanooga, Tenn. (Report No. 2597.)

Mr. YODER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 9493) granting a pension to Edwin Cotton, late musician Twenty-fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, accompanied by a report (No. 2598)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

He also, from the same committee, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 6052) granting a pension to Martha A. Bowling, accompanied by a report (No. 2599)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. STRUBLE, from the Committee on the Territories, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 11178) to authorize the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, Arizona, to issue certain bonds in aid of the construction of a certain railroad, accompanied by a report (No. 2600)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. LANSING, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 2375) to correct the military record of Lieut. Cornelius McLean, accompanied by a report (No. 2601)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HARE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, with amendment, the bill of the House (H. R. 11030) granting the right of way to the Sherman and Northwestern Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 2602)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Library, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 6790) for the purchase of a historical book of reference from Austin & Co., accompanied by a report (No. 2603)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON, of Missouri, in behalf of the minority of the Committee on Elections, to which was referred the contested-election case of Thomas E. Miller against William Elliott, from the Seventh Congressional district of the State of South Carolina, submitted their views in writing thereon; which were ordered to be printed as Part 2 of Report 2502.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was recommitted the bill of the House (H. R. 339) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, reported the same favorably, accompanied by a report heretofore made (No. 26)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. REED, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported with amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill of the Senate (S. 398) to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases, accompanied by a report (No. 2604)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. ADAMS, in behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted his views in writing thereon; which were ordered to be printed as part of said report (No. 2604).

Mr. O'DONNELL, from the Committee on Education, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 634) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, accompanied by a report (No. 2605)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, a bill of the following title was introduced, read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARE: A bill (H. R. 11224) to confer additional jurisdiction to the United States court in the Indian Territory to hear and determine rights of citizenship in the Indian Territory and petitions for partitions and allotments of lands in severalty, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 11225) granting a pension to Harrison D. Leverett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: A bill (H. R. 11226) granting a pension to Stephen A. Seavey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 11227) directing the transfer of certain amounts from the naval pension fund—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FITCH: A bill (H. R. 11228) for the relief of Daniel W. Whitney—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOOKER: A bill (H. R. 11229) for the relief of the estate of George F. Hunt, deceased, of Jefferson County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIFE: A bill (H. R. 11230) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Toop—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH, of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11231) for the relief of Edward A. Ruder—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11232) for the relief of C. C. Caldwell—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11233) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of Phebe Leibarger, deceased, widow of Jacob Leibarger, late of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers in the war of the rebellion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLCOX: A bill (H. R. 11235) for the relief of Charles T. Russell—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ABBOTT: Petition of the Builders' Exchange of Dallas, Tex., advising the passage of the Torrey bankrupt bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the underwriters of Dallas, Tex., asking passage of same measure—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi: Petition of 39 citizens of Yazoo City, Miss., praying the passage of House bill 3316, known as the Torrey bankrupt bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DARLINGTON: Petition for the passage of House bill 5978—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. DORSEY: Petition from farmers of Custer County, Nebraska, asking appropriation for deep harbor at Galveston—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolutions from Martinsburgh (Nebr.) Farmers' Alliance, asking for the passage of the Conger and Butterworth bills—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Belle Creek (Nebr.) Farmers' Alliance, favoring same bills—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Farmers' Alliance No. 936, of Nebraska, for same bills—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Antelope County (Nebraska) Farmers' Alliance, for same bills—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Farmers' Alliance of Scotia, Nebr., for same measures—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Pleasant Hill (Nebr.) Alliance, for same measures—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the Buffalo County (Nebraska) Alliance, for same measures—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the Brayton (Nebr.) Farmers' Alliance, for the passage of same measures—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the Pierce County (Nebraska) Farmers' Alliance, for the passage of same measures—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KELLEY: Petition of 260 citizens of Topeka, Kans., asking for the passage of some law that will enable the States to counteract the effect of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in relation to the importation and sale of intoxicating liquors in original packages from other States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KERR, of Iowa: Petition of John Flaherty, C. A. Searle, and 13 others, citizens of Richland County, North Dakota, asking Congress for appropriation of money for complete system of levees on Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of C. J. Haines, Will Atchison, and 38 others, citizens of Linn County, Iowa, for same measure—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Petition of 25 members of Ovid Alliance, Branch County, Michigan, asking for the passage of the Conger bill and the Butterworth bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Jens P. Pederson and 14 others, citizens of Iowa, favoring the establishment and maintenance of a harbor on the Texas coast—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. TURPIN: Petition of Cawthorn & Coleman and others, citizens of Selma, Dallas County, Alabama, protesting against legislation by Congress compelling railroads to transport petroleum barrels free—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 2, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LANDS IN ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my annual message I called attention to the urgent need of legislation for the adjustment of the claims under Mexican grants to lands in Arizona and New Mexico.

I now submit a correspondence which has passed between the Department of State and the Mexican Government concerning the rights of certain Mexican citizens to have their claims to lands ceded to the United States by the treaty adjusted and confirmed. I also submit a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, showing the number and extent of these claims and their present condition.

The United States owes a duty to Mexico to confirm to her citizens those valid grants that were saved by the treaty, and the long delay which has attended the discharge of this duty has given just cause of complaint.

The entire community where these large claims exist and indeed all of our people are interested in an early and final settlement of them. No greater incubus can rest upon the energies of a people in the development of a new country than that resulting from unsettled land titles.

The necessity for legislation is so evident and so urgent that I venture to express the hope that relief will be given at the present session of Congress.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 1, 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message, with the accompanying papers, will be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. It seems to me that the communication should be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection—either that or the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is a matter certainly of very great importance. I think it is a fact that the Committee on Private Land Claims has at this session of Congress, as it frequently has before, reported a bill designed to reach the difficulties spoken of in this communication. I do not think that the communication should lie on the table, but that it should be referred to that committee, so that it may, if possible, stir it up to renewed activity on this important matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message, with the accompanying papers, will be referred, if there be no objection, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of the Central American Transit Company of New Jersey, praying for the adjudication of their claim against the Government of Nicaragua; which was referred to the Select Committee to Inquire into All Claims of Citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. WALTHALL presented the petition of L. Lopez and 400 other citizens of Biloxi, Miss., and vicinity; the petition of T. J. Stewart and 10 other citizens of Mississippi City, Miss.; the petition of P. M. Rhodes and 152 other citizens of Pass Christian, Miss., and vicinity; the petition of P. B. Hand and 33 other citizens of Handsborough, Miss., and vicinity, and the petition of W. T. Firth and 67 other citizens of Ocean Springs, Miss., and vicinity, praying that the custom-house be removed from Shieldsborough, Miss., to Biloxi, Miss.; that a deputy's office be established at Pearlington, and that the present dep-uty's office at Pascagoula be maintained; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Exchange of Kansas City, Mo., praying that an appropriation be made by this Congress of $10,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 124 citizens of Macon City, Mo., praying for the free coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of C. O. Baxter & Co. and other manufacturers, of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the duties on Dutch and bronze metal proposed in the McKinley tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of citizens of Dallas County, Texas, praying for legislation to limit the hours of work of clerks and employes of first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the proceedings of a mass meeting of the citizens of Pima County, in the Territory of Arizona, demanding "the immediate repeal of that provision of the law in regard to arid lands or that Arizona be excepted from its provisions." They say they ask for no Government aid, but simply that the land laws, the desert and the homestead acts particularly, be retained and thereby all lands will be reclaimed which can be profitably, and all ditches, canals, and reservoirs will be built by private enterprise that would be profitable to the Government to do. "We demand the repeal of this law, and then to be let alone in our struggle with the desert, as we have demonstrated that we can make the desert bloom without Government aid, if not injured by bad legislation."

I ask that the resolutions be received and referred to the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be so referred, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire the attention of the Senator from Missouri. The subject to which the Senator refers is now under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations. They are to have a meeting upon that subject, as I understand, this afternoon for the special consideration of this particular matter, and therefore I suggest that the resolutions should go to the Committee on Appropriations, as they have before them and are considering an amendment to the sundry civil bill covering this whole subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that amendment come from the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands?

Mr. PADDOCK. The amendment to which I referred was reported from the Committee on Public Lands and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Director of the Geological Survey was before the Committee on Appropriations this morning, and he is to be again this afternoon, in the consideration of that subject by that committee. Therefore I suggest to the Senator, as the petition he presents is one of like import to one received by myself and is understood by me, that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for its consideration this afternoon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand the matter is now pending before that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in the absence of objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire also to present a resolution of Local Assembly 448, Knights of Labor, of St. Louis, Mo., adopted at a meeting held on June 14, 1890, reciting that the Committee on the Judiciary in the lower House of Congress have reported favorably on a bill to prohibit alien ownership of land, and in an elaborate report accompanying said bill the committee sets forth the fact that Congress has the power to totally exclude aliens. The committee further report that they had ascertained that certain noblemen of Europe now own 21,000,000 acres of land in the United States, besides millions of acres owned by other aliens. The committee further say that European capitalists have invested millions of money in railroad and land bonds covering 100,000,000 acres of land, the greater part of which, under foreclosure sales, will in a few years become the property of foreign bondholders. The bill prohibits foreign-born persons who have not been naturalized from owning land, and only allows them to have a leasehold, and that for no longer than five years; it also compels alien land-owners to sell their lands or become citizens within ten years; and they favor the passage of this bill.

I ask that the resolution be received and referred, I suppose, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be so referred, in the absence of objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not sure whether this resolution of the Knights of Labor of St. Louis should be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor or to the Committee on Public Lands. I am not certain which committee should take charge of it.

Mr. BLAIR. That is a subject-matter which the labor organizations of the country are seeking to bring to public attention. It has been before the Committee on Education and Labor. I am not at all particular to which committee it goes. The Senator can have his choice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was under the impression that the Committee on Public Lands had reported the bill which prohibited the acquisition of lands by alien owners.

Mr. BLAIR. I think the resolution had better go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. For that reason I think it had better go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reference to the Committee on Education and Labor will be reconsidered, if there be no objection, and the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Salem, Oregon, praying the passage of the bill to limit the hours of work of clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8792) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Winona, Minn., reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8047) to construct a wagon-bridge across the Mississippi River at Hastings, Minn., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3899) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Joplin, in the State of Missouri, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7482) increasing the pension of John P. Davis;

A bill (S. 2370) for the relief of Philip T. Greely; and

A bill (S. 2610) granting a pension to N. L. Young.

Mr. PIERCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3957) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary McIntosh, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon.

THE MISSISSIPPI AND ITS TRIBUTARIES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB June 28, 1890, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the pamphlet entitled The Mississippi and its Forty-Four Navigable Tributaries, prepared at the Treasury Department and printed at the Government Printing Office in 1888, be printed as a public document for the use of the Senate.

UNCLAIMED LAND PATENTS.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands instruct me to report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3831) to provide for the delivery of land patents to their rightful owners. After making a statement in regard to this matter I shall venture to ask the Senate to consider the bill now.

It appears by an Executive Document which accompanies the bill that about 250,000 land patents have accumulated in the General Land Office for which claimants have not appeared. This, according to the statement of the Land Office, grows largely out of the fact that from time to time the land offices in different States have been abolished and their files have been returned to the Department. Large portions of these files were returned on account of the suspension of land offices in the Southern States during the war of the rebellion.

The Government owes an obligation to the parties to whom these patents are due to deliver the patents to them and to have them always ready for delivery and for delivery without cost. But it seems that last summer some thrifty soul, for lack of better employment, hit upon a plan of making a speculation for himself out of the innocent holders of these patents, and was allowed by the Land Office to take his clerks into that department and make copies of all the names of the grantees of these patents, together with a description of the land and such other information as the patents might contain, which would enable him to look up the persons who were entitled to the patents. Thus the Government presents the spectacle of letting out by job the performance of that which is a plain public duty. The Commissioner in reporting on this subject congratulates himself that he has done a good thing in thus enabling the parties to have their rights through the intervention of private parties which they can not get from the Government authorities.

The result is that from different portions of the country come complaints of this kind, that parties had been sought out through the instrumentality of the private holders of this information and informed that they can get their patents if they will only pay a certain sum of money. One case to which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] called my attention, and which I will ask him to verify in a moment, was that of a person who, having been communicated with on this subject, inquired to know what it would cost him and was told it would cost him $25. He thereupon forwarded the money, and after the party had got the money, the other party not in due course getting his patent wrote again to find out about it, and was informed by the attorney that in the mean time there had been some other cost about it and it would cost him $25 more. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] informed the Committee on Public Lands that cases of this kind have arisen in his State.

It seems to me rather extraordinary; and the committee have devised a plan whereby this speculation perhaps may not entirely cease, but, at all events, which will provide for such action on the part of the Department as will prevent the necessity of any one going to these private parties and paying a sum of money for that kind of service which the Government is bound to render without any compensation whatever.

I was a little surprised, in fact, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office in making his report did not suggest that the whole of the public business relating to the Interior Department had better be carried on by private contract.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me to say a word in this connection I will state that the recommendation to which he refers was not made by the present Commissioner of the General Land Office. It was made by an Acting Commissioner some time ago.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to have been the result of collusion between one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Interior and the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not know as to that.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to have been some sort of a private "snap" as between those persons.

Mr. PADDOCK. In reference to the case which the Senator has called attention to, inasmuch as he has referred to me, I desire to state that the patent referred to in this case was ready to be issued. The attorney found that it was ready to be issued and notified the person to whom the patent belonged that he had special facilities for expediting the issuance of patents and advising him if he would remit $25 he thought he would be able to secure the patent for him very soon. He did remit $25, as the Senator has stated; then the attorney wrote again to him stating that there had been some additional complications about it involving considerable labor and therefore he would require an additional $25. In the mean time the owner of the patent had forwarded his $25 to the party with an order for his patent. However, the attorney had obtained the patent under the order received by him and held it until he got the second $25. When the matter was brought to the attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office he called the attorney before him and immediately debarred him from practice before the Land Office.

Mr. PLUMB. That was a most righteous act, and one which shows that the Commissioner of the General Land Office himself has some appreciation of the duties and responsibilities of his position. But it has resulted already in a condition of things which is a serious reflection upon the administration of the Land Office, and, fearing that that office could not help itself out of the dilemma into which it had been put, the bill which I have spoken of has been reported, imposing certain duties in regard to this matter upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which will obviate the necessity of letting these things out by private contract any further and advise all people as to where they can get the information necessary to enable them to obtain the muniment of title which the law intends they shall have.

Mr. BERRY. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in response to a resolution either passed by the Senate or sent from the Committee on Public Lands, I do not remember which, made the statement that a large number of patents which belong to various parties throughout the United States and which they were entitled to have delivered to them free of cost were on file in his office; that he was applied to by a firm of lawyers in the city of Washington to make a list of those patents, and that he and one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Interior, General Bussey, had both given permission to this law firm in Washington to make a list of all these patents in his office.

He does not give any reason why he gave such permission. He must have known the object and purposes the attorneys had in view when they applied for the permission.

I will state that that is not the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, but the present Assistant Commissioner, who was at that time Acting Commissioner, as I remember the fact, gave the permission to these attorneys to make a list of the patents belonging to the people, which they had a right to have delivered to them free of cost. After they got this permission I was informed by one of my colleagues in the other House that he had received a number of letters from citizens in Arkansas stating that this firm had written them that they had facilities for procuring patents and had understood they had never obtained a patent to the land, and if they would send to that firm a certain amount of money they thought they could or would procure the patents for them.

Mr. President, it seems to me that some explanation upon the part of the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office ought to have been given as to why he selected out this firm of lawyers and permitted them to obtain the information by which they could impose upon this large number of citizens throughout the United States and put money into their own pockets. That is all the criticism I care to make. The Commissioner gives no explanation in his letter, but he says he did that thing without giving any reason why. I think that the legislation proposed by the Senator from Kansas is necessary and that the bill ought to pass, so that these people can procure their patents without having to contribute to this law firm, which seems to have peculiar facilities that other law firms have not for getting information from the General Land Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3831) to provide for the delivery of land patents to their rightful owners, this morning reported from the Committee on Public Lands, may be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PIERCE. There was some suggestion made here when the letter of the Commissioner came in with regard to the publication of these names in some one paper at the capital of each State. It seems to me it would be a very wise provision to have that inserted in the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee thought of that, and concluded that it would involve an unnecessary expense. Undoubtedly everybody will have notice through the public prints that if any muniment of title, any patent, is lacking to his land he can go to the county-seat and at the office of the recorder of deeds find out about it.

Mr. PIERCE. Should not notice be given in some manner so that the people will understand that their patents are with the Government or something of that kind?

Mr. PLUMB. The list of patents does that. It is a list of the names of the grantees, and will be with the recorder of deeds of every county in the United States, being of permanent record with that county, and undoubtedly the fact will be published, and by applying they can find out.

Mr. PIERCE. I suppose the committee have examined that point, and I will not press it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, after the word "of," strike out "be, and;" in line 4, after "hereby," strike out "authorized and;" and in line 4 after the word "to," strike out the remainder of the bill and insert, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to forward to the recorder of deeds for each county in the United States lists setting forth the lands disposed of by the Government in such county the patents for which are now or hereafter may be on deposit in the General Land Office, and which have remained therein unclaimed during a period of more than twelve months, such lists to also contain the name of the grantee for each tract of land therein described: Provided, That this direction shall not apply to patents withheld from delivery on account of any claim of error or fraud in the price of the same or the entry upon which it is based.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the delivery of land patents to their rightful owners, and for other purposes."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4179) granting an increase of pension to John T. Steele; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 4180) for the relief of Caleb Bryan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 4181) granting a pension to George Blanchard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 4182) granting a pension to John M. Filler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 109) providing for the printing of the agricultural report for 1890; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

DISTRICT TAX ARREARS.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 108) extending the "act fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified" to September 1, 1890; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the provisions of the act approved May 6, 1890, being "An act fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified" be, and they are hereby, re-enacted and extended to the 1st day of September, 1890.

Mr. HARRIS. I send to the Chair the act to which reference is made, and ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the joint resolution be now considered. Let the act be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The act will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the rate of interest to be collected of any person owing arrearages of general taxes prior to July 1, 1888, or assessments for special improvements, including the laying of water mains, now due to and the liens for which are held by the District of Columbia, shall be 6 per cent. per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law and of all accrued costs: Provided, That this provision shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 30th day of June, 1890.

Approved, May 6, 1890.

Mr. HARRIS. The act expired yesterday. The commissioners of the District wrote me yesterday, asking that a joint resolution be passed extending the time to the 1st of September, saying that they think they can collect $100,000 or more by such an extension within that time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee and the Committee on the District of Columbia whether these continued and yearly provisions for helping delinquent tax and assessment payers are just towards those tax and assessment payers who do pay within the time, or who, being a little out of time, as I have been myself once or twice, pay the penalty prescribed by law? It appears to me not to be right to the prompt tax-payers to allow the delinquents to run along a year or two and then make a compromise with them, and then do it again and again. It is a constant temptation to people not to pay and to borrow the money at 6 per cent. or 5, or whatever, for that purpose. There may be some good explanation of it, but I am not able to understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the Senator who reported it explain precisely what it covers.

Mr. HARRIS. The explanation will be found by reading again the act that it is proposed to extend. Let the act be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The act will be again read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the rate of interest to be collected of any person owing arrearages of general taxes prior to July 1, 1888, or assessments for special improvements, including the laying of water mains, now due to and the liens for which are held by the District of Columbia, shall be 6 per cent. per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law and of all accrued costs: Provided, That this provision shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 30th day of June, 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over until to-morrow, until we can see the letter of the commissioners.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the letter of the commissioners be printed in some way, so that we can understand the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I send to the Secretary's desk a letter from the commissioners of the District in order that it may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, July 1, 1890.

SIR: The commissioners recommend and request the extension until September 1 next of the law "fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia, if paid within a time specified," approved May 6, 1890, inasmuch as the tax-payers had but about twenty-eight days in which to take advantage of that act.

The communication of Mr. Solomon J. Fague is herewith returned.

Respectfully,

J. W. DOUGLASS, President.

HON. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
United States Senate.

PENSION AGENCIES.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to furnish information on the following points:

First. The number of pensioners borne upon the roll of each, United States pension agency on June 30, 1890.

Second. The amount of money apportioned to each agency for clerk hire by the circular letter of Commissioner Raum, dated July 1, 1890, and upon what basis such apportionment was made.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call up for consideration the motion I entered yesterday to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to recede from its amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to recede from its amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion to reconsider is before the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, I was heartily in favor of the action of the Senate yesterday and of its vote, so far as the matter of principle involved is concerned, but at this late day of the session it does not seem to me to be worth while that we should allow the bill to fail, and therefore I am willing to change my vote upon that question, and hope the action of the Senate will be reconsidered. I do not care to discuss the merits of the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to recede from its amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. STEWART. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] and withhold my vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] unless my vote should be necessary to make a quorum. I am not advised how he would vote and withhold my vote. I should vote in the affirmative if at liberty to do so.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], but I understand from his colleague [Mr. CAMERON] that he would vote the same way that I would on this question. I therefore vote "nay." I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. KENNA] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired generally with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have exchanged pairs with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], so that the pair will stand between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. WALTHALL. With the exchange of pairs announced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] I record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BLAIR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted in the affirmative. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I would inquire of his colleague if he understands that I am at liberty to vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WALTHALL. I think so.

Mr. GORMAN (after having voted in the negative). I am unwilling that this bill shall be lost because of this controversy. I therefore change my vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I change my vote; I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—26.
Allison,	Dawes,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Dixon,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Berry,	Frye,	Payne,	Teller,

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to recede from its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion to recede from the amendments of the Senate to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have those amendments read, so that we may be certain what they are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read.

The SECRETARY. The second amendment proposes to strike out "three hundred and twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight dollars and ten," and insert "four hundred and twenty-two thousand two hundred and ninety-six dollars and ten."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a mere footing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read successively in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought perhaps we might consider each one.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment read is a footing. That depends upon the other amendments that are later on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. Amendments 21, 22, and 23 are, on page 8, line 1, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-six;" after the word "at," in the same line, to strike out "$6 per day during the session" and insert "$1,800 each;" and in lines 3 and 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighteen thousand one hundred and fifty" and insert "forty-six thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For twenty-six clerks to committees, at $1,800 each, $46,800.

Amendments numbered 24 and 25 are, in the next clause on page 8, line 6, after the word "committees," to strike out "during the session" and insert "at $1,800 each," and in lines 7 and 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-one thousand seven hundred and eighty" and insert "sixty-three thousand;" so as to make the item read:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,800 each, $63,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I understand the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be taken upon these amendments in gross, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a motion to recede, which is a total motion, I take it.

Mr. GORMAN. I only desire to say that I do not change an iota of the statement I have heretofore made to the Senate. I believe it is the right of this body to determine for itself how many officers—of course within reason—are necessary and the proper compensation for them, and that it is an extraordinary matter for the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature to oppose to the extent it has this proposition. But this great bill, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which ought to have gone into operation yesterday, is of so much importance to the Government that I do not feel that it is wise at this time and on this bill to jeopardize or postpone its operation, but on some other occasion it will afford me great pleasure, and I hope the Senate will have the opportunity, to have this matter determined, and determined as I think it ought to be and as the Senate believes wise and proper in the matter of compensation for its officers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if there has not been a joint resolution already passed extending the law of 1890 for the rest of this month and if it will make one particle of difference whether this bill is passed to-day or whether it is passed twenty days hence.

Mr. GORMAN. In answer to the Senator from Missouri I will say that it does make a great difference. There are radical changes in this bill as compared with the act of two years ago which will require necessarily the opening of new accounts, and no one knows better than my friend from Missouri that that can not be carried on until a new bill shall have been framed.

I am not willing to go to the extent of having to go over this entire matter, to have a new bill introduced and framed and sent here for the compensation of the officers, and therefore under the circumstances I think we ought to recede. I do not believe we can sustain ourselves by going quite as far as that on a bill of this character.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the motion will not prevail. It is a monstrous proposition to my mind that it is the duty of the Senate on an appropriation bill to recede from every amendment it may make, if the other House will not concur in it. That gives the House jurisdiction not only to originate appropriation bills, but jurisdiction to determine absolutely what appropriations shall be made—not only what appropriations shall be made for every Department of the Government, but what appropriations shall be made for the Senate itself.

The Constitution provides that the Senate shall choose its own officers. A fair interpretation of that is such officers or employes as are found necessary for the proper conduct of its business, and the power to choose involves, in my judgement, the power to determine what the compensation shall be.

While it is true that there can be no money expended except by an appropriation authorized by both branches of Congress, there is a principle involved by which the Senate should be allowed not only under the Constitution to choose its own officers, but to determine their compensation.

The proposition was stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] the other day, and it has been frequently stated on this floor, that the body offering an amendment to a bill must recede if the other body does not concur in it. By such a rule, I repeat, the power would be conceded to the House of Representatives not only to originate appropriation bills, but to determine absolutely what appropriations shall be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see it in the way the Senator from Oregon does at all. The Senate has the same right to refuse to accede to House propositions that the House has to refuse to accede to Senate propositions; and if the House of Representatives inserts in an appropriation bill a sum of money to pay its Clerk, and there not being a standing law fixing the salary of that Clerk and the Senate thinks it too high, the Senate has the constitutional right to strike that out and say to the House, "We can not agree to that proposition." In such a case the Senate is not bound to recede; the House is bound to recede because the House is the body that makes the affirmative proposition that "We wish to draw so much money from the Treasury for our own purposes, but we can not draw it without the assent of the Senate." Therefore, if the Senate says it will not assent, they must put down the pay of their Clerk to the sum that the Senate thinks the Treasury ought to bear. That makes the equality of the Houses.

Of course, there is a matter of courtesy and delicacy between the two Houses, and of judgment that in general each House is the best judge of how much ought to be paid to its own employés, and undoubtedly that courtesy ought to be carried to the extremest limit of anything that we can justly respond to the tax-payers about in the way of not being extravagant. But I think it the right of the House of Representatives to say if it does say, and its duty if it thinks so to say, that the expenses of the Senate proposed here are extravagant and unnecessary for the tax-payers to bear; and if they think so it is their right to keep on thinking so. If it should happen at the next session that the Senate is of opinion that some or all of the House employés are too highly paid, it will be our mission to say that, and then the boot will be on the other leg.

I remember, Mr. President, not a great many years ago that the question did come up exactly the reverse, where the Senate Committee on Appropriations, of which I then happened to be a member, thought that some of the House expenses were extremely extravagant and out of all proportion, and we modestly and in perfect good temper, of course, said, "We can not vote a tax" (putting it in that form) "to pay that amount of money for your expenses in the particulars named;" and the House saw the force of it in the end and receded, just as I hope we are about to do now. It may be that the proposal that we make is right in itself. It may be that it is too high. I am not on that question at all, but I think it is due to the safety of the Government to admit as I do, for one, that if the House of Representatives thinks, taking into consideration the courtesy and the liberal allowances that ought to be made for mere differences of amounts, that our expenses are too high, they are doing their duty by the people in saying so; and if the case were reversed as it will be in a year or two, as I take it, we shall have the same liberty and exercise the same duty.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the position of the House of Representatives in regard to this matter is not so wholly unreasonable as seems to be conceived by some members of this body. When this item was first put on the bill it was of course received with a great deal of disfavor in the other end of the Capitol. The members of the House felt that it was a discrimination against them and in our favor. They had their reasons, for perhaps they did not believe at that time that provision for clerks to members of either branch was wise, having in view that proper regard for public sentiment which is not above the fair consideration of any member of this body or of the other, and they declined for a long time to accede to the proposition of the Senate to provide its members with clerks.

I happened then accidentally, as on this occasion, to be a member of the conference, and I know that I stood out very considerably against my own conviction to some extent; at all events, against my conviction of the propriety of the proceeding, because of the fact that I was standing up for the rights of the minority on this floor. Our Democratic brethren had then said to us with a great deal of force, "We are outside the pale; we can not be the chairmen of committees, and we do not have anybody therefore to help us. You who are in the majority have clerks who, whatever the exacting duties of their official position may be, can still render you some service, and we ought to have something to be fairly represented." The Republican members of that conference committee stood loyally by what they regarded as a fair demand of their associates on the other side. I think we stood by them more faithfully and manfully than we would have done if it had been a matter affecting only the members on this side. I am sure that we did. The House finally yielded that point. The next year the bill came over without that provision, and the Senate put it in, and again we had a protracted conference, with the usual result that the House yielded; and this year for the first time the House sent the bill over with that provision in it, thereby finally conceding to the Senate what was contended for.

The House say with great fairness, and I think it has been suggested in private conference, "While yielding this as a matter which has become to a certain extent a permanent practice of the Senate, and which has at any rate not encountered any very great dissent in the public mind, and doing what we conceive to be the fair thing, we had a perfect right to believe that the Senate was satisfied and was not going to encroach upon us further and ask more of us." Now they say, having agreed to this and for the first time put it in the appropriation bill, "Not content with that, you seek to enlarge it and to give your clerks more than they have hitherto had and without any showing that there is any necessity for this increased compensation." The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] said yesterday what I did not have occasion to reply to, that the point was not whether we should have the increased compensation, but whether we should distribute it through the calendar year or limit it to the session; but the other House said that was still a new proposition, and they said what is manifestly true, "You make the clerks annual, and the next session we shall be confronted with the statement that these fellows, at the price of $6 a day for the session applied to the entire year, get too small salary compared with what you pay messengers and so on, and consequently the argument will be made irresistible to increase the compensation." They said in substance, "We will leave these wages where they are."

The sentiment in the other House in favor of doing something nearly the same for members of that body is growing. "We want to bring this thing up at a time when we shall be better able to consider it in all its bearings and make a fair adjustment between the two Houses. Meanwhile we do not want to pledge ourselves to any policy in regard to your clerks which will be an embarrassment to us in the consideration of the question in regard to our own; and we do not want to lay the foundation for an increase of salaries of a very considerable body of men until this other question related to it comes up in its proper and natural way." That seems to me to be the position of the House of Representatives.

Having done what I could individually to have the House conferres yield, having consented as I did, as I thought as a matter of wisdom, to the proposition that these clerks should be annual and have a compensation of $1,500 a year, I come back to the proposition that the House is not in this matter treating the Senate unfairly and is not trenching upon the constitutional prerogatives of the Senate, and has been, I think, all the way through, fairly treating the determination of the Senate to have proper employés and give them a reasonable compensation.

Now, I can say another thing without infringing upon the rules, and that is that, if this bill fails, of course another bill will come here in due time. It is the duty of the House of Representatives to frame and pass appropriation bills, and they will avail themselves of the opportunity which will come by reason of the failure of this bill, and that bill which will come here will not have the appropriation for clerks at all, and the Senate will be left where it was before, with the necessity of putting it on as an entirely new item, and then we shall be at a disadvantage in regard to this matter, and probably have the spectacle here during the pendency of very important measures which have partly been ripened and have their position on the Calendar to be taken into consideration during the summer, and the time that ought to be occupied in other discussion will be frittered away in regard to this question, which is "mere leather and prunello," after all.

Mr. DOLPH. Under the Constitution, the Congress of the United States with the approval of the President has the power to enact laws, and no doubt each branch of Congress is responsible for the exercise of its constitutional power. I do not believe there is any rule which deprives either House of the exercise of this constitutional right to determine what laws shall be enacted. I do not believe there is any such rule as has been contended for here making it the duty of the Senate to recede from an amendment adopted by it to an appropriation bill or any other bill, under the Constitution or otherwise, if the two Houses disagree.

Mr. PLUMB. Allow me to ask the Senator a question right on that point.

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. Is it not the duty of the Senate to so act as that legislation may result, even if it involves a compromise?

Mr. DOLPH. I was about to say that if the two Houses disagree and they attempt to arrive at a compromise through a conference committee I think it is just as much the duty of one body to yield as it is of the other.

I am not speaking about appropriations made for the payment of the employés or officers of the Senate or of the House of Representatives. The two bodies are equal. They have equal power. A bill before it can become a law has to pass both branches of Congress and to be approved by the President or become a law without his signature, according to the provisions of the Constitution.

There is certainly in the Constitution no provision which requires that the House which makes a new proposition must yield if the other does not consent to it, and there is nothing in reason to support such a position. If a certain bill must originate, either under the Constitution or by the custom of Congress, in the House of Representatives, to say that the Senate shall not make amendments to it, as I said before, would give the House power to say what appropriations should be made and what legislation should be had upon a given subject.

But when we come to consider what appropriations shall be made for the payment of officers of either body, while there is no constitutional requirement that one House shall yield rather than the other, there is a certain fitness in things, there is a certain principle involved that would make it proper, I think, for the House to yield to the Senate in the case of employment of officers by the Senate and their payment, and for the Senate to yield to the House and allow them a liberal discretion in the matter of their employes and of the sums to be paid them.

Senators talk about the responsibility for the loss of this bill. If this bill is defeated the Senate will be no more responsible than the House of Representatives. Members of the Senate can go quite as long without their salaries for the next year as members of the other House. I can not conceive we should be any more responsible for the defeat of the bill than the House, because, to say the least, the matter in controversy is a matter of which the Senate has an equal right with the House to judge and upon which the Senate has the same right to insist that the House has to disagree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] moves that the Senate recede from its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which have been read by the Secretary.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a division.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 33, noes 16.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1633, being the bill (S. 3823) in amendment of and supplementary to the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, entitled "An act to amend section 5350 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes."

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I hope that the special order, the shipping bill in charge of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], will not be laid aside. He was called out a moment ago and asked me to see that his bills were brought up as soon as the morning business was disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to pass the Utah bill. I have tried three or four times.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to make a little personal statement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield to that.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, for a year or two there has been a permanent pair existing between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and myself, one which has been conducive to the comfort and convenience of both of us and in the interest of the public service, and one which he has faithfully observed and which I have tried to observe; but for three or four days he was called away on urgent business and he notified me that he was to be absent, and yet, notwithstanding the fact of that pair, I voted every time on a yea-and-nay vote without announcing the pair, thereby doing him a very great injustice.

I want simply to call the attention of the Senate to the fact and have it go into the RECORD that this is a matter for which he is not in any wise responsible, coupled with the other fact that none of the votes were of a kind which perhaps involved partisan considerations and none of them were carried by my vote alone. If that had been so, I should at once have moved to reconsider the vote by which the judgment of the Senate had been obtained.

I make this statement in justice to the Senator from Missouri and also in justice to myself.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MARTIN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4562) to provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Vermont to the proceedings yesterday upon Order of Business 1109, Senate bill 3738. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] asked—unanimous consent that this bill may be taken up to-morrow morning after the morning business, and the Senator then—

Referring to the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]— has this afternoon in which to make his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER said—

The President pro tempore being necessarily absent—

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being a unanimous consent, I withdraw my motion, and I stand by it although I was not here.

Mr. GRAY. Where does that appear?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agreement appears on page 7355 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3738) to place the American merchant marine, engaged in the foreign trade, upon an equality with that of other nations.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act there shall be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to any vessel of more than 500 tons gross register, whether sail or steam, constructed in and wholly owned by citizens of the United States or registered pursuant to the laws thereof, and which shall be engaged in the foreign trade, plying between the ports of the United States and foreign ports, the sum of 15 cents per gross registered ton for the first 500 miles or fraction thereof sailed outward, and the same sum for the first 500 miles or fraction thereof sailed inward, on any voyage or voyages; 15 cents per gross registered ton for the second 500 miles or fraction thereof sailed outward, and the same sum for the second 500 miles or fraction thereof sailed inward; and 30 cents per gross registered ton for each thousand miles thereafter, and pro rata for any distance sailed less than 1,000 miles after the first thousand miles sailed: Provided, That the foreign port to which the voyage is made shall be distant more than 70 miles seaward from the ocean or Gulf boundary of the United States; and such payments to any vessel as aforesaid shall be paid to the owner or owners thereof, upon proof of the distance actually sailed, to be ascertained and the payment to be made under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe and promulgate, distances between ports to be determined by measurements which shall be furnished by the United States Hydrographic Office to the Bureau of Navigation. The payments at the rate of 30 cents per ton for each 1,000 miles sailed, as herein provided, shall continue for the term of ten years at that rate, and thereafter for another term of nine years at a reduction of 3 cents per ton each year upon each 1,000 miles sailed, and pro rata for any less distance.

SEC. 2. That no vessel shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless its entire cargo shall be loaded at a port or ports of the United States and discharged at one or more foreign ports, or shall be loaded at one or more foreign ports and discharged at a port or ports in the United States; nor shall a vessel be entitled to receive payment under this act unless it shall have freight on board at the time of sailing to the amount, in tons weight or measurement, of at least 25 per cent. of the net register tonnage, 2,240 pounds or 40 cubic feet to make a ton of cargo.

SEC. 3. That no vessels shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless all the officers thereof shall be citizens of the United States, in conformity with the existing laws, nor unless upon each departure from the United States the following proportion of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, to-wit: During the first two years this act shall be in force, one-sixth thereof, during the next three succeeding years, one-third thereof, and during the remaining term of this act, at least one-half thereof, nor unless there be carried on vessels of less than 1,000 tons gross register one native-born apprentice, and on vessels of 1,000 tons and upward one such apprentice for each thousand tons or three-fourths fraction thereof.

SEC. 4. That, to owners of vessels already built, payments under this act shall be made for such time only as each shall stand inspection and hold character, if wood built, not lower than the second grade (A 1), in a scale of six grades, in the Record of American and Foreign Shipping, or the corresponding classification in any other incorporated American register of shipping that has or shall have the unqualified indorsement of the boards of marine underwriters of New Orleans, La., New York, N. Y., Philadelphia, Pa., Boston, Mass., and San Francisco, Cal. If iron or steel built, payments shall be made for such time only as each vessel shall stand inspection and hold character not lower than the second class (A 1, thirteen years), in the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the corresponding classification in any other incorporated American register of shipping that has or shall have the unqualified indorsements of the boards of marine underwriters of New Orleans, La., New York, N. Y., Philadelphia, Pa., Boston, Mass., and San Francisco, Cal.

SEC. 5. That vessels keel-laid and built after the passage of this act, in order to be entitled to payments after losing or lapsing from class in the first grade if wood built, or from the first class or division if iron or steel built, must have been so well constructed as to have been classed originally in the highest grade of the first class, or first division, to-wit: If wood built, A 1, twelve years; and if iron or steel built, A 1, sixteen years in the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the corresponding classification in any other incorporated American register of shipping that has or shall have the unqualified indorsements of the boards of marine underwriters of New Orleans, La., New York, N. Y., Philadelphia, Pa., Boston, Mass., and San Francisco, Cal., the foregoing classification to be subject to the approval of the Bureau of Navigation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Vessels so built and classed for the highest character shall receive payments as in section 4 provided for vessels already built. Vessels unclassified in the register named in this act, or in an American register whose rules for building and inspection are fully equal in requirements, and all vessels whose class has expired or been suspended or withdrawn shall be disentitled to payments while this disqualification exists.

SEC. 6. That the Government of the United States shall have the right, during the time this act shall be in force, to purchase or charter any vessels receiving the benefits of this act at a price to be fixed by agreement with their owners or agents, or by the judgment of appraisers, mutually selected in case of disagreement.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix the times and manner of payments, prescribe the vouchers, with forms of account, and verifications, upon which payments shall be made, and shall adopt whatever regulations may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I ask that in line 7, section 1, after the word "or," the words "so owned and" be inserted; so as to read "so owned and registered." It is an omission.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the word "or," it is proposed to insert the words "so owned and;" so as to read:

Constructed in and wholly owned by citizens of the United States, or so owned and registered, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I ask that the next Calendar bill (S. 3739) may also be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read. Does the Senator wish it to be taken up for consideration?

Mr. FRYE. Ask that it be read for information now. Practically the two bills are one. One is supplemental to the other, and the discussion that takes place over one will apply to the other bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3739) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contracts for a term of not less than five nor more than ten years in duration, with American citizens, for the carrying of mails on American steam-ships, between ports of the United States and such ports in foreign countries, the Dominion of Canada excepted, as in his judgment will best subserve and promote the postal and commercial interests of the United States. Said contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidder for the performance of said service on each route, and the Postmaster-General shall have the right to reject all bids not in his opinion reasonable for the attaining of the purposes named.

SEC. 2. That before making any contract for carrying ocean mails in accordance with this act the Postmaster-General shall give public notice by advertising once a week, for three months, in such daily papers as he shall select in each of the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, Charleston, Norfolk, Savannah, Galveston, and Mobile, and, when the proposed service is to be on the Pacific Ocean, then in San Francisco, Tacoma, and Portland. Such notice shall describe the route, the time when such contract will be made, the duration of the same, the size of the steamers to be used, the number of trips a year, the times of sailing, and the time when the service shall commence, which shall not be more than three years after the contract shall be let. The details of the mode of advertising and letting such contracts shall be conducted in the manner prescribed in chapter 8 of Title XLVI of the Revised Statutes for the letting of inland mail contracts so far as the same shall be applicable to the ocean mail service.

SEC. 3. That the vessels employed in the mail service under the provisions of this act shall be American-built steam-ships, owned and officered by American citizens, in conformity with the existing laws, and upon each departure from the United States the following proportion of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, to wit: During the first two years of such contract for carrying the mails, one-fourth thereof; during the next three succeeding years, one-third thereof; and during the remaining time of the continuance of such contract at least one-half thereof; and shall be constructed after the latest and most approved types, with all the modern improvements and appliances for ocean steamers. They shall be divided into four classes. The first class shall be iron or steel screw steam-ships capable of maintaining a speed of 20 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons. No vessel except of said first class shall be accepted for said mail service under the provisions of this act between the United States and Great Britain. The second class shall be iron or steel steam-ships capable of maintaining a speed of 16 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 5,000 tons. The third class shall be iron or steel steam-ships capable of maintaining a speed of 14 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 2,500 tons. The fourth class shall be iron or steel or wooden steam-ships capable of maintaining a speed of 12 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 1,500 tons. It shall be stipulated in the contract or contracts to be entered into for the said mail service that said vessels may carry passengers, with their baggage, in addition to said mails, and may do all ordinary business done by steam-ships.

SEC. 4. That all steam-ships of the first, second, and third classes employed as above and hereafter built shall be constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, and according to plans and specifications to be agreed upon by and between the owners and the Secretary of the Navy, and they shall be of sufficient strength and stability to carry and sustain the working and operation of at least four effective rifled cannon of a caliber of not less than 6 inches, and shall be of the highest rating known to maritime commerce. And all vessels of said three classes heretofore built and so employed shall, before they are accepted for the mail service herein provided for, be thoroughly inspected by a competent naval officer or constructor detailed for that service by the Secretary of the Navy; and such officer shall report, in writing, to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall transmit said report to the Postmaster-General; and no such vessel not approved by the Secretary of the Navy as suitable for the service required shall be employed by the Postmaster-General as provided for in this act.

SEC. 5. That the rate of compensation to be paid for such ocean mail service of the said first-class ships shall not exceed the sum of $6 a mile, and for the second-class ships $3 a mile, by the shortest practicable route for each outward voyage; for the third-class ships shall not exceed $1.50 a mile, and for the fourth-class ships $1 a mile for the actual number of miles required by the Post-Office Department to be traveled on each outward bound voyage: Provided, That in the case of failure from any cause to perform the regular voyages stipulated for in said contracts, or any of them, a pro rata deduction shall be made from the compensation on account of such omitted voyage or voyages; and that suitable fines and penalties may be imposed for delays or irregularities in the due performance of service according to the contract, to be determined by the Postmaster-General: Provided further, That no steam-ship so employed and so paid for carrying the United States mails shall receive any other bounty or subsidy from the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 6. That upon each of said vessels the United States shall be entitled to have transported, free of charge, a mail-messenger, whose duty it shall be to receive, sort, take in charge, and deliver the mails to and from the United States, and who shall be provided with suitable room for the accommodation of himself and the mails.

SEC. 7. That officers of the United States Navy may volunteer for service on said mail vessels, and when accepted by the contractor or contractors may be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy whenever in his opinion such assignment can be made without detriment to the service, and while in said employment they shall receive furlough pay from the Government, and such other compensation from the contractor or contractors as may be agreed upon by the parties: Provided, That they shall only be required to perform such duties as appertain to the merchant service.

SEC. 8. That said vessels shall take, as cadets or apprentices, one American-born boy under twenty-one years of age for each 1,000 tons gross register, and one for each majority fraction thereof, who shall be educated in the duties of seaman-ship, rank as petty officers, and receive such pay for their services as may be reasonable.

SEC. 9. That such steamers may be taken and used by the United States as transports or cruisers, upon payment to the owners of the fair actual value of the same at the time of the taking, and if there shall be a disagreement as to the fair actual value between the United States and the owners, then the same shall be determined by two impartial appraisers, one to be appointed by each of said parties, they at the same time selecting a third, who shall act in said appraisal in case the two shall fail to agree.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, these two bills have been reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce. The first is known to the public as the Farquhar bill, he being chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine in the House, who reported it favorably there. The bill explains itself. It is a bounty on tonnage on all ships, sail or steam, wood or iron or steel, of a certain class, the class being a very perfect requirement. It is also known as the bill agreed upon by what is called the Shipping League Association of the United States. This is an association which has been in existence eight or ten years and has devoted itself and its deliberations entirely to the question of the revival of the American merchant marine or that portion of the marine engaged in the foreign carrying trade. It has held conventions in various parts of the country, and finally agreed without any division of opinion upon this bill as the result of its best judgment. It has been very extensively and warmly indorsed, and it may not be occupying the time improperly for me to call the attention of the Senate to these indorsements, the most of them being for the tonnage bill. They are as follows:

Yesterday I received, in addition, a resolution from the Pensacola Board of Trade in favor of the bill. I supposed that Mr. Thurber, of the New York and Brazilian Steam-Ship Company, would very much prefer the postal subsidy bill, but on January 23 I received a letter from him in which he gives very strong reasons, and to him conclusive, in favor of both bills, but especially in favor of this tonnage bill. He says:

The objective points that promise the greatest return for our efforts are the West Indies and South and Central America, because: First, the foreign shipping is not so firmly entrenched as in the trade with Europe; and, second, because we have the advantage of contiguity, and also that this country produces more of the products which are demanded by our South American neighbors; and, third, that we consume more of the products that they can and do supply.

He says:

Therefore, the steamers that are needed in the South American trade are large, economical freight-carriers, with good but smaller accommodations for passenger service than steamers engaged in the European trade. An average speed of ten to eleven knots is, in this trade, the more desirable on account of cost of running; rates of freight can be made lower.

I claim the "tonnage" bill will give ample pay to that class of steam lines to stimulate the increase of present lines and the establishment of many others to South America that will be very advantageous to this country.

Now I come to what under the "tonnage" bill will become very valuable to this country, and that is the establishment, the freighting on the ocean of the character of steamers designated as "tramps." I predict with the passage of the tonnage bill introduced in the House by Mr. FARQUHAR that within five years "American tramps" will drive foreign tramps nearly out of the South American trade and invade the European and East India trade, and that our ship-yards all over this country will be driven to their utmost capacity to supply the demand.

The first results we shall realize from the passage of this bill will be the transfer of the coal traffic England now has the control of in the West Indies and South and Central America to this country. Every point on our seaboard where coal can be delivered at from $2 to $2.50 per ton will have demands far beyond any present supply for the South American markets.

Every sailing vessel available and suitable for the trade will be at once employed, eventually to be driven out by steam colliers.

Every railroad that can supply coal at ports at tide water will have demands for coal that will exceed their capacity, because the "tonnage" bill is the one factor that will turn the scale in our favor. You can readily see that when you know that the price of Welsh coal in the West Indies is almost $6.50; in Brazil, $11 to $12; in the River Plate republics, $12 to $13, and the difference in the price from, say, an average of $2 in Wales consists of cost of freight.

I hope to live to see the time, because of the benefits of the tonnage bill, that we will not only freight 72 per cent. of our own exports and imports, as we did as late as 1860, against 11 per cent. to 12 per cent. now, and that American-built ships will compete for the East India trade, as our American clippers once did.

As to the cost of this bill, let me give the estimate of the Commissioner of Navigation, and there need not be any great mistake in an estimate of this kind, because it is well ascertained from the records of ships, both sail and steam, the number of miles that they actually travel in a year. Steamers are obliged to be held up over half the time at least in wharves and docks and for repairs, etc. Sailing vessels are held up a certain length of time. The average is found without any difficulty. In the testimony taken before the House committee there was a very large number of illustrations, so that it can be made reasonably certain what the cost of this bill will be.

The Commissioner of Navigation thinks it will be about $3,000,000 the year after it shall become a law, and that in the course of two, or three, or four years it will rise to five or six million dollars. I confess I shall be disappointed if in four or five years it does not reach to seven or eight million dollars. The larger the figure it reaches the more effect it will have had upon commerce. But his argument is that many of the vessels now in existence which will be received under the classification will necessarily in a year or two drop out, and that as to the vessels to be built under this law the requirements are so exacting and the provisions so rigorous that the capacities of the yards will not be sufficient to increase it to more than $6,000,000 within three or four years.

As to the ratio of bounty I find, on looking it over, that a sailing ship costing $50,000 would in a year receive about $5 a ton; that is, the number of miles sailed in the year would produce $5 a ton. If she was a ship of a thousand tons she would receive $5,000; and a steamer of the same size would receive about double that amount. Calculated on the percentages of cost of transportation, the Commissioner of Navigation sends me the following:

RATIO OF BOUNTY TO WHOLE COST OF SHIP TRANSPORTATION.

The whole cost of ship transportation includes the interest, insurance, and depreciation of the ship, besides the running expenses while making a voyage.

Taking the voyages of eight sailing ships, four in transatlantic trade and four in trade around Cape Horn, I find the average ratio of bounty to whole cost of transportation is 12.38 per cent.

Taking the voyages of five steam-ships running from New York to ports in the West Indies and Mexico, I find the average ratio of bounty to whole cost of transportation is 10.93 per cent.

For the entire marine, sail and steam, and for the period of the operation of the bounty bill, the average ratio as above may be stated approximately at 11½ per cent.

WM. W. BATES,
Commissioner of Navigation.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

In other words, the amount paid to sailing ships and to steam-ships under this tonnage bill would be about one-half of the depreciation, interest, and insurance.

The other bill I wish to call the attention of the Senate to because I regard it as a very important one indeed and because the principle involved in it has received the sanction of the Senate several times by a very large majority. That is what is known as the postal-subsidy bill. It provides that the Postmaster-General may make contracts, after advertisement, with the lowest bidder for the carrying of the United States ocean mails hereafter on American vessels. It provides for four classes of American vessels. The first class is vessels of 8,000 tons measurement and not less, capable of maintaining at sea a speed of 20 knots an hour, and it provides that no contract shall be made for carrying the mails between New York and Great Britain except on that class.

Now, I can simply say in relation to such vessels that they would be the best, fastest, stanchest, and most powerful in the world, and if any line should be put on between New York and Liverpool it would be a line which will be unequalled for strength, for speed, for comfort, and for everything that makes up a fine ship of to-day. I may say right here that the English ships are not built so well nor provided with so many comforts as the American. Take the City of Paris to-day, which is one of the finest ships there are in the service, which consumes, I imagine, 300 tons of coal every day she runs and requires one hundred and fifty men to handle it, and there is no provision whatever for those men after their day's work is over to wash, and they are compelled to go to bed as they are, covered with perspiration, smut, and coal ashes. Take a ship Mr. Cramp, of Philadelphia, built for Mr. Spreckels, to-day in his line, and it has an apartment with a shower-bath for those very men. I only speak of this as an illustration of the difference between an American-built ship, and the care in its construction shown for the comfort of the sailors, and an English-built ship.

I have no doubt, as I stated the other day, that if that postal bill should become a law, in three years there would be an American line between New York and Liverpool, and I have abundant reasons for saying that.

What will be the cost under this bill? Undoubtedly four ships of that class would cost $800,000 a year. But says, perhaps, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that is an enormous amount of money to pay for a line of four great ships between New York and Liverpool to carry the mails. In my judgment, no. The fourth-class vessels of this bill call for a dollar bounty where the first-class ships I am speaking of at this moment call for $6, and yet the one-dollar bounty is greater in proportion than the six. A steamer going 10 knots an hour can do it on 20 tons of coal a day with four or five men to handle it, but a steamer making 20 knots an hour must have 300 tons of coal a day and employ one hundred and seventy-five men to handle it.

Then again, Mr. President, it was not so much as Great Britain paid a year to establish the Cunard Line. It was no more than we undertook to pay the Collins Line to establish that. The second class is required to go 16 knots an hour and to be first class in every particular. I have no doubt if this bill should become a law there would be a line of that kind between New York and the River Plate. That class of ships, 5,000 tons gross tonnage, would be employed between San Francisco, Tacoma, and Seattle, on Puget Sound, and Australia, Japan, and China, and between New York and the River Plate. The third class is the 3,000-ton vessels and is to receive a bounty of a dollar and a half; and the fourth class is the ordinary run of steamers of a thousand tons, either wood or steel, such steamers as would be used across the Caribbean Sea and in the Gulf of Mexico.

This bill also contains a provision that the plans and specifications for every ship must be approved by the Secretary of the Navy. It also contains a provision that one-quarter of the sailors for the first two years shall be Americans, and then a third, and then a half. It also provides that there shall be an American apprentice, who shall be a petty officer and instructed in seamanship, for every thousand tons on each one of the vessels.

Mr. GRAY. Is it not also provided that the sailors "shall be constructed after the latest and most approved types, with all the modern improvements and appliances?"

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator so read it?

Mr. GRAY. I so read it in lines 10 and 11.

Mr. FRYE. In what section?

Mr. GRAY. At the top of page 3 those words occur.

Mr. FRYE. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. GRAY. I was asking the question jocularly, but it is not really quite clear, as a matter of construction, whether the clause that they "shall be constructed after the latest and most improved types, with all the modern improvements and appliances," applies to sailors or ships.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think it is open to the construction the Senator puts upon it. It applies to the vessels. The Senator will have to go back to the commencement of the section: "That the vessels employed in the mail service" shall be so and so, and shall carry such and such sailors, and shall be constructed so and so.

Mr. GRAY. But—

upon each departure from the United States the following proportion of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, to wit: During the first two years of such contract for carrying the mails, one-fourth thereof; during the next three succeeding years, one-third thereof; and during the remaining time of the continuance of such contract, at least one-half thereof; and shall be constructed after the latest and most approved types.

Mr. FRYE. No; there is a semicolon, and what follows relates back to the ships, as a matter of course. It is only an undertaking on the part of the Senator to read it wrong.

Mr. GRAY. No; I thought it was obscure.

Mr. FRYE. I read that over a great many times, examined it with a great deal of care, and am myself entirely satisfied with the language.

Mr. GRAY. I think the sailors ought to be of the kind described there.

Mr. FRYE. The bill provides, too, that these vessels shall be taken as cruisers whenever it is necessary.

Those are the two bills. The postal bill provides that no vessel receiving this subsidy shall draw anything from the United States Treasury under any other act of Congress in the matter of subsidy or bounty, so that one is practically supplemental to the other.

Now, I do not like to occupy the time of the Senate with speech-making. I do not think I ever in my life was so averse to talking in the Senate as I have been at this session of Congress. I do not care particularly to discuss the shipping bills. I have discussed them in Congress for twenty years. I know all the objections that can be made to them and all the arguments that will be made for them, and yet it hardly seems that I should ask the Senate to act upon these bills without saying something in relation to them and something in favor of their enactment into law.

I read the report of the Produce Exchange of New York, about a fortnight ago, Mr. Ferguson, I think, secretary, and I found that there sailed from New York last year carrying grain and breadstuffs, our grain and breadstuffs, 1,996 ships.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you mean different ships or voyages?

Mr. FRYE. Voyages. Four of those vessels were American and carried the American flag. The four American vessels carried 50,000 bushels of wheat. Six hundred and sixteen of those vessels were English. They carried 25,000,000 bushels. I found on reading the same report that in the month of April this very year the value of the importations was, in round numbers, $71,000,000 of imports; and that ships not carrying the American flag brought $55,000,000 of the imports. I found that the exports were $63,000,000, and that vessels carrying a foreign flag took fifty-four and one-half millions of that. I found that in that month we paid foreign vessels $11,000,000 for carrying our imports and our exports.

It has been estimated again and again that we paid every year $150,000,000 for carrying our own exports and imports in foreign ships. Including passengers it is an underestimate, and it will be found on investigation that we paid over $160,000,000 last year.

That settles one thing. Our carrying trade—and I hope no Senator will understand me as saying commerce—our carrying trade is absolutely dead so far as foreign commerce is concerned. We have four or five lines left only of steamers. Take the Brazilian line from New York to Brazil, three or four steamers, sailing, I think, once a month, from 3,500 to 3,900 tons each. That steam-ship line is kept on the ocean to-day by the Brazilian mail pay, and in no other possible way. Let Brazil withdraw that pay and that steam-ship line stops, the same as John Roach's did. That line lost $277,000 the first four years it ran. It never has paid a dividend from the day it was put on down to now. The United States pays it nothing for carrying its mails, not a cent, and refused to pay it enough to reimburse the actual cost of handling mails. If we do nothing, how long will that line stay on?

Take the line to Venezuela. It went there and established its trade; it was the pioneer. It lives, it has a bare margin for profit, but it has succeeded in building up between the United States and Venezuela the largest trade, three times over, that we have in the whole of that southern country in proportion to the population and wealth; and we are getting the benefit of it, while the United States pays it a bare pitance, a cent a mile I think it is, for carrying the mails. There is now a Spanish line coming in in competition. Under the act of the Cortes two years ago that Spanish line will receive $5,000 for every round trip made. How long will the Venezuelan line stay?

There is another line, the New York and Cuban Mail Steamship Company, nine steamers to Havana, Vera Cruz, Santiago de Cuba, and Cienfuegos; and we pay it $300 a quarter for carrying United States mails. There is a Spanish line that has come on within a year to compete with that, and under that act of the Cortes the Spanish line is receiving $5,000 for every round trip.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if the people of this country get the benefit of the commerce that is created by that Spanish line, so far as it comes to this country.

Mr. FRYE. So far as it comes to this country they get the benefit of the commerce, beyond any manner of doubt, and I am inclined to think our freight charges are low, and very likely it is a good trade—if there is no sentiment in the case and no humiliation in the inability of a great maritime nation like this to carry its own products.

Now, how long will that line exist? New Zealand has withdrawn her subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company. I think Mr. Spreckels's line has it now—$400,000 a year—when our country was paying for carrying our mails about nine or eleven thousand dollars, I have forgotten which; and the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company can no longer compete in the Pacific Ocean with the new subsidized line from the Canadian Pacific. You take the entire length of the Canadian Pacific Railroad with no interstate-commerce law to bind it and control it in any way, and the great ships that have been built at its western terminus to sail to China, Japan, and Australia, what will become of the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Line? It will disappear and unless Congress does something, and does it soon, too, there will not be a single steam-ship line traversing the oceans of the world carrying the American flag, not one.

I visited once many of the great ports of the world. If I had visited those ports twenty-five years ago I would have seen the American flag at the peak of scores and scores of beautiful ships in every port. During my visit two or three years ago I never saw the American flag.

Now, this is a great nation. We boast of it immensely. We are complimenting ourselves hugely now over the census returns, over our wealth, over our manufacturing industries, our mining industries; and yet to-day we are falling into the contempt of the whole world because we, a maritime nation, have no ships on the ocean; and we are entitled to that contempt too. We are a giant, but we are bound. We are a Samson, but our locks are shorn.

I take it in discussing these questions every Senator here will admit that I am stating the absolute naked facts and that in the foreign carrying trade the United States is practically dead to-day. Why? I am not going into a discussion of the tariff with my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I am not going to discuss the cause unless it becomes necessary in order to supply a remedy. There is the dead body. I wish to know is it worth our while to resurrect it and breathe life into it? If it is, how shall we do it? I can not understand the innermost thoughts and feelings of an American citizen who can listen to the statement of facts about our foreign carrying trade and not feel an impulse to go back once more on to the ocean where we stood in such proud conspicuousness thirty years ago. I can not understand an American citizen who cares nothing in relation to it, and simply replies to you, "Are we not getting them to carry our imports and exports as cheap as we could do it?" I can not fathom the heart of such a man.

What is the trouble with our merchant marine?

I say it is dead for want of protection. It is the only great industry in the United States of America of which the same can be said. Our people are paying $50,000,000 a year to keep alive the sugar-growing industry of the United States. Six million dollars a year will revive this dead body of our merchant marine and keep it on the ocean. We used to protect it. We had in the early days differential duties, and they were a protection and a power for prosperity in this direction. But we began to make commercial treaties, one after another, with the nations of the earth, and when we had completed them there was no power of protection by differential duties, and there never can be until we have abrogated every one of these treaties and commenced de novo.

We did more than that. We provided by law March 1, 1817, that no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be imported into the United States from any foreign port or place except in vessels of the United States or in such foreign vessels as truly belong to the citizens of that country of which the goods are the growth, production, or manufacture. That was the law, and remained so for a long while, and it did afford protection and encouragement to our marine. But civilization advanced, and in 1849 that law was repealed, and the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Meredith, made this proclamation:

First. In consequence of the alterations of the British navigation laws, above referred to, British vessels, from British or other foreign ports, will (under our existing laws), after the 1st of January next, be allowed to enter our ports with cargoes of the growth, manufacture, or production of any part of the world.

Second. Such vessels and their cargoes will be admitted from and after the date before mentioned, on the same terms as to duties, imports, and charges, as vessels of the United States and their cargoes.

W. M. MEREDITH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

That was October 15, 1849, and from that moment down to now your vessels engaged in the foreign carrying trade have been absolutely unprotected. Worse than that, for as I said the other day you enacted a law authorizing the Postmaster-General to seize any of them and to compel them to carry the United States mails for the sea postages. Then when the sea postage at Berne was cut down four and five and six times you compelled your vessels to carry your mails for the 2 cents sea postage, while Great Britain and every other maritime nation on the earth was paying from two to three times more every year than they received from the entire mail, and you are making all the way from $500,000 to $1,000,000 a year out of your foreign mails.

We had protection on our coastwise vessels, a law on our statute-books for a century forbidding all competition with them by foreigners. What is the result? To-day in your coastwise trade you have thirty-five thousand vessels; you have a tonnage of 4,500,000 tons, and the cheapest freights known to the world. The tonnage of the lakes alone in freight is 40,000,000 tons a year, while the entire tonnage of the great cities of London and Liverpool is not 30,000,000 tons a year. You are taking this very year through St. Mary's Falls 8,000,000 tons of freight, a million and a half more tons than are taken through the Suez Canal. Our coastwise and lake fleet is four times as large as the coastwise fleet of Great Britain to-day and larger than the coastwise fleets of all the maritime nations of the whole world.

Again, I repeat, your freights are lower than the freights anywhere in the known world. That is what protection has done for that business; and the other indicates what want of protection has done for that.

Why do you leave your ships engaged on the ocean without protection? What is your excuse? You protect the iron mines, the coal mines, the iron factories, the woolen factories, the cotton factories, the silk factories, and your coastwise trade. Why do you say that you are powerless to afford any protection to the ships engaged in the foreign trade?

The Senator from Missouri very likely will say, "It costs more to build ships here and you ought to admit foreign ships to American registry free." That is one of his panaceas. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri—I think I have said it to him before and I probably shall again before this discussion is through—that if Great Britain would give the United States to-day every iron tramp she has the United States could do no more of the foreign carrying trade than she does now. I could have shown the Senator last year twelve ships as good as ever were built in the United States, not one of them over eight years old, each one of which he could have bought for 50 per cent. of its value. There is no man in America to-day can take a present of an iron ship from Great Britain and run it in the foreign carrying trade. Why not?

I was in Liverpool three years ago. I went to see the United States consul-general, Captain Russell, an old shipmaster, a very bright man, a Democrat of the old faith, a free-trader, as most shipmasters are. I told Captain Russell that I was anxious to have, and to have faithfully given, so that there could be no mistake about it, the wages paid to sailors and officers by every maritime nation on earth, and, more than that, I desired to have the cost of living on board ships. "Why," he said, "that is an enormous job." Said I, "I know it is, captain, but it is information that I want very greatly and from a source where it is not open to contradiction." He obtained it for me. He did not send it directly to me, but to the Secretary of State and requested him to send me a copy, as the work had been done at my request. The Secretary sent me a copy and I laid it by for future use. He has given the tables here. He says:

Reference to these tables will show that the vessels of the United States pay the highest rate of wages, besides costing more for maintenance of the crews, than those of any other nation. This of course refers to voyages commencing in the United States; but even when they commence in foreign ports, that is, ship their crews and obtain their supplies at a foreign port, they then average higher rates than vessels of other nationalities as regards cost of maintenance.

British vessels in domestic ports can procure crews for from 37 per cent. to 32 per cent. lower than those paid on American vessels, which is a serious item in the disbursement account. Then, again, the cost of maintenance on American ships is about 40 cents per day per man, against the English 29 cents, or a difference of 27 per cent. in favor of the latter. When it is considered that provisions, such as beef, pork, and flour, which are the principal articles of food consumed, can be obtained in the United States, if anything, at a lower price than in England, it seems remarkable that the crews of our vessels should cost 27 per cent. more per man for maintenance, yet such appears to be the case.

It is an acknowledged fact that the living on board our vessels is superior to that of other nations, and it is generally asserted that larger quantities of food are supplied to the crew, the scale of provision laid down by Congress being rarely if ever resorted to.

The wages paid on vessels belonging to Norway and Sweden, Russia, Germany, Denmark, Austria, and Spain average about 47 to 50 per cent. lower than those of United States vessels, and the cost of maintenance about 32 per cent. less, excepting those of Germany, which cost about 10 per cent. less only.

He accompanies this by the tables which I will have printed. They show from 35 to 50 per cent. less cost of wages of seamen and officers and from 27 to 35 per cent. less cost of maintenance. Now, if there was nothing else you could not run your ship against a foreign ship. The demand for lower freights comes every day and every hour of the day. The margin is small for profits in the carrying trade, and the difference between the wages and the cost of living alone would wipe out the margin for the American ship.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator, while he is on that topic, inform us—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. GRAY. I will not interrupt the Senator if he at all objects.

Mr. FRYE. No; I yield with pleasure.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator inform us why it is that an American vessel owned by Americans and under the American flag sailing between New York and Liverpool can not be sailed, so far as the compensation of the crew and the provisioning of the vessel are concerned, as cheaply as one that sails under the British flag, when they buy their provisions at the same ports, get their crews from the same sources, of the same nationalities, as American vessels are permitted to do and do to-day?

Mr. FRYE. I could without the slightest difficulty give the Senator ample reasons for the difference, but as the statement has been made as a matter of fact by Captain Russell I do not think I shall waste the time of the Senate in order to do it.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will allow me, I have here the statement of another experienced navigator who says it is the fact that a vessel sailed under the American flag, upon the same route with a vessel under the British flag, can be sailed as cheaply, so far as the compensation for the crew and the provisioning for the crew is concerned, as the British vessel.

Mr. FRYE. Why, Mr. President, the method of treatment and the manner of living on board a British ship and an American ship are as different as the sun from the moon. The American sailor will not live as the foreign does. Does the Senator think that Spain treats her sailor on board ship as Americans do?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me to suggest, for fear he may be forgetting it, that the moment the Swedish or Norwegian sailor at Liverpool or elsewhere enlists on an American ship he falls into fraternity with American sailors and demands the utmost they have ever had? Of course he will sail for his own nationality with inferior accommodations, pay, and provision, but when he sails under an American flag he naturally wants the best the American sailor gets.

Mr. FRYE. As a matter of fact, of course it is our tariff that has caused this difference. There is no doubt about that. Our tariff has increased the wages of laboring men in our protected industries in this country, and you can not increase the wages of one class without increasing those of the other. It has made luxuries abroad necessities here and increased the cost of living, whether on board ship or on shore.

But, Mr. President, I will not stop here. We are handicapped in another way. Every maritime nation in the world other than ours does protect its vessels engaged in foreign carrying trade.

Mr. MORGAN. They protect everybody but the sailors, do they not?

Mr. FRYE. They do not protect the sailors, but they protect everybody who owns and sails ships. I sent to the Governments of all the nations to obtain from headquarters, so that there could be no mistake about it, just what they were doing for their vessels engaged in the foreign carrying trade, and can not be in error.

England commenced the protective policy a great many years ago. Some Senators insist that England never subsidized any ships. She has been paying subsidies for fifty years and is paying them to-day, not only for carrying her mails, but for commercial reasons. Mr. Wells is not right in his assertions. She paid from 1848 to 1854 $23,390,000, and she has paid since that time $153,000,000. She started in 1848 with $3,250,000 a year; gradually ran it up to $6,000,000; then down in our war to $3,000,000 and a little over; and after the war was over and we undertook to subsidize the Collins Line she again increased it to $6,000,000, and to-day is paying $3,000,000 in postal subsidies.

I know it will be said that she does this only in the interest of her postal service; that she opens her mail contracts to competition, regardless of the nationality of the competitor. That is not true; neither statement is accurate. I looked through Hansard's Reports in reference to this matter, and found a great variety of statements made in Parliament and by Government officials to the contrary.

It was said the French line had been authorized to carry the English mails. Parliament resented the idea that any mail of Great Britain should be carried under a foreign flag, insisted that it should not be done, and it was not. I will ask leave, Mr. President, to print these extracts without reading them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The papers referred to are as follows:

ENGLISH SUBSIDIES.

In 1840 Col. Dawson Damer criticised the policy of the Government in paying such large sums for carrying the mails. The chancellor of the exchequer, in reply, said:

"He was not there to criticise the policy pursued by other countries, but to defend the principle we had adopted: that it was not for this Government to occupy the lines of communication by armed steamers, but rather to encourage and assist the private enterprise of the country, to aid it, but not to interfere with it. And if the time should come when vessels which were employed in peace were required for war, the country would find that by having encouraged commercial enterprise and private speculation a sufficient number of steamers would be obtained when occasion occurred."

In 1852, in reply to a criticism of Viscount Jocelyn, Mr. Cowper said:

"According to an estimate which would be found in the report of the committee, the gross amount received by the post-office upon foreign and colonial postage was £556,492. The net receipts, deducting the amount to be paid to foreign countries and the inland postage, were £443,782. The annual amount paid for the service which earned this was £22,390. The total amount paid for all lines, including colonial, foreign, and the British Islands, was £77,797, and this was paid to vessels which earned £21,613, carried to the account of the post-office. It had been necessary to pay large sums on the chief lines in order to induce the parties to embark their money in the undertakings required."

In a debate in 1857 Mr. Provand said:

"From 1854 to 1867 the Peninsular and Oriental Company received subsidies which were equal to 4s. 2d. per mile. This contract we are considering is equal to 6s. 2d. or 7s. 3d. a mile, according to the way in which mileage is calculated."

And further:

"When the first large subsidy was granted in 1867 I find that the company submitted their accounts of probable earnings for ordinary trade and probable expenditure for carrying on the service, and said that they required a certain subsidy to pay a dividend, which they put at 6 per cent."

March 14, 1862.—Mr. W. Williams said:

"There were items in the vote which were very objectionable. For instance, for the mail between Brazil and the West Indies, 30,000. He would then refer to the charge of 25,000 for conveyance of the mails between Panama and Calcutta. They had nothing to do with the west coast of America. He knew they had an interest in Panama, as a means of direct communication, but not in the intercourse between the two points. He also objected to the charge of 14,000 for mails between Australia and New Zealand."

Mr. Crawford said:

"He had never seen more ignorance displayed on any subject. The honorable member talked of there being no trade between this country and South America. The trade between this country and South America amounted to £5,000,000 annually, and for the maintenance of that trade it was necessary to keep up an effective communication. The line between Australia and New Zealand was part of the main line from this country, and recent events have shown how important it was to have frequent means of communication."

"It was necessary that the merchants of this country should have as speedy means of communication by steamers and by telegraphs as could be obtained. What was beneficial to individuals must be beneficial to the state."

Mr. C. Turner said:

"He was opposed to a reduction in the postal subsidies, as he thought that, on the whole, the Government were no losers by the contracts; while the important benefits they conferred upon the commercial interests of this country were undeniable. There was a very large trade with South America, and, being connected with the Pacific Mail Company, he could state that the Government received fully the amount of payment to that company."

Vote agreed to.

August 9, 1867.—The Duke of Montrose, postmaster-general, speaking of the proposed termination of the contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company, said:

"A very curious misapprehension has got abroad among the public, to the effect that we were intending to give up the control of the postal communication with India, which we possess by keeping it in our own hands, and to throw it entirely into the hands of foreign Governments. Such an idea never entered my mind or that of any member of the Government, and the only ground there could be for this suspicion was that in giving notice of our tenders we did not state that we would not contract with any foreign Government. From this the notion has been taken that we were going to contract with the Sociétés Messageries Impériales, of France, and to give up the entire control of the English communication by our own vessels."

"There is no ground for that notion; and I can only imagine that it originated because in the committee of the House of Commons it was suggested that we should avail ourselves of the assistance of the Messageries Impériales in certain cases; and it was suggested by some that the service should be thrown into the hands of the Messageries Impériales if the contract would be taken cheaper than by any of our countrymen. That is wrong; but I do not mean to say that we ought not to avail ourselves in certain cases of the Messageries Impériales. I say that to throw everything into the hands of a foreign country would be extremely impolitic, although we might in the first instance do these duties at a cheaper rate."

"A case in point is the subsidy of £1,200,000 per annum which the British Government is now paying the Peninsular and Oriental for its East India and China service. At the time that the existing contract was awarded it was stated in the House of Commons that the Norddeutscher Lloyd or the Messageries Maritimes stood ready to carry the British, East India, and China mails for one-half or one-third the price demanded by the British company. There was one—to England's credit, it can be said, only one—statesman who was willing to accept these foreign propositions. But Postmaster-General Raikes rose and crushed him by the remark: 'I think that if the honorable member would only take the pains to study the course of popular opinion, he would find that a contract with the North German Lloyd or the Messageries Maritimes would have a very slight chance of being adopted by the House of Commons.'"

August 15, 1867.—Mr. Hunt, secretary of the treasury, in answer to a question, spoke substantially as above and said:

"One very significant feature in these reports is the copy of a letter from J. Henniker Heaton, a member of the British Parliament, addressed to the Right Hon. H. Cecil Raikes, M. P., postmaster-general of Great Britain, concerning the deficit in postal receipts, in the course of which he says: 'It can not be insisted too strongly that the subsidies are not paid by way of making up a deficiency in the postal accounts, but in order to keep up the character of our merchant fleet. In short, the subsidies are paid as a matter of state policy, and the postal service should therefore not be saddled with them.'

"Continuing, Mr. Heaton remarks: 'The post-office itself repudiates the suggestion that the deficit caused by these enormous subsidies should be regarded as a deficit caused by the operations of the department. The claim that the post-office should be charged with the whole expense of this packet or ocean service must be considered as barred, by the simple fact that few of the mail packets were established either by the post-office or for merely postal purposes, their expense being far beyond what such requirements would justify.'

"Mr. Heaton then clinches his argument by saying: 'To assume that these packets were really established for post-office purposes is to charge the Government with the most absurd extravagance. The West Indian packets, for instance, were established at a cost of 240,000, per annum, though the utmost return that was expected for letters was 40,000, leaving 200,000, clear deficit. Indeed, as was stated in the House of Lords by Lord Montagu, who, when chancellor of the exchequer, arranged the first contract for the mail steamers, the cost of the packet service, which was said to swallow up the whole revenue now derived from the post-office, had no more to do with the penny postage than the expense of the war with Afghanistan or China. It was as distinct from the post-office as the expense of the army or navy.'"

November 29, 1867.—Secretary Hunt said:

"The arrangement with the company was conducted on the part of the post-office by Mr. Scudmore; the company submitted their books to him. After this examination the company expressed themselves willing to reduce their term from 500,000, to 400,000, provided the period was extended from six to twelve years; but they accompanied the abatement with the proviso that their shareholders should be guaranteed a dividend of 6 per cent, upon a certain stated capital; on the other hand they expressed their readiness to allow the Government to share to the extent of one-fourth in all the profits beyond 8 per cent, which might become divisible."

"After a great deal of consideration given to these further terms the Government adopted them with this condition, to which the company assented: That the guaranty of 6 per cent, should in no case render the Government liable to pay a greater sum than 500,000, the original amount asked. The company also agreed to the condition desired by the admiralty that the Government should have power to buy or charter their vessels in cases of expediency for the public service."

March 20, 1868.—Mr. Thomas Cave said:

"The House should remember, too, that owing to the granting of these subsidies the Government during the Crimean war had at its command a magnificent fleet of transports, and which otherwise they would not have possessed."

June 30, 1862.—Lord Claude Hamilton asked the postmaster-general if he could inform the House of the amount of the subsidy paid to the Royal Mail Steam-Parcel Company for carrying the mails to the West Indies and the amount of the net receipts from the ocean postage."

Mr. Fawcett, in reply, said that the amount paid to the Royal Mail Steam-Parcel Company as an annual subsidy under contract was 80,000, and the amount of net receipts from the ocean postage was 28,000."

June 23, 1867.—In the House of Commons, in debate on the following motion:

"That this House disapproves of any contract subsidizing any line of steamers to carry mails to the East for a long period of years without steps having been taken to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway by a subsidy to run a fast line of steamers from Vancouver to Asia."

Mr. Goschen, the chancellor of the exchequer, said, speaking of the Vancouver line:

"There would probably be a postal advantage on account of the shortening of the time which the fast steamers would secure between England and Hong Kong, and still more between England and Yokohama and other ports; but we have to consider whether the advantages of a second postal line for military, commercial, and other reasons, and whether the possession of three steamers specially prepared, as I believe it is proposed they should be, under the supervision of the admiralty authorities, so as to be available as armed cruisers in time of war, would be worth the large sum of money asked."

Mr. Heaton inquired "whether it is intended that the whole of the cost of the Vancouver service shall be charged to the post-office" and said:

"I protest against more money being taken from the post-office revenue than is now paid. I am strongly in favor of the Canadian Pacific route, and the post-office expenditure is now sufficient for both services if equally divided."

Mr. Goschen replied:

"Without wishing to commit the Government in the least, I may say that I should prefer not to charge the post-office for services which are postal in one sense, but which are undertaken partly for political, commercial, and other objects."

The "contract to carry mails to the East," the subject of the above debate, provided a subsidy of 255,000, a year for ten years, the service to be weekly to Bombay and fortnightly to China. This contract was made March 18, 1867, for ten years. (See Consular Reports No. 112, January, 1890, pages 3 and 5.)

August 15, 1869.—Mr. Jackson, secretary to the treasury, in answer to a parliamentary question, said:

"The importance of the Canadian Pacific route for military and naval purposes was urged upon the Government by members of Parliament, public bodies, and members of both professions, and was one of the factors that led Her Majesty's Government, including the secretary of state for war and the first lord of the admiralty, to agree to the grant of a subsidy. I am afraid I should be traveling outside the limits of an answer if I were to specify the purposes aimed at, but their general nature is sufficiently obvious. I believe that a letter was addressed to the prime minister in favor of a subsidy, signed by nearly three hundred members of this house (Commons), and I am told the number would have been increased if more time had been afforded."

August 16, 1869.—Motion made and question proposed: "That the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company dated the 15th day of July, 1869, for the conveyance of Her Majesty's mails, troops, and stores between Halifax or Quebec and Hong-Kong, and for the hire and purchase of vessels as cruisers or transports, printed in Parliamentary Paper No. 263, of session 1869, be approved."

Mr. Provand said:

"Now this contract is for a fortnightly service between Canada, China, and Japan, and is to cost us 60,000, a year."

Mr. FRYE. These extracts show beyond any manner of question that the purpose of Great Britain in paying these enormous annual sums was partly mail, partly commerce, partly politics, and that she, to accomplish these purposes, went to the extent even of guaranteeing a dividend of 8 per cent. to some of the lines, and paid a great deal more than is provided for in this bill, though we start in under the disadvantage of the occupancy of all the great routes by foreign lines.

France paid last year for carrying her mails $6,000,000 and over. That was besides her bounty, the provision being the same as in this bill which I have reported from the Committee on Commerce, that whatever ship carried the mail and received pay for it should not be entitled to the bounty.

Italy paid over $3,000,000; Germany, $3,000,000; the Argentine Republic, $3,000,000; Brazil, nearly $2,000,000; Spain, a million and a half of dollars, and so on.

Allow me, Mr. President, to present a few facts illustrative of the difference in conduct of our Government and England towards the merchant marine.

When in 1870 we granted subsidies to the Pacific Mail Company, England commenced immediately increasing hers until it ran up to $6,000,000 a year.

We abandoned our policy and England again began to reduce.

In 1850 Great Britain made a contract with two lines of steam-ships, one to the West Indies and the other to Brazil, the River Plate country, and the west coast of South America.

The first, the Royal Mail Steam-Packet Company, was paid a subsidy of $1,350,000 a year and receives one up to now, though of course reduced. The other was the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, which still receives a subsidy of $225,000 a year.

When England found that two of her great lines, one receiving a subsidy of $2,000,000 and the other more, could not maintain competition with ships of other nations, a parliamentary commission investigated the matter and made two new contracts, paying a dividend of 8 per cent. on the English capital invested in the steam-ships, instead of the subsidies which were provided.

And here is an extract from the act:

Whenever the annual income of the company from all sources does not admit of the payment of a dividend of 8 per cent. on the capital employed, the subsidy shall be increased by so much—subject to a limit of 100,000, ($500,000)—as is required to make up such a dividend; and, on the other, that whenever the income is sufficient to allow a dividend exceeding 8 per cent. to be declared the company shall pay to the postmaster-general one-fourth of the excess.

To show what we are doing as compared with Great Britain:

England commenced her subsidies to the Spanish-American lines in 1862, paying those lines for the next fifteen years from a million and a quarter to a million and a half of dollars a year; since that time a little less than one-half as much.

England paid out last year over $1,500,000 for carrying the mails more than she received in postage.

The report of the superintendent of foreign mails for the United States of last year shows that we paid out for carrying our mails to vessels of the United States register $52,821.73; to foreign vessels about $380,000.

The entire amount paid out was $515,401; the amount received, $1,728,743; a clean profit, allowing for the inland postage, of over $700,000 on our foreign mail service last year.

In 1850 the cost of our mail service was, in round numbers, $5,000,000. We paid for mail service to Spanish America $500,000.

In 1888 our mail service cost nearly $56,000,000; Spanish America, $49,000.

From 1848 to 1861 we paid for mail service on vessels over $1,500,000 a year—practically all of it to American vessels.

During the war we paid our vessels about $75,000 annually, and to foreign $400,000.

From 1877 to now our foreign mail service has cost us on the average about $400,000 a year, 10 per cent. of it paid to our vessels, 90 per cent. to foreign vessels.

Our star-route service costs annually about $5,000,000; length of routes, 225,600 miles. Our ocean steam-ships, about $50,000; length of route, 1,900,000 miles.

By the contract of 1875, New Zealand and New South Wales paid a subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company of $400,000 a year for transportation of colonial mails to America and the British overland mails from San Francisco to the colonies.

The United States paid the same company for its outward mails for six months $5,802.

Under this contract, in 1884, the United States received for mails sent from San Francisco to Australia $36,479, while it paid $11,479, making a net profit of nearly $25,000.

It also made a net profit at the same time of $5,000 on carrying the English mails.

The same year the Red D Line, between New York and Venezuela received for mail pay about 1 cent a mile.

In 1889 we paid for transportation of our mails to all the countries of Central and South America a little over $48,000 to four lines—all we have—traveling over 2,000,000 miles.

The same year we paid coastwise steamers, protected by law, $563,000, sailing about 500,000 miles.

We paid twice more for mail service on the Florida Rivers than to Central America.

We paid for mail service on the rivers in Arkansas about $45,000, in Louisiana about $42,000, for our foreign service on the Pacific Ocean $42,000.

For the last twelve years, under the Postal Union reduction and the compulsory act, we have paid American vessels for carrying our mails, about $500,000; to foreign vessels, about $5,000,000; and have actually cleared a net profit of over $9,000,000, while England has paid during same time, for same service, over $40,000,000, at a loss to her, above the amount received for postage, of at least $20,000,000.

So much for England as compared with the United States. Now take Germany. Germany pays to the North German Lloyd line, under a contract for fifteen years, 4,500,000 marks, and she is besides giving liberal allowances for carrying the mails. That is over $1,000,000. Is it not worth it? I ask any Senator here if the North German Lloyd line is not worth to the Empire of Germany all the money that she pays to keep it on the ocean. If there was a war and Germany required war steamers and transports, would it not be worth infinitely more? Germany has just established and subsidized another line, and is talking about subsidizing one to Portugal and to South Africa. For that service she is to pay $214,000 a year. General Mason, consul-general at Frankfurt, says in his report:

The contract is for ten years, with a subvention at the rate of 900,000 marks—about $214,000—annually, or between two and three times as much as our great and generous Government is paying to the entire fleet of foreign-going steamships under the American flag. Thirteen voyages a year are stipulated, at the very moderate speed of 10½ knots. This new enterprise has been inspired by the magnificent result of the German experiment in subsidizing a steam line to China and Australia. For this service Germany pays a subsidy of more than a million dollars annually.

Consul-General Mason says further:

The thirteen voyages specified for each line are no longer sufficient to accommodate the largely augmented traffic.

He says in another report:

Germany is to-day absorbed and controlled by an aggressive mercantile spirit which is almost American in its restless energy, and far more than American in its grasp of the essential conditions of a vigorous foreign trade and the courageous enterprise with which it provides the necessary facilities for developing and sustaining it.

Take Spain. Spain has been paying subsidies for several years, somewhat on the English plan, making contracts with certain companies. The most important and extensive was by act of the Cortes in 1886, with the Compañía Transatlántica, under the terms of which this company is to receive $1,242,800 annually, from $1.18½ to $1.48 a mile. Now, where does that great line of steamships go? Let me show:

West India service, twelve voyages per annum from Cadiz via Palma (Canary Islands) to La Guayra, Porto Cabello, Cartagena, and Savannah, to Colon.

Distance, one way, 4,660 miles, or both ways, 9,320 miles.

Distance run, twelve voyages, 9,320 by 12, equals 111,840 miles.

One hundred and eleven thousand eight hundred and forty miles at 10.18 pesetas per mile equals 1,138,531½ pesetas; in United States currency, 1,138,531½ pesetas, at 19½ cents per peseta, equals $222,013.59 per year.

Or per voyage, $18,501.13.

The Spanish crews employed in this country carrying our imports and our exports, making forty-six arrivals in New York last year, number 2,600 men, and the ship property was valued at $7,350,000, with subsidies enormous in their amount, with the cost of living upon their ships one-half what it costs on ours, paying wages to their sailors and officers not one-half what we pay.

Now, take France. France pays under the act of 1881 bounties on construction, which I care nothing about and will not repeat; but it pays at the rate of 29 cents a net ton per 1,000 miles sailed on all her ships, sail, steam, iron, steel, for ten years, the premium to slightly decrease each year. These vessels must carry the French mails, if they are used, free.

Italy pays at the rate of 65 cents a ton for every thousand miles sailed. The bounty is not given to vessels sailing in ballast nor to any that do not sail from continent to continent, this law to remain in force ten years. She has great lines to-day to North America, the Atlantic coast of South America, to India, to all points on the Mediterranean, to Valparaiso, Singapore, Batavia, and Hong-Kong, run by one company.

It is unnecessary to go further, for these are the maritime nations that are competing with us. Now, what is their advantage? Subsidies to every one of them, less pay to their sailors and officers, less cost for the support of their crews and officers. These are the people we are compelled to compete with.

I repeat, let Great Britain give the Senator from Delaware an iron ship, first class, he can not sail it on the ocean in competition with these countries to-day, and it will be utterly useless to try it.

Now, I will illustrate our position in this ocean conflict by taking one ship of our domestic line between New York and Brazil, the Alliance, registered tonnage, 2,985 tons, and a Spanish ship, her exact counterpart:

* Difference in favor of American, $50.

Total difference per month in favor of Spanish ship, $10,698.95.
Total difference per annum in favor of Spanish ship, $128,387.40.
Ten thousand six hundred and ninety-eight dollars and ninety-five cents per month in favor of Spanish ship enables same to carry cargo 33 per cent. less than United States ship same tonnage.
Eight thousand seven hundred and seventy-three dollars and thirteen cents per month in favor of Italian ship enables same to carry cargo 29 per cent. less than United States ship same tonnage.
Nine thousand and ninety-four dollars and twelve cents per month in favor of French ship enables same to carry cargo 31 per cent. less than United States ship same tonnage.
Eight thousand and twenty-four dollars and twenty-one cents per month in favor of German ship enables same to carry cargo 27 per cent. less than United States ship same tonnage.
Seven thousand one hundred and thirty-two dollars and sixty-three cents per month in favor of English ship enables same to carry cargo 24 per cent. less than United States ship same tonnage.

These figures represent facts, not fancies, and show that, if the American line offers to take cargoes from New York to Rio for $7.50 per ton, the Spanish ship can offer, for same cargo in our own ports, to carry at $5.03 and be on the same basis as the American. Am I not justified, then, in my assertion that American ships can not compete successfully with those of these other countries, in the foreign carrying trade, even though the first cost of ours was merely nominal? Clearly, then, neither a reduction of the cost of an American ship of 15 or 20 percent., by the admission, free of duty, of all the materials, machinery, etc., entering into her construction, nor the admission of foreign-built ships to an American registry, "will secure to us our fair proportion of the carrying trade of the world." What legislation will? In my deliberate, carefully considered opinion, only such as for a term of years will provide for the payment to every American vessel, of sail or steam, of wood, of iron, of steel, "a navigation premium" of so much a mile for every mile such vessel sails and carries freight in the foreign trade, and that premium sufficient to make the terms between foreign ships and ours about equal.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose, if the Senator will allow me, that part of that advantage in favor of the Spanish ship, or the British ship, or the French ship is in consequence of the low price of wages on board those ships?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, part of it.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, is there anything in the laws of the United States or is there anything in the Senator's bill which prevents an American shipmaster from shipping his crew at a Spanish port, or a British port, or a French port, or a German port, at any rate that he pleases and of any nationality that he pleases?

Mr. FRYE. If an American ship was trading between foreign ports of course it could hire sailors in the various ports; but these old shipmasters tell me, and I have no doubt it is correct, Mr. Russell tells me, that the moment employment is sought under an American flag the increased wages which that American flag is well understood all over the world carries at home are demanded, and that the living, also, is demanded which is understood to be given under the American flag.

Mr. GRAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that Russell was a sea captain?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. I thought he was a consul.

Mr. FRYE. He was a consul-general when I interviewed him, but he always had been a shipmaster.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the whole matter depends, as I understand it, upon a certain high reputation that sailors of the United States and ships of the United States have for good living and high wages that induces a Spanish, Dutch, English, or French sailor to demand more of the American ship than of any other country?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator understands that an American ship making her voyage from a home port to a foreign port engages her crew at home, and generally for the round voyage, and of course they are governed by American wages all the way, and they demand the American living. I say it is well understood in foreign ports—it is as well understood in Liverpool as it is New York—that American wages are about so much; at any rate, more than English wages, and the American can not engage his crew without paying, so Mr. Russell told me, pretty near the American wages.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not possible, if the Senator will allow me a moment, as I conceive, under the statements which have just been made, by force of any statute we can enact to raise the wages of men employed in American ports, whether they are foreign or whether they are native-born people, and therefore I understand the argument to be that inasmuch as we can not afford to pay the difference between Spanish wages and American wages on board an American ship we must collect the money out of the people to pay the difference.

Mr. FRYE. Well, that is hardly a logical conclusion, I take it, from what I said; because the higher wages and the increased cost of living do not account for this enormous difference. I say we have no protection for our ships. If anything, we are discriminated against by our nation in this matter of carrying the mails. The Senator knows it is true that we are not paying the actual cost of carrying the mails to-day; that these foreign countries, in addition to paying lower wages for their sailors and their officers and a lower cost of living, have these enormous subsidies, and those, coupled with the other things, make the difference which I have stated.

Mr. President, is there any remedy for this? In my judgment there is but one to be found, and that is protection to American ships engaged in the foreign carrying trade, and that either by bounty or subsidies. Why should we fear to resort to bounties and subsidies? Why should we pay $150,000,000 a year to foreign ships for carrying our cargoes? Why should we carry our mails under a foreign flag? Why should every passenger who desires to sail from America abroad be compelled to sail under a foreign flag? Why should we, with our immense wealth and our great power, our ship-yards and mechanics, our enormous coast line, depend upon foreign nations to do all of our foreign carrying business for us? Why should we permit them to pay subsidies, as England has for fifty years, and quietly surrender the possession of all this business; why yield to Spain and Germany and Italy and Holland and the Argentine Republic?

Mr. President, the other day I came across two autograph letters from Horace Greeley, written some twenty years ago, in one of which he advised that we should take part of the annual appropriations for the Navy and subsidize American ships, and in the other that we should pay a bounty to American ships. I found, among my papers, a message sent into Congress by President Grant, March 24, 1870, which I should like to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it, if there be no objection.

* The Secretary read as follows:

MARCH 24, 1870.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In the executive message of December 6, 1869, to Congress the importance of taking steps to revive our drooping merchant marine was urged, and a special message promised at a future day during the present session, recommending more specifically plans to accomplish this result. Now that the committee of the House of Representatives intrusted with the labor of ascertaining "the cause of the decline of American commerce" has completed its work and submitted its report to the legislative branch of the Government, I deem it a fitting time to execute that promise. The very able, calm, and exhaustive report of the committee points out the causes which have produced the decline of our commerce.

It is a national humiliation that we are now compelled to pay from twenty to thirty million dollars annually (exclusive of passage money, which we should share with other nations) to foreigners for doing the work which should be done by American vessels, American built, American owned, and American manned. This is a direct drain upon the resources of the country of just so much money, equal to casting it into the sea, so far as this nation is concerned. A nation of the vast and ever-increasing resources of the United States, extending, as it does, from one to the other of the great oceans of the world, with an industrious, intelligent, energetic population, must one day possess its full share of the commerce of those oceans, no matter what the cost. Delay will only increase this cost and enhance the difficulty of attaining the result.

I therefore put in an earnest plea for early action in this matter, in a way to secure the desired increase of American commerce. The advanced period of the year, and the fact that no contracts for ship-building will be entered into until this question is settled by Congress, and the further fact that if there should be much delay all large vessels contracted for this year will fall of completion before winter sets in, and will therefore be carried over for another year, induce me to request your early consideration of this subject. I regard it of such grave importance, affecting every interest of the country to so great an extent, that any method which will gain the end will secure a rich national blessing.

Building ships and navigating them utilizes vast capital at home; it creates a home market for the farm and the shop; it diminishes the balance of trade against us precisely to the extent of freights and passage money paid to American vessels, and gives us a supremacy of the seas of incalculable value in case of foreign war.

Our Navy at the commencement of the late war consisted of less than one hundred vessels, of about 150,000 tons, and a force of about 8,000 men. We drew from the merchant marine, which had cost the Government nothing, but which had been a source of national wealth, six hundred vessels, exceeding 1,000,000 tons, and about 70,000 men to aid in the suppression of the rebellion.

This statement demonstrates the value of the merchant marine as a means of national defense in time of need.

The committee on the causes of the decline of American tonnage, after tracing the causes of its decline, submit two bills, which, if adopted, they believe will restore to the nation its maritime power. Their report shows with great minuteness the actual and comparative American tonnage at the time of its greatest prosperity; the actual and comparative decline since, together with the causes, and exhibits all the statistics of material interest in reference to the subject. As the report is before Congress, I will not recapitulate any of its statistics, but refer only to the methods recommended by the committee to give us back our lost commerce. As a general rule, when it can be adopted, I believe a direct money subsidy is less liable to abuse than an indirect aid given to the same enterprise. In this case, however, my opinion is that subsidies, while they may be given to specific lines of steamers or other vessels, should not be exclusively adopted; but, in addition to subsidizing very desirable lines of ocean traffic, a general assistance should be given in an effective way.

I therefore commend to your favorable consideration the two bills proposed by the committee and referred to in this message.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1870.

Mr. FRYE. The President of the United States, in his last annual message, says:

There is nothing more justly humiliating to the national pride, and nothing more hurtful to the national prosperity than the inferiority of our merchant marine compared with that of other nations whose general resources, wealth, and seasonable lines do not suggest any reason for their supremacy on the sea. It was not always so, and our people are agreed, I think, that it shall not continue to be so. It is not possible in this communication to discuss the causes of the decay of our shipping interests or the differing methods by which it is proposed to restore them.

The statement of a few well authenticated facts and some general suggestions as to legislation is all that is practicable. That the great steam-ship lines sailing under the flags of England, France, Germany, Spain, and Italy, and engaged in foreign commerce, were promoted and have since been and now are liberally aided by grants of public money, in one form or another, is generally known. That the American lines of steam-ships have been abandoned by us to an unequal contest with the aided lines of other nations until they have been withdrawn, or, in the few cases where they are still maintained, are subject to serious disadvantages, is matter of common knowledge.

The present situation is such that travelers and merchandise find Liverpool often a necessary intermediate port between New York and some of the South American capitals. The fact that some of the delegates from South American states to the conference of American nations, now in session at Washington, reached our shores by reversing that line of travel, is very conclusive of the need of such a conference, and very suggestive as to the first and most necessary step in the direction of fuller and more beneficial intercourse with nations that are now our neighbors upon the lines of latitude, but not upon the lines of established commercial intercourse.

I recommend that such appropriations be made for ocean mail service in American steam-ships between our ports and those of Central and South America, China, Japan, and the important islands in both of the great oceans, as will be liberally remunerative for the service rendered and as will encourage the establishment and in some fair degree equalize the chances of American steam-ship lines in the competitions which they must meet. That the American states lying south of us will cordially co-operate in establishing and maintaining such lines of steam-ships to their principal ports I do not doubt.

Secretary Tracy in his annual report of 1889 uses very strong language in favor of something being done and is very emphatic in his conclusions. He says:

It must be remembered, however, that cruisers have another and equally important function in the attack and defense of commerce. Any staunch vessel with a good coal capacity and the highest rate of speed, armed with a few rapid-firing guns, though built and used principally for commercial purposes, may by certain adaptations in her construction be made readily available for this form of warfare. The fast transatlantic liners, nationalized in foreign countries, but supported and maintained by American trade and American passengers—many of them, even, owned by American citizens—are a powerful factor in the naval force of the Governments whose flag they bear and at whose disposal they must place themselves in time of war.

It is a matter for serious consideration whether steps may not be taken towards the creation of such a fleet of specially adapted steamers of American construction, owned by American merchants carrying the American flag, and capable, under well defined conditions, of temporary incorporation in the American Navy. The advantages of such an arrangement, which enlarges the merchant marine and makes it at the same time self-protecting, are overwhelmingly great. The difficulty is that American capital will not be drawn into the enterprise unless it can be sure of specific compensation for the concessions which it makes to the Government, first, in the adaptation of its vessels to the latter's needs and, secondly, in the surrender of a privilege to use them when the exigency arises.

In the absence of such an arrangement the naval policy of the United States can not neglect to take account of the fleets of fast cruisers which foreign states maintain under the guise of passenger and merchant steamers. They constitute an auxiliary navy, and must be reckoned as a part of the naval force of the Governments maintaining them. It is difficult to imagine a more effective commerce-destroyer than the steam-ship City of Paris, armed with a battery of rapid-firing guns. She can steam over 21 knots an hour and can average 19.9 knots from land to land across the Atlantic. No man-of-war could overtake her; no merchantman could escape her. A fleet of such cruisers would sweep an enemy's commerce from the ocean. This fact is well understood in Europe, and states that are unprovided with a convertible merchant fleet are preparing to meet the possible emergency by partly protected cruisers that are substantially as fast as the City of Paris. Of this type the Piemonte is the latest development, and others equally fast are now building.

Secretary Whitney also advocated a like course in his report, I think it was his last annual report. He said:

It may not be out of place as a branch of this subject to call attention to one of the incidental consequences of the policy pursued by other countries in this matter of a naval reserve. In time of war troop-ships or transports are in great demand. Several European Governments make an annual contribution, based on tonnage, to companies constructing new vessels. The consideration to the Government is a counter-agreement, permitting the Government to take such a vessel for a transport in time of war upon terms named in the agreement. The Government officials are also consulted as to her mode of construction, and she goes on to the naval-reserve list. These payments are incidentally in the nature of a subsidy to the ship-owner, and this, with the liberal payments for Government transportation of mails, etc., keeps a large fleet of merchantmen afloat as a reserve ready for a time of war. Without ships and trained seamen there can be no naval reserve.

A notable illustration of the generosity and courage with which England pushes her shipping interest is seen in the manner in which she is at this moment dealing with the trade of the North Pacific. It has been thus far principally under the American flag and contributory to San Francisco and the United States. The British Government and Canada together are proposing for the establishment of a line of first-class steamers from Vancouver to Japan. The subsidy is likely to be $300,000 annually, $5,000 from England and $5,000 from Canada. There will also be contributed from the naval-reserve fund probably $5 per ton annually for each ship constructed for the route, which will increase the sum by probably $125,000. Under such competition it is quite easy to conjecture what will become of the American flag and our resources in the way of a naval reserve in the North Pacific.

Secretary Whitney of course puts it largely upon the ground that these should be auxiliaries to the Navy. So does Secretary Tracy. Admiral Porter makes a very able argument in the same general direction.

Now, the naval architects had a meeting a short time ago in March—March 26, 27, and 28—in England. The first paper read was by William W. H. White, director of naval construction, and he used this language in reference to the merchant steamers:

Referring to merchant steamers and war cruisers, it was remarked that passenger steamers of the first rank greatly exceed, in displacement as well as length, even the largest cruisers yet constructed (Her Majesty's ships Blake and Blenheim). On this account it is unreasonable to expect that any regularly built war cruisers yet contemplated can catch vessels like the City of Paris, or Teutonic, or Umbria at sea. It has been proposed that war cruisers should be built equaling these "greyhounds" in speed and coal endurance, but surpassing them in armament and protection. To do this must involve still greater displacement and cost; and one may well hesitate in embarking on such a course so long as we possess not merely a vast superiority in swift merchant steamers available as auxiliaries to the regular fleet, but also larger war cruisers than are to be found in foreign navies.

Mr. President, I hope that these bills will both be sent over to the other House, having received favorable action in the Senate. I feel myself a profound interest in this matter of reviving the American marine, as all Senators know, and have labored without weariness in that direction ever since I have been in Congress. I intended when I took possession of the floor to occupy it some fifteen minutes. I ask the pardon of the Senators for having occupied it the length of time I have, trespassing so long upon their patience.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, as a member of the Commerce Committee I have not been able to concur in the favorable report of this bill by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I have never been able to support any bill giving a subsidy for any purpose since I have been a member of the Senate, nor do I propose to do so.

It is not my purpose to enter into any constitutional argument upon the subject, because that line of discussion is a little distasteful to the Senate and my experience has been that the Constitution is made to answer the purposes of any political organization or any great interest that desires to construe it in any particular way. In the convention of 1789, which framed the Constitution, a distinct proposition was made to incorporate in the Constitution a provision for subsidies. Upon page 261 of the journal of the convention it will be found that the following proposition was made to the convention:

To establish public institutions, rewards, and immunities for the promotion of agriculture, commerce, trades, and manufactures.—Journal of the Federal Convention, page 261.

That proposition was rejected, and to my mind it is conclusive as to the views and intentions of the framers of the Constitution in regard to granting subsidies. The power, if found at all, must be under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, the blanket clause, which is made to cover all sorts of political exigencies and all sorts of doubtful legislation.

But I repeat, Mr. President, the fact found in the proceedings of the convention that this proposition was distinctly made and distinctly voted down shows that the men who made that instrument never contemplated such legislation as is now proposed.

It is not singular, Mr. President, that the Senator from Maine advocates this proposition. He represents a ship-building State. It would be equally strange if those of us who live away from the seaboard and who represent agricultural communities should agree to any such propositions as are contained in these bills. If I should offer in the Senate a proposition to pay a bounty upon wheat or corn or cattle, liberty would lie bleeding in the streets at once, and the whole of the Atlantic seaboard would rise against it as unconstitutional and monstrous in the extreme.

I would be obliged to any casuist to tell me the difference between a bounty, a subsidy, upon ships and upon any other article owned by the people of the United States. I should like to know where is the difference, logically, between granting a subsidy upon one article or upon another. The carrying trade of the United States, as the Senator from Maine has said, is languishing and almost dead. The cattle trade of the United States is languishing and almost dead; but, if I were to propose here a subsidy upon cattle in order to encourage the raising and exportation of cattle, I should be confronted not only with constitutional arguments, but the proposition would be attacked as the most monstrous one ever heard in the Halls of Congress.

The State of Maine has been persistent always in advocating subsidies. When wooden ships dominated the ocean, the great interest in that State was the building of wooden ships. In 1870, when Mr. Lynch was a member of Congress from the ship-building district of Maine, now represented by Governor DINGLEY, he made a celebrated report on the subsidy question, in which he discovered that the cause of the decline of the American carrying trade was found in the existence of the Confederate cruisers during the war, that the Alabama and the Florida had brought about the present disastrous condition of that great interest. It was proposed by that gentleman, and successfully carried through the House of Representatives, to pay a bounty upon wooden sailing vessels in order to restore that interest to its former supremacy and importance. The bill came from the other House to the Senate, and it was moved to lay it upon the table, and Garrett Davis, of Kentucky, moved that it be kicked under the table, as the Congressional Globe shows. That was an investigation as to the cause of the decline of American commerce. Therefore, the Senator from Maine was particular to say that he desired no one to suppose that he did not know the difference between the carrying trade and the commerce of the United States.

In an article published in the North American Review in 1884 by Governor DINGLEY, the chairman of the Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives, the causes of the decline of American shipping, or the American carrying trade, are not ascribed to the war or to the presence upon the ocean of the Confederate cruisers, but the cause is alleged to be the change from wooden to iron vessels and steel vessels, and that the United States did not take advantage of the opportunity by purchasing iron and steel vessels abroad, but continued to adhere to the old-fashioned methods of maritime intercourse, and that the present decline in the American carrying trade has been the consequence.

During the Administration of Mr. Cleveland the Mills bill, as it was called, in regard to tariff taxation was supplemented by a proposition for an international conference, which has been termed now the Pan-American Conference. I have never been able to understand how it could be a Pan-American Conference, which I believe means an all-American conference, when Canada was excluded. It is called in some quarters a Spanish-American conference, but in the press of the country generally the Pan-American Conference. It originated with Democrats as a supplement to the Mills bill.

In that bill wool was put upon the free-list, and it was conceived that reciprocity treaties in connection with putting wool upon the free-list could be made with the South American countries, especially with Chili and the Argentine Republic, that would inure greatly to the commercial advantage of the people of the United States. After the Mills bill came to the Senate and was defeated, and after, of course, Mr. Cleveland had issued his celebrated message upon the tariff question, making that the sole issue in the Presidential canvass, the scheme or idea of a Pan or Spanish American conference, like the American shipping trade, languished and died. Mr. Cleveland became immersed in his campaign, and after his defeat the subject was not pressed. He was appealed to by prominent Democrats to carry out this idea and to bring about the negotiations which were necessary to this Pan or Spanish American conference.

In the heat and confusion and smoke of that Presidential conflict the matter was not consummated, and the result was that the present Administration became the residuary legatee of this scheme. It has been lately paraded before the country as a great and original invention. It has been published far and wide as the great diplomatic discovery of this age. Mr. President, it is a chestnut. It is a back number. It was invented by the ignorant and brutal Democracy. It was found half made up when the Harrison Administration came into existence, and the restless and ambitious spirit of the present Secretary of State seized upon it, and it is paraded before the country as a great and phenomenal diplomatic exploit.

There are some remarkable features connected with this Pan-American Congress which seems to have given a new life to this idea of subsidies that has been dragging its way through the lobbies of Congress for the last twenty-five years. I saw not long since a statement by a delegate from the Argentine Republic which is a little significant in connection with this Pan or Spanish American Congress. This was a speech made in the congress by Señor Peña, of the Argentine Republic, and it is a very remarkable declaration, exceedingly suggestive and very pertinent at the present time:

He said that from the very beginning of the debates on subsidizing lines of steamers he had made it clear that the Argentine Republic, in agreeing to pay its proportion of the proposed subsidy, did not expect any commercial gain to result. There were plain and weighty reasons why the trade between the United States and his country was not enlarging, reasons which were well known to all the members of the congress. But the Argentine Republic sought to promote intimacy with all the nations of America and on that ground had consented to the suggested subsidies. The Argentine delegates, having already signed that agreement, were prepared to stand by it, but not without making an important declaration of which the Secretary should take careful note.

The delegates were aware, went on Dr. Peña, that the tariff bill agreed upon by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives provided for the increase of the duties on wool and for the imposition of a new duty on hides. If those proposals should become law, they would practically suppress Argentine exports to the United States. Under the present tariff fine wools are shut out; under the proposed one coarse wools would also be excluded, and what small trade there was would disappear. Taking up the duty on hides in particular, he showed how not only the Argentine Republic, but almost all the South American nations, would be affected by it. If that duty should be enacted into law it would entirely frustrate the benefits to commerce aimed at by the congress.

We were invited here to foster American commercial relations. When we go home and give an account of our mission we shall have to say, We went to Washington with one of our products free, and we have secured a law which taxes it; another product which was taxed at 6 cents a pound we bring back from the congress taxed at 7 cents. Such will be the commercial results of the conference of the three Americas, judged without any irony, but also without any flattery.

The Argentine delegate went on to ask if it was either logical or decent to ask his country to spend money to "cover the seas with vessels sailing only with ballast." It was wholly inexplicable and confusing to him that the scheme to foster international communication and lower rates of freight should go hand in hand with a plan to lay new taxes on foreign commerce and raise the barriers of customs to an impassable height. This was to undo with one hand what was done with the other.

He concluded by saying that the Argentine delegates would vote for the proposed subsidies on the basis of the present tariff rates; but that if these should be changed to the disadvantage of Argentine exports they would advise their Government not to consent to the payment of a subsidy. This decision was the result of a formal vote of the Argentine delegation, and it should be inserted in the journal of the congress.

Mr. President, when the South American Commission was sent to the South American states there was a very significant interview between that commission and the President of Chili.

Mr. TELLER. What commission was that, the one in 1881?

Mr. VEST. The one in 1881, of which Governor Reynolds, of my State, was president. When the commission came to Chili they laid before the President of that country the purport of their mission and asked him to consider the negotiation of a treaty and the reciprocity of trade between Chili and the United States. I go back now a little in this history.

The Chilean President politely but decidedly declined to consider the subject. "It was out of no want of respect," he said, "for the United States; but it was his settled belief that all treaties were needless; that there could be no control by any convention of the laws of trade; that men would buy and sell where it was most for their advantage; and that this could not be aided or materially influenced by national compacts." In conclusion, he further remarked that "Chili opened all her ports to the vessels of any nation, the United States included, and in turn the Chilean flag ought to have access to the ports of the United States in like manner."

I make these quotations to show the origin of the recent communication from the State Department at the hands of the President of the United States to Congress assuming the new and marvelous position on the part of this Administration that there shall be free trade so far as it can be brought about by reciprocity treaties between the South American states and the United States of America. It is the most marvelous concession on the part of the high-protective-tariff party in this country that is known in political history. It is an abdication of the dogma of that party, and they never again with any consistency can talk to the people of the United States about the necessity for this high-protective-tariff system which has been their shibboleth for so many years.

Sir, it is as well known as that we are now in this Chamber that all the leaders of the Republican party have advocated the necessity of doing away with foreign commerce and intercourse with foreign nations and making this country absolutely independent and isolated from the rest of the world. The great leader and almost originator of the protective system in this country, Henry C. Carey, of Philadelphia, who occupied to the dogma of protection the same relation that Mohammed does to the faith of Islam, or that Brigham Young did to that of Utah, declared solemnly and publicly that he wished that the Atlantic Ocean was an ocean of fire, over which no ship could pass from Europe to the United States. My friend from Maine, who champions the subsidy bill, in a speech delivered by him in October, 1888, before the Home Market Club in Boston, declared—but I will read exactly what he did say:

Senator FRYE, of Maine, in a speech at a Home Market Club dinner in Boston, October 24, 1888, declared that he wanted "to see duties increased," so that no manufactures of silk or of wool or of iron and steel could be imported.

I have a full and complete copy of the speech from which I read that extract. It has been the settled doctrine of the Republican party in this country that importations from abroad should be discouraged. In the debate in the last Congress, when the items came up in the schedules of the Senate bill that was passed as a substitute for the Mills bill I repeatedly called attention to the fact, in the shape of assertion and question, that the only reason that existed for an increase of duty was because there was an increased importation. It was considered an absolute argument, sufficient and complete in itself, for any increase of tariff duty that more of the article was being imported into this country. The Republican party in its platform at Chicago upon which it elected Harrison declared that rather than touch one hair upon this sacred animal, this white elephant of the high protective tariff, it would abolish the whole of the internal-revenue system of the country. It was the distinct issue upon which that Presidential contest was waged.

Hardly have two years elapsed when the President elected upon that issue, and his Premier, the most prominent and eloquent advocate of the doctrine of high protection in the United States, lay down the declaration in the face of the whole world and come to Congress and say, "We protest against the McKinley tariff bill because it puts increased duties upon articles imported from the South American states, and we ask now for free trade with those countries to be brought about by reciprocity treaties."

It is a remarkable fact, Mr. President, that no adverse comment is made by the Republican press in the United States upon this extraordinary change. What has become of the home market? Sir, the country has been flooded with literature, paid for by the manufacturers, I take it, by the protected interests of the country—every section of the United States, down to the most obscure township and remote hamlet, has been flooded with literature to show that the home market was all that the people of this country wanted; that the foreign market amounted to nothing; that no steps were to be taken that led away from this high protective system, and if you in one single instance departed from the system, like the deadly crevasse upon the banks of the great Mississippi, there would be a deluge and a destruction indescribable to all material interests.

Now there is a change as sudden and marvelous as that which came upon the great Apostle Paul as he journeyed from Jerusalem to Damascus. Now we must have free trade, the home market will not do, and the Senator from Maine enlarges upon the idea of the Secretary of State and now wants to give subsidies to vessels of all sorts, sail and steam vessels, so as to bring about increased trade, for there can be no other purpose, I take it, not only with the South American states, but with all the European countries and the world at large.

The Senator from Maine (and I will not go over his entire argument) makes an erroneous statement, if I understand him, in regard to the granting of subsidies by England. If I understand him correctly he says that England has never given any of its mail contracts to any except English lines of steamers or English ships.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Never where she had a line that itself could convey her mails, except in one instance, which was a French line, and the Parliament would not submit to that.

Mr. VEST. I assert, and there can be no sort of question about it, that the North German Lloyd line closed a contract with the Government of Great Britain for carrying the mails from Liverpool to New York, and in his controversy with Mr. Gladstone Mr. Blaine alludes to that fact and says that the contract was afterwards avoided by the English Government, but for what reason he does not state. However, I assert now, and will undertake to show, that the contract was made under open bidding, the contract being given to the lowest and best bidder, to the North German Lloyd line, and that Mr. Blaine so states emphatically, and I have the documentary evidence here to show it.

I assert more than that, that at this particular time a contract exists between the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship line, an American organization, and the Government of Great Britain, under which two of the vessels of that line are engaged in carrying the English mails from San Francisco to Australia.

Mr. FRYE. But the Senator knows that in a very short time, when the Canadian ships are put on to run from the western limit of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, they will no longer do that.

Mr. VEST. Ah, Mr. President—

Mr. FRYE. I alluded to that.

Mr. VEST. That is another proposition. What may happen in the future is another thing. I meet the proposition of the Senator from Maine when he asserts that England only gives the mail contracts to her own people with a statement of fact which he can not deny. I say that England puts up her contracts to the lowest and best bidder for carrying the mails, and that the North German Lloyd line was the successful bidder for the mails from New York to Liverpool, and that at this particular time a contract is in existence by which the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company carries the English mails from San Francisco to Australia under a contract with the British Government.

Mr. FRYE. It is because the British Government had no line.

Mr. VEST. Ah, "because." I am not talking about the cause; I am talking about the facts.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will pardon me, I not only said there was that line, but I stated the amount of profit which the United States made out of that mail transaction.

Mr. VEST. Now the Senator modifies it.

Mr. FRYE. No; that was my statement.

Mr. VEST. I undertake to show by official authority, coming from a gentleman who will not be suspected of any Democratic tendencies or free-trade tendencies, that the statement of the Senator from Maine is incorrect as to the practice of Great Britain in regard to these mail contracts, or subsidy contracts as he terms them. I quote now from an official report of John C. New, consul to Liverpool, made to the State Department:

The British Government does not grant subsidies, in the general sense of that term, to any steam-ship company, but the post-office authorities make contracts for the conveyance of mails to the different parts of the world with the steam-ship companies having steamers sailing to those ports. * * * No payment other than for the conveyance of mails is specially made for maintaining communication between Great Britain and Central and South America and the West Indies.

Here is a table, submitted by Mr. New in response to an inquiry from the State Department of the United States, giving the amount paid from 1868-'69 down to 1888-'89 by the British Government for mail service. No intelligent man will deny that Great Britain has fostered and encouraged her lines of communication over the whole world by increased mail pay. It was an absolute necessity of her condition. No parallel can be instituted between the United States of America and the United Kingdom. We comprise almost a continent in our territorial possessions. We are united, compact, solid. We have a difference of climate, products, soil, and people, which is unequaled by any country upon the face of the earth. The spirit and theory of our Government is to hold no colonial possessions. It is not only a tradition, but a settled and accomplished fact governmentally with the people of the United States that no colony shall be held by this Government.

We can not hold even the Territories in a Territorial condition longer than a reasonable discretion by Congress will so keep them. They are held to become States. What is the condition and autonomy of the United Kingdom? It is an island with three hundred millions of people, and one-twelfth of them within the territorial domain of Great Britain. Rapidity of communication and certainty of transportation are a necessity with Great Britain. She must communicate with her colonies by ships, for it is impossible to do so in any other way. The carrying trade is to Great Britain the blood and life of the nation, and it would be strange indeed if a country so situated had not subordinated every other interest to that of ships in order to reach her colonial possessions and preserve the unity of her empire. There is no parallel between the two cases. There ought to be none, and there can be none.

But, Mr. President, this list shows that from 1868 down to 1888-'89 the pay given, call it subsidy or subvention or what you may, by the English Government to her steam-ship lines decreased from $5,454,530 in 1868 to $3,184,435 in 1888. I want to call the attention of those who are persistently claiming that the superiority of Great Britain upon the ocean comes from subsidies to an official report made to the Parliament of Great Britain by the lords of the admiralty, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

With a view to attain this object [mercantile cruisers] my lords have sought and obtained the co-operation of Her Majesty's postmaster-general. They pointed out that the vessels most likely to suit the purposes of the admiralty were steamers of such high speed as would in all probability be used for the conveyance of mails under contract with his department.

The opportunity of practically developing the scheme has been offered by the negotiations in progress for the conveyance of the mails between the United Kingdom and New York, with the approval of the postmaster-general. Their lordships have had communications with the steam-ship companies which have made proposals for the conveyance of these mails. The negotiations carried on with these companies have been conducted so as not to interfere with the terms as regards the conveyance of mails, but rather to enter into agreements supplemental or subsidiary to the contracts for the mail service.

My lords would desire to state that the experience derived from the events of 1855 has led them to believe that true economy and real efficiency would be best promoted by securing the use to the admiralty in times of peace of the fastest and most serviceable mercantile vessels.

Their lordships consider that subventions or annual payments for pre-emption in the use or purchase of these steamers should only be made with those vessels already existing which have an exceptionally high sea-going speed, or for vessels which may be built possessing great speed and adaptable in their construction as armed cruisers.

The retention of a fleet of "royal naval reserve cruisers" would be obviously of great national advantage. In a pecuniary sense they would serve to limit the necessity felt by their lordships for the construction of fast war-vessels to protect the commerce of the country. Not only would the nation be a pecuniary gainer in respect to the first cost of such vessels, but their annual maintenance, which amounts to a large sum, would be saved were such vessels maintained while not required for admiralty purposes in mercantile trading.

Their lordships have not formed a definite view as to the number of vessels that should be retained in the manner indicated, but as such steamers are not likely to be constructed in any considerable numbers, it is thought that probably ten would be the maximum number at all likely to be placed at the disposition of the admiralty within the next five years at a maximum annual charge of 50,000.

The services of these vessels will be secured to the admiralty upon fair terms as to cost of hire, by the payment of 15s. per gross register ton per annum so long as they continue to have the American mail contract, or 20s. per ton per annum if the contract be withdrawn from them; such subvention to be continued for a period of five years, or thereafter until notice of termination has been given. These vessels will be completed in about eighteen months, and the subvention will be an annual charge of about 6,500, for each vessel so long as they carry the mails, or 3,500, should the mails be withdrawn from them. Their lordships believe that this sum will be considered reasonable when regard is had to the fact that the special adaptation of the ships will involve considerable first cost to the owners and will in a measure limit their earning power.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in the published controversy between Mr. Blaine and the honorable William E. Gladstone an assertion was made, which was repeated here to-day by the Senator from Maine, to the effect that the supremacy of Great Britain in the carrying trade of the world was due to subsidies. That charge has been made in every sort of shape, at every sort of time, and in every sort of place.

Great Britain possesses seven-twelfths of the carrying trade of the entire world and with her enormous merchant marine, comprising, as I have said, more than one-half of that of the entire world, less than 2 per cent. is subsidized—I mean 2 per cent. of her steam transportation, and less than 1 per cent. of her whole transportation if you count sailing vessels with steam vessels—less than 1 per cent. of all her enormous shipping trade is subsidized in any way, directly or indirectly; and when Mr. Blaine and the Senator from Maine to-day and all the lesser lights of the subsidy party claim that we should imitate her in order to recover our old superiority on the ocean, I should like them to tell me how the subsidizing of less than 1 per cent. of the whole shipping trade of Great Britain keeps up the balance of that shipping trade and gives it its superiority on all the oceans of the world. I should like for any gentleman, from Mr. Blaine down to the smallest yelping subsidist who infests this Capitol, to tell me how that proportion of less than 2 per cent. of the steam transportation and 1 per cent. of all the transportation, counting sailing vessels, keeps up the balance of the shipping trade of the United Kingdom.

Mr. President, there is no intelligent man who does not know that the effect of subsidizing any particular line is to discourage all the others. It is true upon the land and it is true upon the ocean that whenever you give special privileges to an individual or to a company you handicap the rest of the community to that extent. If I have a rival in business, and he receives governmental assistance to the amount of 1, or 5, or 20 per cent., I am forced to meet that advantage upon his part and I am injured to just that extent. That doctrine is true as to a cattle-raiser upon the prairies of Missouri, and a ship-owner in New York, or Boston, or Philadelphia. The very minute the Government steps in and becomes a partner with the citizen, either upon the land or the ocean, and gives to him a subsidy, it injures and discourages to that extent his rivals in business.

There is one plain question at the very threshold of this whole debate that never has been answered and never will be. If we could build the ships with which to control the commerce of the world why have we not done it? I should like to see the Senator who will stand here and say it is the want of ingenuity and enterprise on the part of our people. I should like to see the Senator, no matter how audacious he may be as a public man, who will rise up and say it was the want of capital. I should like to see the Senator who will say it was through any fault upon the part of the American people that to-day we have lost our supremacy upon the sea. It was not the war that did it, for the decline commenced in 1855, before the Confederacy was ever heard of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It dropped pretty fast during the war.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, everything dropped during the war, men included. Everything dropped during the war except the price of gold, and that went up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And the price of wheat rose.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, everything was disarranged. That is no fair illustration. Everything was in a phenomenal and abnormal condition during the war. Peace is the normal condition and war is an abnormal condition, and disarranges and kills industries as well as soldiers. But I assert that the decline in the American shipping commenced in 1855, before the war.

Mr. FRYE. Under a low tariff.

Mr. VEST. Under a low tariff. I will concede that much, and I have never pretended that the tariff alone brought about the decay in American shipping interests. It was more than that. It was not only the tariff, but other things which have brought it about and which continue that disastrous condition of affairs now.

The Democratic party is frequently taunted as the party of the past; that it never advances; that it was camped one year where the Republicans camped the year before, and all that sort of rot. Why, Mr. President, the Republican party to-day is hanging on to the old traditions of 1789 in regard to the exclusion of all foreign vessels from the registry of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will allow me—not about the Republican party, for that can take care of itself—I wish to ask him to tell us (and I am perfectly sincere in the question) what he thinks was the cause of starting the decline of American shipping in 1855 besides the low tariff to which he has already referred.

Mr. VEST. I do not think the low tariff did it, because the shipping trade of the United States increased steadily under the Walker tariff up to 1855. The controlling reason, in my judgment, and not the only one—and I have studied it as thoroughly and as accurately as it was possible for me to do—was the fact that Great Britain, with her enterprise and foresight and energy, saw that she was dropping behind in the ocean trade of the world; that the United States was pressing upon her, as the great Napoleon said it would when he sold us the Louisiana purchase in order to create a rival to Great Britain in the commerce of the world; and when Great Britain saw it, she immediately commenced hunting for some remedy for the existing state of things, and she found it in steel and iron vessels.

The fatal mistake that was made by us, and which we continue to-day, is that we, like the Bourbons, refuse to learn. Instead of seizing, as Germany has done, upon the discovery of Great Britain and constructing in her own ship-yards, commencing with repair-shops and afterwards with the construction of ships, iron and steel vessels that are now threatening the supremacy of Great Britain upon the ocean, we sat down stolidly, blindly, and almost brutally and said we would shut out the ships of the whole world from our registry, and refused to avail ourselves of what should be the opportunity of every American citizen, to buy the best ship at the lowest price wherever he could.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I do not quite understand the answer to my question. In 1855, when the decline had begun, as it was said, there was a low tariff and the opportunity to buy ship materials and the American ship-building system of home ships had existed all the time and we had a great supremacy and England was afraid and alarmed and went to doing something else, which I understand the Senator to say was the building of iron and steel vessels. Was it that which made the change?

Mr. VEST. I think that was one of the principal causes, but not the only one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the other one?

Mr. VEST. Permit me to say that this decline did not commence absolutely in 1855. That is the year in which it became most marked and distinct. It really commenced a number of years before that. In 1837 Great Britain commenced building her steam-vessels. Although the discovery was made in the United States of the screw propeller, it was immediately adopted by Great Britain, and from 1837 she commenced the construction of vessels of iron, propelled by steam, and ran them across the oceans, and she continued to improve. The English discovered that they had the iron, the coal, and the ocean in close proximity, and, with the imperial instinct of that great people, they immediately seized upon the advantages offered by nature. They saw that it was to their interest in 1849 to throw open their registry to vessels all over the world.

One of the great complaints made by our fathers in the Revolution was the registry laws of Great Britain, and we retaliated by adopting the same thing; but the difference was that when Great Britain found her supremacy was endangered by these old and barbarous enactments, she repealed them and said to the whole world, "Here I am at my best; grapple with me for the domination of the ocean."

Mr. FRYE. When did she say that?

Mr. VEST. In 1849.

Mr. FRYE. And we the same.

Mr. VEST. We have never done it. We opened our ports under treaties with Great Britain and with the Netherlands, Norway, and Sweden; that is to say, we said to them "If you allow our vessels to go into your ports free of tonnage duties, etc., or at certain rates of tonnage, then we will allow yours to come into ours;" but we have never repealed that old and barbarous enactment that an American citizen shall not buy a ship in a foreign country. What we ought to have done was, when we found for any reason, I do not care what it was, that Great Britain was making iron and steel ships that were superior to any we could make, immediately to have said to our people "Go and buy them; bring them here;" do as the Germans did; build up repair shops first, and finally construction shops, and the ingenuity and skill and courage of our people will finally grapple successfully with that of England.

As a matter of course there are other causes, the opening of our vast extent of territory to the West, the construction of railroads which called the young men of New England and the sailors of the East away from the ocean to the land. They found it more profitable to go out West, take 160 acres of land as a homestead, and in the pursuit of agriculture or cattle-raising accumulate larger profits than they could upon the ships of New England. But the great mistake we made was in not permitting our people to avail themselves of the opportunity to purchase cheaper vessels wherever they could, whether in Germany, France, Norway, Sweden, or England.

On the other hand, we have, with a blind fatuity which is unequalled in the history of the commercial world, said to our people, "You shall not buy where you can buy best and cheapest;" and year after year Mr. John Roach, now dead, and now Mr. Cramp, and now Mr. Thurber at the head of this South American coast line which they call the United States and Brazilian Steam-Ship Company are haunting these lobbies like the daughters of the horse-leech, crying "Give! give! give!"

Mr. President, I again ask the question, how does the subsidy of less than 2 per cent. on her steam-ships and less than 1 per cent. on her whole shipping enable England to dominate the oceans of the world? The Senator from Maine said when on his "tower"—I believe that is the modern pronunciation—around the world he never saw an American flag. God help him and the flag! Why have we been driven from the ocean? It is because we have refused to profit by the discoveries of others, by the opportunities that were offered to us. We laugh at the Chinese for erecting a wall around them. We have erected a wall in the shape of this old retaliatory legislation that was made for a purpose, and that purpose has long ago ceased to exist.

Mr. FRYE. I simply wish to correct one impression which might be gathered from the Senator's remarks about these steam-ship men lobbying around the Capitol, by saying to him that there has been no steam-ship man and no ship-owner around the Senate Committee on Commerce or around the Senate Chamber within my knowledge, or in the lobbies of the Senate Chamber within my knowledge or information, during this entire session of Congress, except two gentlemen, one Mr. Hughes and, I think, one Mr. Clyde, for whom I sent to assist me in draughting what we called the postal subsidy bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have had no intercourse with these persons. I simply know what has been stated in the public press and what I have heard repeatedly, that there was a persistent effort being made, as I know has been made during my term of service here, on the part of the existing steam-ship companies, to secure these subsidies. I know that I have been,—coming from what source I do not know—flooded persistently and consistently with written and printed circulars urging me to vote for subsidies. I do not think they fell from the moon. I do not think they sprang from the earth spontaneously. I do not think they came from the people. I come from the people, and I have not heard any cry for subsidy in my part of the country. I have been here long enough to believe when this sort of effort is systematically made that there is an object behind it, some purpose, some interest to be subserved.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Missouri, I think, knows that in the Committee on Commerce I have been the most persistent lobbyist ever since I have been in the Senate that has been found around the Capitol anywhere.

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President, my friend is not a lobbyist. He represents his people in their interest. He represents a ship-building people. Take away the ship building from Maine and "Othello's occupation's gone." As a matter of course, if this bill is passed it is better than a gold mine in Maine.

Mr. FRYE. One moment as to that. The Senator also knows that what I have been seeking more persistently than anything else is the postal subsidy bill, in which the people of Maine have no earthly interest except as American citizens.

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President, that will not do. It is not the mail service, permit me to say to my friend, that he is so solicitous about, but it is the tools and the instrumentalities to be used in that service. If you can pay $6 a ton to a vessel for carrying the mails of the United States, you then make that vessel so much more valuable to owner and builder. The interest of Maine, as shown in all the conduct of her representatives, is not so much in the carrying trade upon the ocean as in building the ships. That has been the profit of these people, and this subsidy would inure directly to their benefit just as much as a subsidy upon cattle-raising would inure to the benefit of my people in the West if I had the audacity to come and ask it. The principle is just the same, no matter where you apply it.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator know that there was never an iron ship built in Maine? The postal subsidy to which I referred does not go to anything but iron and steel ships.

Mr. VEST. Take the whole statement of the Senator, and he knows that the construction of wooden ships can be supplemented by the manufacture of iron and steel vessels, and that the two are dovetailed and intertwined absolutely together. The two bills are here before the Senate together. One of them is a subsidy, pure, simple, and unadulterated, and I admire the courage of the Senator from Maine. He stands by his guns. He wants subsidy, and he makes no disguise about it.

All this thing of increased mail subsidies is "leather and prunella." It is the subsidy at last. The very minute you pay a man one cent for an article that he wants to sell, more than the labor or merchandise is worth, you enter upon the domain of subsidy. As Erastus Wiman pertinently put it upon the subsidies for the South American trade, it is simply a proposition to "dead-head dear goods to a foreign country." If they will not go there without a subsidy, you can not get them there unless you pay some one to take them, and whenever you pay a man one cent for carrying the mail more than it is worth, it is subsidy, a bounty, a subvention. The name may be changed, but the substance remains.

Now, the Senator from Maine seems to be a little sensitive about these gentlemen who appear here. I notice in this book (which seems to be printed, "Washington, Government Printing Office, 1889, Trade and Transportation between the United States and Spanish America, William Ellery Curtis"—what connection he had with the Government does not appear, and I have diligently searched to see whether it was a Government publication and find nothing except that it came from the Government Printing Office) that Mr. Curtis, who took charge of the Spanish-American or Pan-American Congress, and he was also secretary of the South American commission, states that a certain gentleman named Lachlan, I think, Captain Lachlan, of the Brazilian Steam-Ship Company, manager of that company, figures very conspicuously in all these subsidy arrangements.

He appeared before the House committee in connection with Mr. Cramp, and testified in behalf of subsidies and corroborated this book, which is nothing else but an unfair argument and a tissue of unfair statements in behalf of subsidies. They say it came from the State Department. I suppose it was the premonitory symptom of the official communication we had here the other day from that Department. But I happened to notice in the Washington Post some time ago, in January, this item. To a Washington Post reporter Captain Lachlan, of the Brazilian Steam-Ship Company, said:

We have on three vessels and will add more. Since 1885 in domestic cottons our line has increased its freight from 3 bales of 800 yards each to 816 bales containing 652,800 yards in one shipment on October 2. We can beat all countries in meat exports, flour, hardware, and furniture, and are now cutting into Manchester's trade in cottons. The English do not like it, but they can not help it.

That was Captain Lachlan to the reporter. Then says this paper:

Then he went before a committee of Congress and insisted that the business would not support a steam-ship line; that his line had made nothing in seven years, and instead of putting on more steamers, as he told the Post, would stop running unless it got a subsidy, and finally confessed that his line had refused $43,000 offered it by the Government for carrying the mails because it wanted more, and would go without anything rather than take less than the fancy price it asked. This company never got for any freight or express matter that it carried anything like the compensation that the Government offered it for carrying the mails. Steam-ships that will not take $43,000 do not appeal very strongly to the sympathies of the public.

Mr. President, in reply to the pathetic and melancholy picture of oppression upon these steam-ship lines which was drawn here by the Senator from Maine, I should like to read, if I can find it, a letter from this same Captain Lachlan, the manager of that line, in regard to the expense of delivering the United States mails. This was at the time he refused to receive the $43,000. Here is the statement of Captain Lachlan published by Mr. Curtis in his book from the State Department:

Seventh query. What expenses are you subjected to in receiving and delivering the mails; and after deducting this amount from your gross receipts from the Post-Office Department, what is your net compensation, both annually, per voyage, and per mile?

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to this pauper line that he says has never declared a dividend and that has lost money for the last six years.

This question has been partially answered—

Says Mr. Lachlan—

In reply to query fifth, and under the supposition that we had accepted the amounts tendered by the Post-Office Department quarterly. I can only give you the actual cash outlay that is incurred and paid by this company, taken from the books and vouchers of this company, and herewith show the cost of handling United States mails, and think it better to give you a detailed statement that will show on its face the actual items.

Mr. FRYE. That was made out as the actual cost?

Mr. VEST. Yes, the actual cost. He says that that is the actual cost, with $13,604.90 balance, and he show the items.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator think he ought to have taken less than it actually cost him?

Mr. VEST. Look at the items in the account that he made out himself, an ex parte statement made without cross-examination. He puts down "portorage $37.73, boat-hire $20"—

Mr. FRYE. What does the Senator know about the correctness of those figures?

Mr. VEST:

Cartage to post-office.....	$2.50
One man to post-office.....	3.50
Labor handling mails.....	2.50
Mail room, lined with iron, capable of carrying 250 cubic feet, at 35 cents, two ways.....	354.00

Mr. FRYE. Is it not worth it?

Mr. VEST. I do not believe it is worth it. I believe those charges are extravagant. They bear upon their face the proof that they are made out for a specific purpose. But if we listened simply to the statements of the Senator from Maine without reading this, it would be supposed that this line was getting nothing for its services.

I find in another statement here that last year they accepted from the Department about $12,000, notwithstanding the refusal of this $43,000 when it was offered to them by Postmaster-General Vilas for four years' service.

Mr. FRYE. Does not the Senator know that Postmaster-General Vilas admitted that it was not what they ought to receive, and advised them to go to the House for compensation that was fair?

Mr. VEST. I know that Postmaster-General Vilas told them he had gone to the limit of his authority and if they wanted more money they must go to Congress, and he could not say anything else to them. He did not make the law. We made it, and we declared the amount to be paid and offered it to them, and they refused $43,000 for four years, from 1885 to 1889. I read in this same book, published by Mr. Curtis, that last year they took eleven thousand seven hundred and seventy odd dollars for the same service, which would be at a rate for four years of some $46,000.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator think that that is adequate pay for carrying the United States mails?

Mr. VEST. I think it is a fair, honest, just pay, and I will give my reason for it. The line of steam-ships which is called here "the United States and Brazilian Steam-ship Company" is composed of three old tubs—tubs, I should say. They are coast steamers. They are required by their contract with the Brazilian Government, for which they receive $105,000 in Brazilian money and $95,000 in our money by the year, to touch at certain Brazilian ports, and it takes them from Rio de Janeiro to New York from twenty-one to twenty-four days; you can send a letter by the way of England to Rio de Janeiro in one week's shorter time; and that is the mail service for which they demand us to pay them these enormous prices. You can now mail a letter and send it upon a tramp or send it by the regular English line from New York to Southampton and then to Rio de Janeiro and save seven days in the transportation.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator if he has ever seen the Alliance, or the Finance, or the Advance. He calls them old tubs.

Mr. VEST. I speak about the time occupied. I say, compared with the fast lines, the mail lines of the English Government, they are tubs.

Mr. FRYE. They are fine iron steamers.

Mr. VEST. The time they make shows that they can not belong to the fast steamers that come under the subventions of the British Government. In the contracts which the British Government make with steam-ship lines they require the fastest steamers, because they can be used as commerce-destroyers in time of war.

Brazil pays these people in round numbers $105,000 a year, and now they come to the United States and want us to pay them, as this gentleman says in his letter here published in this book, two hundred and sixty odd thousand dollars more, as a subsidy, and under the bill which has been introduced by the Senator from Maine, I suppose they will receive a much larger amount.

Mr. President, any one would suppose who had never investigated this subject that subsidy was a new thing in the United States; that it had never been attempted. I have before me "A History of Subsidies in the United States," and it is not a pleasant one.

The United States gave still larger sums in the way of subsidies, in the aggregate $47,000, to the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company, and $1,812,000 to the line between the United States and Brazil.

We have already tried that; we have, since the war, paid this enormous amount in the way of subsidies, and what was the result? Did it bring back our commercial marine? Did it enable us successfully to compete with Great Britain for the supremacy of the ocean?

That is not the only subsidy we are paying. We were told by the people of New England that if we would put a tax upon fish and give them free salt for preserving fish they would themselves preserve the great nursery of American seamen in the fishing trade, so that in the event of a naval war the same men could carry our flag to victory who had done so in two wars upon the ocean. We did put a tax on fish; we did give them free salt, and denied it to the beef-packers and the pork-packers of the West, and what is the result? Have we that nursery of hardy American seamen of which we were told so much?

Why, Mr. President, the official reports show that less than one-third of the men in the fishing trade are natives of the United States. They are Canadians, Norwegians, Swedes, Italians. What has become of this nursery? We have to-day, and I have got the official report here, a decline in the tonnage of vessels engaged in the fishing trade of many thousands, from 1861 to 1883, and the decline has been even more rapid in the last few years than for some years before; and yet we have subsidized that particular interest; we have given them a protective duty upon fish; we have given them free salt to preserve their fish; and has it given us that nursery which we were told it would?

Mr. FRYE. Is there any duty on fresh fish?

Mr. VEST. No, but there is another duty on fish.

Mr. FRYE. Does not the Senator know that the demand for fresh fish is greater than for salt fish, with modern contrivances?

Mr. VEST. I was in New York City the day before yesterday, and the papers were filled with accounts of 10,000 bluefish being taken and pitched into the ocean because there was no market for them. They have got a fish trust in New York now and they control the entire market, and the papers of Sunday morning contained an account of fishing vessels coming in loaded with fresh fish that could find no purchaser at all.

Mr. FRYE. That trust is not on account of the tariff on fresh fish. There is not any tariff on fresh fish.

Mr. VEST. I do not know where it comes from, but I know the papers say it exists. I know one thing—that salt is furnished free to the people of the Senator from Maine and denied to my people.

Mr. FRYE. On fresh fish?

Mr. VEST. I know it is furnished to you for the purpose of preserving your fish, but it is denied to the cattle-raisers and pork-raisers of Missouri, Illinois, and Iowa. If that is not a subsidy, I should like to know what subsidy means.

We have tried subsidy in this country and it has been a failure. We are asked now to go into this uncertain and nebulous domain again, and that, too, directly in the teeth of the experience of France, to which I propose now to refer.

If any Senator will take the trouble he will find that the experiment as to bounties in France has failed, and the Senator from Maine says that this bill is framed exactly on the model of the French bounty bill.

I quote from an article by Capt. John Codman:

Going further into the field of experience, we find that France, Spain, Germany, Austria, and Italy and other nations have all, within the last few years, spent immense sums of public funds for the development of their sea-going tonnage; and still not one of them can present results which justify their expenditures. As an example, we will take France, which adopted one of the most liberal and undisguised bounty systems ever introduced. After six years' trial of bounties, based upon construction, tonnage, and mileage, that Government now finds its merchant marine in a deplorable condition. It accomplished the purpose of increasing her tonnage so perfectly that the supply is now largely beyond requirements, and the newly gained tonnage is proving a burden to French taxpayers, instead of even an indirect profit; and this at a time when British shipping has been earning unusual profits. Previous to the adoption of this system by France, one of the strongest arguments in its favor was that these bounties would open French trade with new markets.

That is what we hear now.

It signally failed in this object, as the following table, giving the value of imports and exports in millions of dollars, at the rate of 5 francs to the dollar, will show:

Then comes a table from 1883 to 1888, showing a steady decline under the bounty system.

Year.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
1883.....	$1,177	$912	$2,089
1884.....	1,048	814	1,862
1885.....	996	791	1,787
1886.....	1,023	849	1,872
1887.....	984	848	1,832
1888.....	1,037	850	1,887

These figures show that, whilst there has been a recovery since 1885, the total value of the foreign trade of France was less in 1888 than in 1883 by $202,000,000—a falling off of over 9½ per cent. As it may be asserted that a comparison of values is not a fair test of the position, the rise or fall of prices of commodities affecting the figures from year to year, we give the imports and exports in thousands of tons, as follows.

Then follows a table giving the tonnage from 1883 to 1888.

Year.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
1883.....	24,770	6,228	30,998
1884.....	24,120	6,064	30,184
1885.....	22,316	5,834	28,150
1886.....	21,682	6,019	27,701
1887.....	22,462	6,896	29,357
1888.....	23,657	7,139	30,796

The decrease is thus not only in values, as the falling off in volume between the two limits of comparison is 202,000 tons, or 64 per cent.

The French bounty law was passed early in 1881, and subsidies were in full swing by 1883.

In 1883 the registry tonnage entering and leaving French ports was, native 8,546,000, and foreign 13,447,000, and in 1888, native 9,283,000, and foreign 13,609,000. Here, it is true, there is an increase of 737,000 native tonnage; but as foreign also increased 132,000 tons it can scarcely have been said to have been gained at the expense of the latter. Even if it had been it would have proved a poor return for an expenditure of bounties and subsidies over nearly a decade, the regium donum in 1888 alone, according to Trade and Transportation, amounting to $6,792,778.

This clearly demonstrates that the effect of French bounties has been to give more ships than were needed, without in any degree expanding the nation's commerce; in other words, many more tools and less work.

In corroboration of this I desire to read the official report of Mr. Mason, who was consul to Marseilles under the Administrations of both Mr. Arthur and Mr. Cleveland. Here is his statement in regard to the condition of affairs as to the French shipping:

The French shipping bounty and subsidy law was passed in 1881. Five years afterwards Mr. Mason, our consul at Marseilles, who was retained in the service by President Cleveland on account of his excellent record, made a report to the State Department on its effects as observed at his port, one of the principal ports of France. In this report he said—

Now, this is after five years' fair test of the system, and it is identical with the bill which is offered here in the Senate. It gives 30 cents a ton to French ships—ships constructed in France—and 15 cents on foreign ships bought abroad, because France, like Germany and every other country in the world but this, permits her people to buy where they can buy cheapest. Says Mr. Mason:

Shipping and sea-faring men of all classes at Marseilles begin to complain of the present season as one of almost unprecedented dullness and depression in all that relates to marine transportation and the values of shipping. Not even during the lowest period of the cholera epidemics of 1884 and 1-85 was the lethargy in marine freights and vessel property so extreme and so apparently hopeless as now.

Of the ocean-going steam-ships belonging to this port, thirty-eight are now laid up for want of profitable business. Twelve sailing vessels belonging to Marseilles, fifteen under the Italian flag, and twelve of Austrian nationality are likewise tied up in this port, awaiting the return of more prosperous times.

There was sold yesterday by the tribunal of commerce a wooden bark of 596 tons register, recently arrived from Pensacola, thoroughly equipped and in good condition. The vessel is the latest of the French built in service, but has been in the mean time kept in good repair. The pressure of hard times brought this bark to the block and she was sold for $199.52.

There are now offered for sale here two English-built iron steamers of 840 tons register, which have been in service twelve years, but have recently received new boilers, water ballast, and steam steering-gear, and are regarded thoroughly sound, capable vessels. Three years ago they were bought for $58,392 each. Now, with all their repairs and improvements, they are vainly offered at half that price.

Still another incident of the same character will illustrate the extraordinary contingencies which may overtake ship-owners in times like these. A merchant with $7,720 to invest purchased last autumn an iron steamer of 1,500 tons burden for $17,370, paying what money he had and borrowing the remainder ($9,650) from a bank to which he gave as security a mortgage on the vessel, which he was thought to have purchased at a great bargain, less than half her value a year or two ago. One of this steamer's boilers being somewhat burned, she was taken to her English builder to have that fixture renewed. There the new owner was persuaded that in order to have a really first-class modern steam-ship he should add steam steering-gear, steam-winch, and water-ballast apparatus.

To this he agreed, supposing that his French banker would not hesitate to loan the cost of these repairs on a new mortgage, since the entire sum would be invested in improvement of the vessel. But the bank had become suspicious of floating collateral, and refused all further loans. The steamer was therefore seized by the builder and sold at auction to meet his account for repairs. The price realized was less by $900 than the bill for repairs. The bank lost its loan and the owner his $7,720, his entire fortune, and gained only a highly conclusive experience.

When in the light of facts like these—

Says Mr. Mason—

one reads that the ship-building of Great Britain has declined from 1,250,000 tons in 1883 to 540,000 in 1889, and that one firm in London now offers for sale 222 screw steamers of all classes and dimensions, from 7,000 tons each downwards, the effect is to console the patriotic American citizen who has of late years been lamenting his country's want of a competent merchant marine adapted to international commerce.

LATER TESTIMONY TO THE SAME EFFECT.

Two years later than this the French law had been in operation more than six years, over half of the period for which the law was enacted. Its effects were then analyzed and published by M. Arthur Raffalovich in the Journal des Economistes. He showed that while there had been an immense increase of the French steam tonnage, an increase of fourfold since 1880, the increase in German steam tonnage, without bounties, was still more rapid, while between 1873 and 1890 the French steam tonnage had not only increased in a most marked manner without any bounty, but had increased faster than the German.

Mr. Raffalovich also shows that, while the French carrying trade had increased as the result of bounties and subsidies, the total French exports had not increased. This is a most important point for the consideration of people who imagine that increasing American shipping will necessarily increase American exports.

Mr. President, we may put all the steam-ship lines we can build on the ocean and send them to the South American ports, and they will not bring us commerce. It may, for a time, cause activity in the ship-building yards of the United States. It may put money into the pocket of Mr. Cramp; it may put money into the pocket of Mr. Thurber; but it will not bring us commerce. Mr. Blaine may wine and dine and carry the representatives of the South American states from one end of this Union to the other, and they will go home and they and their people will buy where they can buy cheapest. All this talk about sister republics, all these platitudes about a great American Zollverein, will melt like snow before the sun when you come to self-interest. Commerce is based on self-interest.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HIGGINS. I should like to ask the Senator if the people of South America can buy grain or its products from any other country cheaper than they can from us.

Mr. VEST. If they can buy grain cheaper from us than from any other country, they will do it without a subsidy. That is my answer.

Mr. HIGGINS. I understood the proposition of the Secretary of State to be that their tariff against our grain should be taken off. That was all.

Mr. VEST. It makes no sort of difference about the tariff against our grain being taken off. They will take that tariff off without a subsidy to steam-ships if it is to their interest to do it.

The proposition here is now that we shall not only make a reciprocity treaty as to tariff duties, but that we shall subsidize steam-ship lines. Mr. Blaine and Mr. Curtis do not content themselves with a reciprocity treaty, but they want in addition to that to subsidize steam-ship lines.

Now I will undertake to show that instead of there being a scarcity of transportation to the South American states, there is a superfluity. Here is a statement absolutely correct, and I have got it in several other shapes, but it amounts to the same thing, showing the number of American vessels and of foreign vessels that touch in the United States and go to the different South American states. I will ask that it be inserted in my remarks without reading, because I do not care to exhaust my strength and weary the Senate by reading it in detail.

Below we present a statement showing the number and tonnage of steam-vessels engaged in the trade between countries south of us and the United States. It hardly bears out the often heard complaint, lack of communication. Properly speaking, it is lack of trade rather than transportation that gives reason for complaints of that sort:

AMERICAN VESSELS.

Line.	Tonnage.	Line.	Tonnage.

Porto Rico	2,000	Anchor Line, W. I. route...	6,000
Brazil, etc	1,000	Total	85,996
Earn	3,000

From the above it will be seen that there are thirty lines in the trade, with an approximate tonnage of 165,771, nearly one-half of which is American. Three of the American lines, the Thurber, Ward, and Red D companies, have nine vessels on the stocks, or just completed, of about 5,000 aggregate tonnage. In addition there is a large "tramp" tonnage not taken into account in the above statement.

Now, this does not look like a lack of tonnage. The principal appeals for subsidies have come from shipping men in the South American trade, the very direction in which the bulk of our foreign tonnage is engaged, and their chief argument was that we needed transportation. Do these facts bear them out? We have not yet heard American merchants or exporters complain of insufficiency of transportation. No doubt they would be willing to let the Government pay part or whole of the freight, if this is what our steam-ship men really want; but if the truth were correctly understood, it is more the lack of trade than the lack of transportation that affords reason for complaint. The one-sided character of our South American trade needs little commentary. The total values of our trade with Mexico, Central America, West Indies, and South America are as follows:

Year.	Exports.	Imports.
1879	$59,870,000	$145,607,000
1889	82,043,000	199,961,000
Increase	$22,173,000	$54,354,000
	* 22 per cent.	† 30 per cent.

Our exports are thus increasing more slowly than imports and in spite of sufficient transportation. What is the reason that we sell these countries less than one-half we buy? Give us the trade, and transportation will soon be forthcoming. Instead of the "trade following the flag," the truth is the flag follows the trade, and the sooner we comprehend that fact the better.

In addition to that, here are foreign vessels, the Quebec Steamship Company, etc., amounting to 85,996 tons, and all this in addition to tramps—not the tramps we have on land that are a nuisance—

Mr. FRYE. These are a bigger one.

Mr. VEST. The Senator says these are a bigger nuisance. If you would stop to-morrow, you would stop the commerce of the world. If you were to take from the ocean to-morrow the tramps, as they are called, the vessels that belong to no regular line, that go wherever they can get a load, that accommodate themselves to all climates and commercial conditions, you would stop the commercial intercourse of the whole world. They are called tramps because they are in the way of these subsidy-grabbers like Thurber and other men who come here and demand that the United States shall give them money to keep up a line already in existence. What would become of the cattle-raisers of the West if it were not for the tramps? The monopolists have got all the regular cattle-vessels that go to England. If one of my constituents goes to New York to-morrow with a load of cattle and asks to put them on board a steam-ship, he is told the whole line is engaged for six months or a year and his only chance for reaching a foreign market is in a tramp.

What is there disreputable about these tramps? This man Lachlan abuses them, and another one of these subsidy gentlemen said he would shut out not only foreign, but domestic competition. He is frank enough and brutal enough to say he wants a monopoly. He wants this Government to pay him enough to hold the whole thing and put the entire sum of money in his own pocket.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maine, in every discussion we have had, always winds up in a halo of exultation and glory over the coastwise trade, and says "There is the effect of shutting out foreign shipping; there is the result of excluding foreign-built ships from American registry." I will tell you the secret of the prosperity of the coastwise trade, the internal trade of the United States. It is in free trade. If there were not free trade to-day between the States, if Pennsylvania could tax the products of New York and New York the products of Massachusetts, and so on, your coastwise shipping would be in the same condition as your foreign shipping.

You can not shut out the competition on the broad ocean of foreign-built vessels. Your laws can not reach outside of your own territorial domain, and you refuse to allow your people to go abroad and buy their vessels where they can buy them cheapest, and because you have free trade between the States established by the Constitution, where you can not reach it, thank God, and above any party. You say our prosperous coastwise trade is on account of your obsolete and semi-civilized code in regard to shipping. I deny it. Whenever we point to a great evil and abuse in this country, no matter where it exists, crystallized for party purposes, we are pointed to the prosperity of the country. Mr. Blaine winds up his argument with Gladstone and says, "Look at the United States. It had a great war and lost billions of dollars' worth of property, and look at its prosperity to-day!"

Why, Mr. President, this country would prosper if ten Congresses should enact all the laws they possibly could against it. It would still prosper in a degree. Its energies, resources, and courage are such that it could prosper in spite of any legislation no matter how vicious, just as we see a man who can violate all sanitary rules and still live to be a hundred years old. Every one, especially in the West, has seen these phenomenal men who have been drinking alcohol for forty years, and who are pointed at as being living examples of the fact that alcohol is the finest food in the world and conducive to health. As I have had occasion to say, if they had lived on milk and water, we should have had to shoot them on the day of judgment. [Laughter.] This country prospers in spite of the laws, no thanks to the Republican party for what they are doing for it. This country to-day, like a young giant, tears to pieces the iron fetters that you have put upon it and strides on, weighted down by bad legislation, but it still goes on.

Mr. President, I was very much interested in the statement of my friend from Maine as to the cost of these pet bills of his. He puts one, I believe, at $6,000,000 a year. Not much! Six millions a year! I made a little calculation on the first bill, which is a subsidy bill pure and simple, intended for the general public, and under the provisions of that bill, as I foot it up in my old-fashioned arithmetic, a vessel of 3,000 tons running 3,000 miles would get $6,000 subsidy for every voyage, a pure and simple subsidy, and for every mile that she ran besides she would get more, and if she could concoct a voyage to the uttermost parts of the earth her subsidy would be that much greater.

Now under the mail-carrying bill, the postal subsidy, the Senator gives to each vessel $6 for each ton. That would give to a vessel running between Liverpool and New York $18,000 for every voyage.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 26th ultimo approved and signed the act (S. 575) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2403) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Beaver Falls, in the State of Pennsylvania; and

An act (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether it would be agreeable to him to postpone his remarks this evening, as it is very warm and he has been speaking for some time. If he yields, I should like to move an executive session.

Mr. VEST. It is very warm and I should like to stop.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRYE. If I may be pardoned for saying it, I am very anxious to get a vote on these bills to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to delay them.

Mr. FRYE. I desire the bills acted upon to-morrow, for I shall try to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 3, 1890, at 12 o'clock, meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 2, 1890.

The House met at 11 o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. REED, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent that double the usual number of copies of the bill (S. 398) subjecting imported liquors to the provisions of the laws of the several States be printed, together with the accompanying report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio, Mr. KINSEY, and Mr. ROBERTSON as managers at the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9104) granting to the Jackson, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way, etc.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes consideration of the bill H. R. 11045, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER].

Mr. HEMPHILL. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that unless there is a desire on the part of the other side to discuss the amendment we will be glad to take a vote on it at once, as we have some other amendments which we regard as more important.

Mr. LODGE. One or two gentlemen on this side desire to speak—the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANK]—

Mr. HEMPHILL. Will not the gentleman speak on some other amendment and let us take a vote on this?

Mr. LODGE. The gentleman desires to speak to this amendment. I should like to say a few words myself.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How much time does the gentleman think will be required?

Mr. LODGE. I should say fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We do not care to discuss the question—

Mr. LODGE. Let fifteen minutes on a side be accorded; and if gentlemen on that side do not care to consume the time, the vote can be taken immediately after the discussion on this side.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We have other amendments which we regard as more important, and prefer to proceed to the consideration of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that gentlemen supporting the amendment have already consumed twenty minutes.

Mr. LODGE. It is understood that we are to have fifteen minutes on a side; and, of course, if gentlemen on the other side do not care to occupy it the vote can then be taken.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to limiting the debate to fifteen minutes on each side?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. I ask that the amendment be again read. The amendment of Mr. TUCKER was again reported.

During the reading of the amendment the following occurred:

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this being read for the information of the House? If so, I ask that the House be in order.

The SPEAKER. The House seems to be in perfect order. [Laughter.]

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment to this resolution, to insert near the bottom, after the word "that," the words "there is danger of," so that it shall read "and if upon such hearing the court shall be of the opinion that there is danger that a free and fair registration and election will not be held," etc.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have to discuss this matter I want to say one word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] on yesterday. He stated that before he came to Congress he was convinced that the Southern people, all the Southern people, would steal ballots, and that any man who would steal ballots would steal a horse or any other property. He said he had now modified his opinion, and while he did not believe they would steal property, he believed every one of them would be guilty of the theft of a ballot.

The above was the substance of the gentleman's statement.

He has withheld his remarks from the RECORD and I can not give his exact words, and others have given expression to feelings almost as discreditable.

Is it possible, Mr. Speaker, that people who confess themselves so ignorant as to the condition of the people of such a vast section of the country should venture to cast their votes upon a matter of such great importance to the whole country, to the whole people of the South, and to the integrity of our free institutions? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to reply to the statements made by many gentlemen on that side of the House, and repeated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] last night.

This speech also has been withheld and does not appear in the RECORD of this morning, and I state his remarks as I recall them. The purpose of his speech was, or seemed to be, an effort to convince this House that the people of the North could not go South and be received there with the courtesy due to gentlemen. I deny such statements in toto, and I call upon any intelligent gentleman upon that side of the House, Republicans as they all are, to state in this House if he has ever in his intercourse with Southern people, at their homes or elsewhere, received anything but the courtesy, and every courtesy, which he could possibly receive at his own home. [Applause.]

I here upon this floor protest that there is no truth in any such allegations. And I assert this, that for the last twenty-five years no gentleman of the North ever visited the South without being treated with all the kindness and courtesy that he would have received at any locality in the North or that he would have received in his own home.

I freely admit that it is possible for a man who is devoid of the attributes of a gentleman and who seeks a quarrel in the South may succeed in his purposes in that country as well as in any other section of the land, but I utterly deny the statement that a Republican can not go all over the South as a Republican and expressing the principles of a Republican. I wish now to quote from a speech by General Warner, and I call upon my friend from Tennessee [Mr. EVANS], who heard this speech, to state if all he said is not true in every respect.

Mr. EVANS ought to be a good witness for you. He has lived in the South for twenty-five years and has been known all that time as an ex-Union soldier and an outspoken Republican. Mr. EVANS has never told me what he would answer, but I know he will state what is true, and the truth is all the vindication we desire. General Warner was a man from Ohio who had the most abundant opportunities for knowledge upon this subject. This speech was made at a reunion of the Army of the Cumberland in the city of my distinguished friend, Mr. EVANS. The speech was made to Federal soldiers.

General Willard Warner had been a gallant soldier, had fought under General Sherman, and, as I have stated, was once a Senator of the United States. He addressed the Society of the Army of the Cumberland on September 14, 1890. I hold in my hand a book containing his speech, a paragraph from which I will read:

"General Garfield said right when he said that if the soldiers had all these difficult questions to settle they would have been settled happily long ago. I have lived here in the South.

There are men here who know me as a radical Republican of the worst kind. I have lived here for sixteen years of the prime of my life, and I say it here, with pride and thankfulness, that I have yet to receive the first word or the first act of unkindness from a Confederate soldier, and I never expect to as long as I may live here.

These are words spoken by an ex-Federal general, raised in Ohio, and who as a Republican was elected to the Senate of the United States from Alabama.

He was a friend and associate of Lincoln and Garfield. He continued his speech, and emphasized his view regarding soldiers in these words:

The harsh words and language and insults come from those gentlemen, largely professional politicians, who talk now, but who shirked in the fight when fighting men were in sharp demand. And now I say confusion to them. Confounded confusion to them—to the men who now, sixteen years after we fighting soldiers have laid down our arms, would wave their red flag in the face of this sorrowing nation. Their time has gone by, and the soldiers should everywhere be heard as they are being heard to-day.

There was nothing in this speech about lack of courtesy. The people all over the South appreciate and desire the society of gentlemen, and they always give evidence of their appreciation by seeking the acquaintance and association of gentlemen whenever they are met without a thought as to their political views or whence they came. [Applause.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I desire to say that there is so much disorder upon the floor that it is impossible to hear the gentleman, sitting even as close to him as I am sitting, less than 10 feet from him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will be kind enough to suspend for a moment. The Chair turned over the House to the gentleman in a good condition of order. Will the House please be in order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am in the midst of the disorder and I differ with the Speaker as to its being a good condition of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] is only a short distance from the gentleman who is addressing the House. If gentlemen in the vicinity of the member addressing the House will have the kindness to cease conversation, and if gentlemen will have the kindness to take their seats, there will be no difficulty in hearing what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] has to say. The Chair desires the attention of the House for a moment. It is utterly unjust that the Chair should take up one-half the time in keeping order for the other half. If each gentleman will bear in mind that his own conversation increases the disorder, and especially if those in the immediate vicinity of the gentleman addressing the House will bear this in mind, the Chair thinks the gentleman can be heard.

Mr. WHEELER. I call upon you, gentlemen, to remember the appeals made to you by the Southern Republicans on that side of the House. I refer to the words of warning from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. EWART] and the admonitions uttered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. COLEMAN]. I also call attention to what was said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK]. All of them told us that elections in the South were fair and honest. At least, all said they were fair and honest so far as their knowledge extended. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] told you they were perfectly fair in his district.

Mr. HOUK. Will the gentleman allow me? I said that the elections were fair as far as my locality was concerned, but I did not say, and I would not say, that they were fair in all parts of the South, because I know the contrary to be the fact.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I call upon any gentleman from the South to say that elections are not fair in his district, at least as far as Democrats are connected with them. I call upon any Southern Republican to say if Democrats do not conduct elections with perfect fairness in his district; if every one, black or white, can not cast his vote with perfect freedom, and if Democratic inspectors do not count them precisely as they are cast.

I call upon the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. EVANS] to speak out and tell his Republican associates whether their accusations against the South are true. Tell them if Democrats conduct elections fairly in his district. Tell us who is right in his statements on that subject, Mr. MASON or myself. Tell them who is right, General Warner or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] as to the deportment of Southern people towards strangers. I see the gentleman is standing and ready to reply.

The SPEAKER. There were two minutes, and the Chair did not take that out of the gentleman's time. It took more than two minutes to secure some order in the neighborhood of the gentleman.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Then I will take the two minutes. I want the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. EVANS] to inform his party associates upon these two subjects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has had seven minutes, including the time consumed in the effort of the Chair to keep gentlemen still in his immediate vicinity.

Mr. EVANS. I would like to answer the gentleman's inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed acts of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 401) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Alexandria, in the State of Louisiana;

An act (H. R. 3940) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona;" and

An act (H. R. 9289) to provide for a term of court at Danville, Ill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4562) to provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union. [Applause.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged motion, the presentation of a conference report, but I do not want to take the time of the House by any explanation. I submit the report of the conference committee upon the District appropriation bill, and move its adoption. I will then ask leave for gentlemen desiring to print remarks upon the bill to do so, as I desire to avail myself of that privilege.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. McCOMAS. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. McMILLIN. Would it not be better for the gentleman to withhold that report until after the special order is disposed of?

Mr. MCOMAS. It will only take a moment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know that the order embraces it, but I think it is unfair to take up time for the consideration of this bill when it will not be delayed more than an hour or two.

Mr. MAISH. There may be matters to which there is objection.

Mr. MCOMAS. It has been unanimously reported; the report of the committee of conference has been printed in the proceedings of the Senate; it has been discussed, and it is also in a public document. I therefore ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and move its adoption.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the statement at least should be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the reading of the statement.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will not the gentleman kindly withdraw this? I know that the resolution embraces that business, but it will not take long for this special order now to be disposed of.

Mr. MCOMAS. This would take but a moment. I will say to the gentleman that the report is unanimous, and the only thing that has been in dispute has been discussed in the Senate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Can not the gentleman from Maryland take it up after 2 o'clock?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is absolutely no occasion for bringing it up now, as the fiscal year is over and the appropriations have been extended.

Mr. MCOMAS. The fiscal year is ended, but it is important that the appropriation bill should be passed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in December last this House passed that bill the gentleman can very well afford to let it go over for two or three hours.

Mr. MAISH. Some things in it may be objected to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. What difference would there be between two or three hours hence and now?

Mr. MCOMAS. In deference to the request of the gentleman, although I had hoped that this report would be adopted at this time, I will withdraw it for the present and bring it up immediately after the vote on the election bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. You can bring it up immediately after the debate is closed.

Mr. MCOMAS. I will renew the request as soon as the bill has been voted on.

FEDERAL ELECTION BILL.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] charges me with doing injustice to the State of South Carolina, in calling in question the courtesy and hospitality of the people of that State. The gentleman is mistaken; I only stated a fact. I arrived in the city of Charleston on a Saturday night, in the last Presidential campaign, and my friend from Chicago [Mr. MASON] came a little later. We were to speak there on Monday night. I said that during our stay in the city, which lasted till the following Tuesday, that we never met or shook the hand of a single white man in the city of Charleston. No white man in the city of Charleston spoke to us or paid the slightest attention to either Mr. MASON or myself during that time, except a persevering newspaper reporter. I made no complaint of this and make no complaint now. I only mentioned it to show the feeling of the people of Charleston. During this same campaign I visited several other Southern States, where I found a very different feeling.

In all the States except South Carolina I met white men and black men, Republicans and Democrats; met them at their homes and at the hotels, on the platform and in the audience; but our stay in Charleston seemed unlike our stay in any other State. It seemed as if we were in a foreign country, under a foreign flag. They knew we were Republicans and had come there to speak, and consequently they seemed to regard us as enemies. They showed this feeling in various ways. I felt it in the atmosphere. We spoke to a very large audience from the steps of the city hall; but no white men were on the platform nor in our audience. The colored people were willing to hear us, but the white people were not.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I have not time now. As I said before, we only met one white man in Charleston who talked to us, and that man was a newspaper correspondent. He interviewed us closely as to our mission in that State. Our arrival and departure were noted in the daily newspapers. We were spoken of courteously in the newspapers, but we were shunned and avoided on every hand by the people of Charleston. We were shown the city and the public buildings erected there by the Government, but this was done by colored men. They furnished the carriage and accompanied us (to the horror of the Charleston white people); they pointed out the places of interest; but no white man did anything of this kind. The newspapers stated, for foreign use no doubt, that the mayor and council had called upon us and offered us the freedom of the city, but they did nothing of the sort.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Not now. We spoke from the steps of the city hall, where they are accustomed to hold their public meetings, but they put the lights out in the city hall and barred the doors. The hall was as dark as Egyptian night when we made our speeches on the steps, and every door was closed and locked. I suppose they were afraid we would steal the city records. If a few lights had been left burning it would have seemed more courteous, but the city hall was dark and deserted.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Your Republican friends were very discourteous to you when no white man spoke to you. Democrats would have treated you courteously.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Democrats in some localities would, but no man, be he a Republican or Democrat, can live in Charleston and do otherwise and keep out of the poor-house, unless he has some fixed income. I had the pleasure of meeting a little later some gentlemen who are white men, and who are Democrats, who live in Charleston. They are men of wealth and have large business interests in that city, but I did not meet them in Charleston. I met them elsewhere and later, and they explained why they had not called upon us. They said that they wanted to come to the hotel and call upon us; that they wanted to show us the courtesy that members of Congress are entitled to under such circumstances, but they said they did not dare to do so. They said: "We live here, our families are here, we are in business here, and we dare not ignore the sentiment of our people. The North has no idea what Southern ostracism is. If we had called upon you or invited you into our homes, or shown our sympathy for the cause you are advocating, it would be very uncomfortable for us in this locality. The Charleston people would ostracize us in our business, and we would be ostracized, and our families would be ostracized in the church, on the streets, and in the public schools, so fatal is ostracism in the city of Charleston."

I have met some of these gentlemen from Charleston this winter in the corridors of this Capitol, and they still say what they said then, that their people are standing in their own light in depriving the colored man of his right to vote. They expressed the belief that the fraud and perjury which are now justified in maintaining white supremacy will prove a curse to their children and their children's children in the years to come.

One of those men said: "I do not care anything about politics. We all know that there is no such thing as an honest election in South Carolina, and while the methods employed defeat the Republican party and keep the Democratic party in power, this corruption that now receives our sanction will demoralize our children and bring a curse upon the rising generation."

This view was expressed by a leading citizen of Charleston, who calls himself a Democrat and who was in the Confederate army. His ancestors were Whigs and he believes in a protective tariff, as all of the gentlemen do to whom I refer, and they also believe in fair elections, and look forward with intense anxiety to the day when the shackles of Democracy will be broken in South Carolina. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not desire to make any reply to such stuff as that. The gentleman went down there to see the negroes and I suppose he saw them.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct my attention and the attention of the House to the pending amendment of my colleague from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER]. I do not wish to direct attention to South Carolina or to Ohio, or to the black man or to the white man as such, but I desire to bring the attention of the fair-minded men of the House back to the pending amendment. As is well known I am in favor of this proposed legislation so far as its scope and purpose are to extend the operations of the supervisors' act and enlarge and strengthen it, while I am opposed to any purpose there may be in this bill to take Federal control of the elections. But I am opposed to this amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, which not only contravenes the extension of the supervisor system, but seeks to weaken the law already upon the statute-book.

The act of 1871 provides that that law shall be put in operation in any city having 20,000 inhabitants or upward upon the application of two citizens thereof, and in other places upon the application of ten citizens, and that provision of the law is mandatory. There is no discretion about it. The court is obliged to put in operation the provisions of the law whenever two citizens of a city of 20,000 inhabitants or upward apply for it. I do not know what gentlemen upon either side of this aisle mean when they say that no supervision is required in their districts. I am perfectly frank to say that supervision is absolutely necessary in the city which I have the honor to represent in part upon this floor, and I do not propose, if I can help it, to permit this amendment of the gentleman from Virginia to prevail, because, as I say, it weakens the provisions of the law already upon the statute-book. It permits a hearing upon the application before the circuit judge and the district judge sitting in banc. It permits a prolonged controversy about the matter and then a judicial decision. I very much doubt our power to vest this authority in the judiciary. Mr.

Speaker, the measure now pending before the House provides that upon the application of fifty citizens in certain Congressional districts and upon the application of one hundred citizens in certain other portions of the country (as set out in section 2) this supervision shall be put in operation. As I said before, the existing statute permits it upon the application of two citizens.

I do not believe there is wisdom in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and I trust that those who are in favor, as I am, of strengthening the existing law and extending its operation, believing in its fairness and equity, will oppose the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, if the time on the other side is exhausted, or if there is no desire to use it further, I will ask for a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. One word. Another objection is that it vests a discretion in the court which makes it necessary for that court ultimately to pass upon its own action. Now, I think there would be a tendency in the mind of the judge, if he permitted supervision to be made, to decide in favor of any contest that might be made to invalidate the State count, and that, it seems to me, is a very serious objection to the proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest and with a great deal more of surprise to the course of the debate upon this bill, and the reflection that has come to my mind more forcibly than any other has been that probably the history of the world presents no greater anomaly than the fact that a legislative body in a representative government should actually be devoting hours and days of its time to a discussion of the question whether there should be an equal distribution of political rights and political power throughout the constituencies of a common country.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You propose to make it "equal" by putting it all in the hands of one party.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the American people are an intelligent people and they understand this situation and this question. They know that, underneath all the embroidery of discussion and legal and constitutional technicality, the bare and naked question submitted to this body to-day is whether people who are by the Constitution and the laws of this Government entitled to the exercise of the right of suffrage shall be permitted and guaranteed the exercise of that right in every part of the country untrammelled and without fear or reproach. That is the precise question before the people and before this House. The talk of gentlemen who undertake to explain away the circumstances under which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] comes here with some 9,500 votes for him and only 27 against him, as being merely the result of an indisposition on the part of the voters to go to the polls is mere froth in this debate, when they know and we know, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] himself has distinctly stated, that the question now before us is that of either permitting a majority of the people to vote or preventing them from voting, as they have been prevented in the past.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon—

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do not interrupt me. You have had plenty of time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I merely want to say that I made no such statement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from South Carolina distinctly stated—and I hope he will adhere to it and show the courage of his convictions for which he has been given so much credit all over the country—he distinctly stated that either the condition which now exists in South Carolina shall continue, that the conditions under which great masses of people who are entitled to vote, but who have black skins and who have been manumitted from bondage have been prevented from voting shall continue, or else the people of South Carolina whom he represents will have to leave the State, and he swears before God they will not leave the State.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I only desire to say that I made no such statement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman can explain hereafter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not want to explain, only to deny.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to say in this connection that we understand this question just as the gentleman has stated it. For twenty-five years it has been a part of the creed of the Republican party that every man who is a citizen of the United States should have the privilege of going to the ballot-box and expressing his will on public questions. We have been unable to carry out that doctrine; we have been unable to accomplish that great result, and why? Largely because certain gentlemen of the North have wanted us to wait and allow this question to work out its own solution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like permission to say a few words more. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] may have five minutes more, to be charged to this side of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But there are not five minutes remaining to that side of the House under the agreement made a few minutes ago, there are only two minutes and a half remaining.

Mr. FRANK. We will yield the gentleman from Maine the balance of our time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that whatever time remains to our side may be given to the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine—

Mr. BUCKALEW. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. All right; I will meet the gentleman at Philippi on some other occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, is there any time left upon this side?

The SPEAKER. The time is exhausted. The first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER].

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is that amendment?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let it be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "opinion" the words "that there is danger," making it read "and if upon such hearing the court shall be of the opinion that there is danger that a free and fair registration and election will not be held," etc.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. TUCKER, it was rejected.

Mr. ROWELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as a new section, to be section 38:

It shall be the duty of the circuit judge or judges of the United States in each circuit, within one month after the passage of this act, to open a special term of the circuit court in and for such judicial district in their respective circuits as shall be most convenient to him or them; and the said court so opened and held by said circuit judge or judges shall appoint for each judicial district in their respective circuits three discreet persons of good character and standing, who shall be residents of the judicial district in and for which they are named, who shall be known as United States juror commissioners. It shall be the duty of said commissioners to organize as a board by the selection of one of their number as chairman, whose duty it shall be to preside over their meetings and to give notice from time to time to his associates of the time and place of all meetings of said board. The said board may act by a majority vote, and shall from time to time make from the qualified voters in their judicial districts a list of persons who under the laws of the United States and of the State in which they act shall be eligible for jury duty, without respect to race or color. And hereafter all panels for jurors, grand and petit, shall be drawn by said board in the presence of a district or circuit judge. All provisions of law in relation to making jury lists, or the drawing of jurors, inconsistent with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed. All vacancies which shall from any cause arise in said board shall be filled by the court making the original appointments, which court shall be held as provided herein for its holding for the making of such original appointments.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. ROWELL] whether this amendment provides that one of these officers shall be of opposite political party to the others.

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir; there is not any politics in it. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. It is all politics.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I trust we may agree upon some time during which this amendment shall be discussed.

Mr. LODGE. What time do you propose?

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest ten minutes on each side.

Mr. HOOKER. Let us have more time than that.

Mr. BLOUNT. We have other things to discuss and vote upon.

Mr. HOOKER. Some gentlemen who desired to speak have been excluded under the arrangements heretofore. I give notice that I want to be included in any arrangement which may now be made.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] that it is not the fault of our side that he has been excluded. We are obliged to vote on this bill to-day at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We are not responsible for this limitation of time.

Mr. HOOKER. There ought to be at least twenty minutes' discussion on each side on this amendment, which is in my judgment one of the most important amendments offered to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. This strikes me as a very important proposition; and I think we ought to have discussion for half an hour on each side.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, that consumes one-half of the time between now and the final vote on the bill. The understanding was clear that gentlemen on the other side should offer their amendments and then we should offer ours. They have submitted two amendments already after exhausting their time, which has taken up a very considerable portion of the time we had, and if they are going to consume the balance of the time we had just as well give up all hope of submitting any amendments at all. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will appreciate the fact that we are absolutely at the mercy of the majority in this respect. We certainly ought to have the time which was accorded to us.

Mr. LODGE. The gentleman suggested ten minutes, but I think that is too short a time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then say fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; that will be agreeable to me.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then we will make it fifteen minutes, if agreeable to the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before the debate begins I desire to submit a point of order on the amendment.

On yesterday the provision in the bill as to juries was stricken from it, so that now there is no provision at all embodied in the bill having reference to that subject. The point of order I submit is that the machinery of the jury, and the mode of fixing a jury, either legitimately or illegitimately, of packing a jury or legitimately making up a jury, is not germane to an election bill. It does not form any part of the election machinery; it is not germane to the election of members of Congress, and is not relevant in any way to the matter pending. I submit the point of order ought to be sustained; and that there is nothing in our rules or anything which governs us which makes the mode of fixing a jury, or selecting a jury, or obtaining a jury in the circuit courts of the United States a proper part of the machinery of the election of members to the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Several MEMBERS. Take an appeal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will not take an appeal from the decision, because I do not wish to consume the little time remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from South Carolina ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to fifteen minutes on each side. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire now to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in continuation and conclusion of the remarks that I had begun last night, and did not then complete, after I had read extracts from the speech of Mr. Prentiss made on the occasion of his contested-election case in the Twenty-fifth Congress, advancing an argument in that connection which has never yet been answered and, in my judgment, never can be answered, that under the grant of powers to the Federal Congress to pass election laws the primary power in that regard had been conferred on the States, using imperatively the language that the States "shall" pass election laws or laws prescribing the time, place, and manner of choosing members of the House of Representatives. It was not a grant of power to the State, but it was the imposition of a duty on the State and the requisition of a certain duty from the State in that respect. It was not a grant of power, because that convention was acting by States upon the subject under discussion at the time, adopting the various articles of the Constitution submitted to it; and it was left to the States to pass upon the final adoption of the Constitution, nine of them having the power to adopt it, thus placing it entirely and absolutely within the control of four of the smallest States of the original thirteen to defeat it.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, when we come to scan the language of the provision of the Constitution of the United States the word "shall" is used in conferring this power upon the States or imposing this duty upon them; but when you come to look for the power conferred upon the Federal Government in that connection it uses the permissive word "may"—Congress "may" make, alter, or amend such regulations. Now, if it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution and of the States which adopted the Constitution to clothe Congress with the power to pass Federal election laws which should have binding force within the States they would have said so in plain words and not confused the question by granting absolute power primarily to the States and secondarily permissive power to the Congress of the United States.

What is meant by the word "alter" when the language used is "Congress may make, alter, or amend?" Alter what? Alter a law already in existence, passed by the several States? When they said "make" in the same connection what did they mean? They meant that if the States failed to obey the constitutional requirements to make laws, or if they made imperfect laws, Congress might make, alter, or amend, because the power is primarily granted, I insist, to the States, and Congress is given the power only in the event of the failure on the part of the States to exercise this power. It was not contemplated by the framers of the Constitution that Congress should exercise it, except to alter imperfect laws or to make a law where none had been made by the States.

That this plain and obvious meaning is manifest, I maintain is clearly established by a common-sense construction of that instrument and by the extracts from Mr. Prentiss's speech, to which I have already referred, in which he alludes to the power of Congress in that regard. Seven of the great States of the Union, a majority of the original thirteen, with New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts at the head of them, ratified this Constitution solely on the ground that they protested against this particular phrase giving the Congress of the United States power to alter, change, or make the law. They ratified it under protest, and instructed their delegates to insist on the repeal of the power thus conceded, for fear it might be perverted to take away the power already given the States; and it never has been exercised up to this time. But when the proposition was made to make this law general in its application the honorable gentleman in charge of the bill, its reputed and supposed author, the gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. LODGE], did not dare to apply it to the great States of the North, including New York, Pennsylvania, and to his own Bay State (Massachusetts). He would have put his head into the lion's mouth rather than to undertake to apply this law to the people of his own State.

But, gentlemen, what are you doing? You are the Representatives of the people of the United States. You are their servants. They send you here, and you now propose to turn around and with the voice of masters say to the people who sent you here, "You have not adopted proper laws in the respective States under the Constitution; we, your servants, will establish new and different methods of choosing the Representatives of the people, other than those you have adopted. We direct you how you shall proceed; we speak to you, our masters, in the voice of a master, and direct the manner to be adopted within your respective States for choosing your own Representatives, and you shall have only such laws in that regard as we choose to make; and particularly the Southern States, where this law is to be applied, we will treat as provinces; we will send our satraps and supervisors there to direct the course of the elections, because we do not propose to trust the people there to control their own domestic affairs."

Why, therefore, are you attempting to make this change in the Constitution and in the laws of election? Because you hear the rumblings of the coming storm which will overtake you on the 15th of November, when you will be called to account by the people for this effort to usurp the power of the States and centralize it in the Federal Government of the United States; and thus by a bold and defiant step perpetuate the power and permanency of the Republican party in this House. It is arranging the machinery of elections on a partisan basis, boldly and flagrantly announced by the advocates of this bill, with a view to set aside the elections held in November next for Representatives in this House and clothe the Republican members whose seats may not be contested with the power to organize the House and admit such members as their satraps and party tools may certify to be elected from the Southern States, for whom, and for whom alone, this bill is designed and intended.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that there are always compensations in nature. Our friends on the other side always rejoice over the elections before they are had, and we rejoice afterward, and so both sides get a good chance at rejoicing. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, talk about your amendment, will you?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It will depend very much on whether you win or lose whether you rejoice after the next election, and I do not think you will do any rejoicing.

Mr. PEEL. You will rejoice over the certification after this if you rejoice at all.

Mr. ROWELL. I do not care to answer the gentleman who has just taken his seat further than to say that under the present law two citizens of any city of 20,000 inhabitants can put the supervisor system in operation. Ten citizens in any Congressional district can do it, North or South, in any Congressional district. Under this law which is now proposed to be passed it takes one hundred citizens in a city, one hundred citizens in a Congressional district, and fifty citizens in a county. But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the amendment.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ROWELL. I shall have to be excused.

Mr. CRISP. I only wish to ask my friend—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Illinois introduces an amendment and then says nothing about the amendment, but talks about other matters. We want to understand what he proposes by his amendment.

Mr. ROWELL. I desire to address myself to the amendment now pending. I said yesterday it ought to be the desire of every man on both sides of the House to get into the jury-box of the United States court an impartial jury, that would mete out equal and exact justice, under the instructions of the court, to all parties litigant. Therefore it was desirable that the elements of partisan politics should be eliminated from the matter of the selection of jurymen. I said that under the present statute, for the first time in our history, partisan politics was injected into the jury-box by the appointment of a jury commission one of whom should be the clerk of the court, the other a citizen appointed, of opposite political affiliations. So it has been since the enactment of that law an understood thing that jurymen when called to the United States court understand that they are called to represent the political parties to which they belong. Now, the proposition of this amendment is that the court shall appoint a jury commission of three discreet, honorable men, and that that commission shall be the jury commission for that court, to select in the presence of the court the men who are to be aids to that court in reaching correct conclusions of facts in all matters brought before the court. It is in accordance with the system of several of the States. It is absolutely as fair as it is possible to make a jury commission. The court is not restricted to one political party or another. He is simply required to appoint citizens whom he shall deem fit and proper for that purpose. And if there is any judge in the United States that does not know that upon his jury, their intelligence, their uprightness, and their impartiality depends the success of any term of court, then that man is not fit to sit upon the bench. And I do hope that all men on both sides of the House—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, you don't.

Mr. ROWELL. And I do hope that all men on both sides of the House who desire that we may eliminate partisan politics from the jury-box will heartily and earnestly support this amendment that is offered, laying aside party predilections in the effort to get an honest and impartial jury system.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman, before he takes his seat, what hardship has grown out of the present system that he proposes to remedy by this change in the law.

Mr. ROWELL. I answered yesterday that it was the experience of all lawyers trying cases in the United States courts involving partisan questions that juries divide upon party lines, and that is the history of the operation of the present law.

Mr. McMILLIN. You want to convict, right or wrong, do you?

Mr. TUCKER. Yesterday your side of the House voted down a proposition that would remedy that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, if anything could amaze an American citizen at such a time as this it would be such a proposition as this, submitted to the representatives of the American people for their approval. This proposition assumes that all the virtue, and all the intelligence, and all the honesty in the country abide with Republicans and the Republican party. And the gentleman who proposes it suggests that it is for the purpose of having an impartial jury, when he knows, and everybody knows who knows anything about this question, that the object of this amendment is to pack the juries of the country with Republican partisans. Under this bill the opportunities for fraud by Republican officials are unlimited. I have seen the operations of Federal supervisors and marshals in various parts of the country, and I know that if there is anything more than another that they need it is just this kind of a jury system, so that when they have committed outrages upon the people they can be protected by Republican courts and partisan juries.

Mr. Speaker, I can not understand why gentlemen upon the other side of this House can ask this Congress to indorse a proposition of this kind. My colleague says that the present system has been tried and proved a failure. To his remark I desire to say that a United States court meets in the town where I live, and that the present jury system has worked to the perfect satisfaction of every citizen, so far as I have heard, and it will always work to the satisfaction of the people. The commissioner appointed under the present law is of opposite politics to the clerk, is appointed by the judge, and if you assume that the judge will not appoint honest men for this work, you assume that there is not an honest man in the Democratic party who is capable of the work, nor an honest judge in the Republican party that could appoint such a commissioner.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this proposition is the culmination of the outrage contemplated in this bill, an outrage which will cause the blush of shame to come to every member of this House hereafter who supports it, when he shall look back at the fruit of his own efforts in behalf of this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have no patience, Mr. Speaker, to speak of this measure. I have no patience to contemplate the stupendous wrong, oppression, and outrage which are contemplated and concealed in it. Gentlemen may suppose that they can commit all sorts of offenses against popular liberty and go unwhipped of justice; but I warn them that they but teach bloody instructions, which being taught will return to plague the inventors. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

This bill is an assault on popular government. It impeaches the intelligence, integrity, and the patriotism of the American people, and implies that the voters of this country are not capable of holding an honest election, and consequently Congress will send Federal satraps and officials to supervise, scrutinize, and control their elections, and pay all the expenses out of the Federal Treasury. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] This bill, Mr. Speaker, is intended to perpetuate the ill-gotten power of the Republican party in this House and in the country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, when I was cut off a short time ago by a very characteristic exhibition of Democratic courtesy, I was about remarking that the people of this country have tacitly consented to a condition of things which is well known to have existed for nearly twenty-five years in one portion of our country in regard to the suppression of the suffrage. There has been a remarkable toleration, a suspension of the exercise of the power which the Government could exercise, and which I believe it should long ago have exercised in behalf of its citizens, and this delay has been largely based upon the idea that obtained in some portions of the North that time would bring a healing of these difficulties; that the Southern people, if left to themselves, would finally come to the conclusion that in a Republican Government it would be best for them, as well as best for the rest of the people, to recognize the authority of the Constitution and the laws of our country.

The most discouraging episode, Mr. Speaker, in the whole history of our dealing with this question, or rather of the failure to deal with it, was the illustration furnished at the very inception of this debate that we must wait longer than one generation for the people of the Southern States to rise to a just and proper recognition of the rights of American citizens at the polls. I could have some patience with gentlemen who, having thrown themselves into the vortex of rebellion and found themselves whirled along by its remorseless tide, have been unable to wrest themselves from the associations thus formed or to abandon doctrines and practices with which they have so long been associated; but, Mr. Speaker, we have been shown by this debate that the hopes held out to us that the rising generation of the South would reach a higher, a nobler, and a broader plane upon this question than the men who have been controlled by the traditions of the sorrowful past are no longer to be entertained. When in this debate the protest of that side of the House against the right of every citizen of the United States to have the privilege of a free ballot and a fair count was opened by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], who was only twelve years of age when the war broke out, who was skylarking with his darky playmates while I and others of my countrymen were keeping the weary vigils of the blockade, or patrolling the waters of South Carolina and Georgia, or guarding the flag and the perpetuity of the Union in Tennessee, Georgia, Louisiana, and elsewhere in order to preserve seats in this body to be occupied by the Representatives of the people of South Carolina; when we found that gentleman, representing the new generation of the South, standing here reiterating the old slogan, the old watchword, the old war-cry of John C. Calhoun; when we heard the representative of the young men of South Carolina to-day reaffirming the doctrine of nullification on the floor of this House and inviting witness of the eternal God, declaring in substance that whatever the American people in their majesty, that whatever the American Government in its power may attempt to do to secure to American citizens the rights guaranteed them by the organic law it shall stand for naught, so help him God, on the soil of South Carolina, I say, gentlemen of the North, the time for toleration has gone by! [Loud applause on the Republican side.] They have held out the word of promise to the ear and broken it to the hope. They have profited nothing by the lessons or the opportunities or the magnanimities of the days gone by. A generation has passed while we have permitted American citizens to be deprived of their rights in the South; it has been a disgrace to our own manhood every hour that we have tolerated this degradation of citizenship. To-day we are told we need not have any hope for a better condition of things at the hands of the young men in the South; and therefore I appeal to young and old in the North and wherever there is loyalty to the Constitution and the law to declare that this condition of things shall now come to an end! [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], if I understand it, provides that the circuit court of the United States for each judicial district shall be open one month after this bill shall have become a law for the purpose of appointing jury commissioners. Now, I wish to submit to him and to the House that a circuit court of the United States may be held by a circuit justice, one of the judges of the Supreme Court, or by a circuit judge, or by a district judge, or by two of those judges sitting together. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois provides that after the court is opened it shall appoint these jury commissioners for each judicial district.

I propose to offer an amendment inserting these words, "two judges concurring in the appointment," so that when the circuit judge, or the circuit justice, or the district judge opens the circuit court for the purpose of appointing jury commissioners two of the judges who compose the court shall be present and shall concur in the appointments. By this means we will have a circuit justice and a circuit judge concurring in the appointment, or a district judge and a circuit judge, or the district judge and a circuit justice. If the object is a fair one—and I do not question the gentleman's motives at all—if the object is a fair one, this amendment ought to be adopted, and when it is adopted the power will still remain under the gentleman's amendment to construct the jury in each district solely out of his own party friends, if such advantage is desirable. If this proposition is a party scheme to provide partisan jurors, my amendment will not prevent its execution, but will give it more dignity than the original amendment possesses.

Another thing. Under the laws, as they exist to-day, four-fifths of the judicial districts are divided into divisions. In some districts there are three divisions, and the jury for one division can not sit in the trial of a cause in another division of the same district; but the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois makes no provision to meet a case like that. I offer the amendment I have stated, to come in after the word "appoint," and I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "appoint," the following: "two judges concurring in the appointment."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, rose.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, has my time expired?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Has the whole of the time on this side expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] has the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I can not hope in the time allowed me under the rule to discuss as I would wish in detail the bill now pending before this House. I must be content, therefore, with the presentation of the few general observations I may be able to crowd into so short a time.

In all the history of legislation for the past twenty-five years I can not conceive of a measure of greater moment to the people of this country than the measure under consideration, involving as it does the sacred rights of American citizens and the safety and perpetuity of our republican institutions.

In the district I have the honor to represent on this floor, although in the South, fraud and intimidation in elections are unknown. [Applause.] There is no necessity for the passage of this bill so far as the First district of Tennessee is concerned.

The descendants of the sturdy mountaineers who, under the leadership of Sevier, Campbell, and Shelby, struck the death-blow to the British army at King's Mountain and turned the tide of the Revolution, my people are the sons and daughters of their fathers and the blood has never turned back in their veins. [Applause.] Fidelity to the American Union, love of liberty, reverence for the American flag, has ever been the prevailing sentiment among them, and they are as free to-day as the air they breathe, enjoying, in fullest measure, every blessing conferred by the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

But the question in my mind is whether it is fair, whether it is patriotic or statesmanlike to withhold a benefit from my fellow-citizens elsewhere, who need it, simply because it may not be a benefit to my district. I am prepared to answer in the negative. [Applause on the Republican side.] A contrary conclusion, it seems to me, would be illiberal, unfair, unpatriotic, and unstatesmanlike. Bribery in elections North and South, the perpetration of frauds, the rifling and stuffing of ballot-boxes, and the intimidating of voters in some of the Congressional districts in the Union are matters which have become so notorious that they are now known of all men, and their denial would be worse than folly.

The fact, as stated by my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], in his able and eloquent speech on this question, that the delegate from Dakota received more votes by 10,000 than twenty-five members from the South who voted against the admission of that Territory as States in the Union, is crowning evidence—irresistible and inexplicable—that there is something radically wrong somewhere.

The distinguished gentlemen on this side of the House who have been accorded the time to discuss these questions in extenso have shown from day to day during the progress of this debate, as clearly and forcibly as it is possible for language and figures to show, the frequency and enormity of these outrages; have shown to what depths of degradation and dishonor our boasted elective system has been ruthlessly dragged; have demonstrated the absolute necessity for this law or some other law, and their arguments stand unanswered to this good hour and their statements unassailed.

But the Democratic party, true to its history, ever ready in the past, under any and all circumstances, to array itself in opposition to all great measures of reform, as well as of finance, originated and proposed by Republican statesmen, comes forward now in solid phalanx to oppose and to attempt to defeat a bill the sole object of which is to secure honest elections wherever they are found to be dishonest, and to punish ballot-box thieves and bribe-givers and bribe-takers throughout the land.

These gentlemen on the other side of the House tell us that there is no necessity for the enactment of this bill into law, and yet they do not pretend to deny the existence of the evils complained of which the bill is intended to remedy. Past wrongs can not be righted, but a repetition of them in the future can be prevented. Whether this bill, if it shall become a law, will bring about the results hoped for or not is to be tested in the future.

It is not as perfect as some of us desired. It is not the bill some of us wanted. Some of us desired even a stronger law. But we yielded, not to the crack of the whip of our alleged masters, not to the party lash as charged, but in a spirit of concession, of compromise, we yielded and accepted this bill. It may not accomplish the purposes for which it is intended, but it can and will be made stronger and more effective in the future if it fails now. The American people are behind the movement, and a free ballot and a fair count they must and will have at all hazards and at any cost.

It is claimed on the other side that it is a partisan measure. Sir, I would not by any vote of mine pass a law in the interest of one class of our people as against another class. I would not for my right arm cast a vote here for a law that would tend to foist one race of our people over another in any part of this country. God forbid that I should be actuated by any such motive.

It is only the sanctity of the ballot-box I seek to preserve, the integity, dignity, and sovereignty of American citizenship I seek to maintain. Let us secure the accomplishment of this grand result and all other problems will work out their own solution as the God of nations may direct in His own good time. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in view of the situation, what is the duty of the hour? The duty of the hour is for the representatives of the people to invoke by law the strong right arm of the Federal power and let it be wielded until every man in every city, town, township, parish, and precinct in every State, North, South, East, and West, be that man rich or poor, high or low, Republican or Democrat, white or black, shall be as free under the flag as the air which floats it, protected in the exercise and enjoyment of every privilege, immunity, and franchise guaranteed by the Constitution to every American citizen. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Do gentlemen on the other side tell us that this will cost money—millions of money—and that therefore it must not come to pass?

I say, in the name of liberty and of law, perish money, perish property, perish life itself! Save the sanctity of the ballot-box! Survive the Government of the people! Preserve the unity and sovereignty of the American Republic! [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes 134, noes 139.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois. [The question was put.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BUCKALEW, Mr. TUCKER, and others called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ROWELL and Mr. TUCKER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 146, noes 143.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 146, the noes 143; and the amendment is agreed to. [A pause.]

Mr. STRUBLE was recognized and addressed the Chair.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yeas and nays.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is a demand for the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The announcement was made, and the Chair thinks it is now too late to demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I demanded the yeas and nays almost immediately upon the announcement.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the yeas and nays can be ordered.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Upon the demand of a constitutional number of members they must be ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Inasmuch as we have not proceeded with other business and as there was great confusion, a number of gentlemen having asked for the yeas and nays and the Speaker not having heard the demand, which I know the gentleman from Alabama and others made, I think we are entitled to the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to decide this question in accordance with the rules.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask that gentlemen in favor of ordering the yeas and nays stand up. [A number of members on the Democratic side rose.] Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen standing ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

The SPEAKER. The vote has already been declared.

Mr. SPRINGER. We want it declared according to the Constitution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We could not ask for the yeas and nays until the result was announced.

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope there will be no objection if they want the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRISP. We demand the yeas and nays as our right under the Constitution.

The SPEAKER (Mr. CRISP speaking at the same time). Under the unanimous consent of the House the Chair puts the question on ordering the yeas and nays. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise in their places and stand until counted. [A pause.] In the opinion of the Chair a sufficient number have risen. The yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 150, nays 144, not voting 34; as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. ROWELL was adopted.

Mr. SMYSER (during the roll-call). I am paired with my colleague, Judge SENEY. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin, with Mr. WALKER, of Missouri.
 Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. PHELAN.
 Mr. REYBURN with Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania.
 Mr. McCORMICK with Mr. OATES.
 Mr. SMYSER with Mr. SENEY.
 Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. WILEY, on the election bill. Mr. SHERMAN would vote for and Mr. WILEY against it.
 Mr. SIMONDS with Mr. EWART, on the election bill. Mr. SIMONDS is for and Mr. EWART against the bill.
 Mr. DE HAVEN with Mr. BIGGS.
 Mr. PAYSON with Mr. ANDREW, until 1.20 o'clock to-day.
 Mr. STIVERS with Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, until Thursday next.
 Mr. COGSWELL with Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts, for one week from June 30.
 Mr. BAKER with Mr. SPINOLA, for three weeks.
 Mr. WALKER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. CLARK. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have just received a dispatch from my colleague, Mr. FITCH, saying that he is ill and unable to travel by rail; that he has been forbidden by his doctor to come to Washington to-day, which he greatly regrets. Mr. FITCH is paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. WHEELER, but if present and voting, would vote "no" on this proposition.

Mr. FLOWER. My colleagues, Mr. WILEY and Mr. SPINOLA, are absent sick, both being paired.

Mr. ANDREW. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 54, section 32, line 12, after the words "United States," insert "except section 1989 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this relates to the use of the Army or Navy at the polls. This provision, as it is in the bill, proposes to give to the supervisors, as I understand it, the right and the power, heretofore conferred upon the President of the United States, to use the Army or the Navy of the United States at the polls, or in carrying out whatever instructions or orders they may give; and this is to eliminate from the section that one provision of the law, as you undertake to re-enact it here.

Mr. LODGE. I want to examine the section to which this refers, before answering the gentleman.

Mr. McKINLEY. Does the gentleman propose to repeal this section?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir. That section of the statutes provides that the President may use the troops of the United States in enforcing any warrant or executing any writ of a court.

Mr. LODGE. And your amendment repeals it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; it excepts it merely from the operation of this section.

Mr. LODGE. But, as I read it, it includes it in the repealed sections.

Mr. McKINLEY. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, if the gentleman will read the section he will find that it re-enacts all of the United States statutes relating to civil rights, the elective franchise, etc., and among other things reference being made to this section 1989, which is intended and does authorize the President to use whatever power may be necessary to enforce the decrees of the courts. This section proposes to put it into this bill, so that the supervisors can do, in carrying out whatever instructions may be given to them, what the President of the United States has heretofore been authorized to do; that is, to carry out the mandate of the court by using the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me suggest to the gentleman if it does not do this: make this section applicable to the provisions of this act, giving power to these Federal officials, and leading to the consequences indicated by my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is it.

The section as now embodied in the law provides:

It shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such person as he may empower for that purpose, to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as may be necessary to aid in the execution of judicial process issued under any of the preceding provisions, or as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of the provisions of this title.

Mr. ROWELL. This provision of the bill reads:

And all sections of Title XX of said Revised Statutes, entitled "The Elective Franchise"—

Mr. HEMPHILL. This comes under that title or under the title of "Civil Rights."

Mr. HERBERT. That section 1989 read by the gentleman from South Carolina refers in the latter part of it to such powers as shall be necessary—to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of the provisions of this title.

Now look at section 1980, which is a part of the provisions covered by this title, and you find these words:

Or if two or more persons conspire to prevent, by force, intimidation, or threat, any citizen who is lawfully entitled to vote, from giving his support or advocacy in a lawful manner toward or in favor of the election of any lawfully qualified person as an elector for President or Vice-President or as a member of Congress of the United States.

Section 1989 authorizes the use of troops to prevent any of the crimes denounced in this title, and one of the crimes denounced is a conspiracy to prevent any person from giving his support or advocacy in a lawful manner towards the election of any person as a member of Congress.

Taking the two sections together, then, they do give power to use troops at the polls, because in no other way could you prevent the commission of the crimes denounced in this section.

Mark the use of these words in section 1989, "to prevent the violation"—that is, to anticipate and by the use of the Army to "prevent" conspiracies to intimidate voters or conspiracies of any kind to deprive voters of their rights. The Army, of course, can only be used to prevent crimes of this character by having it at the polls. It could not prevent such crimes unless it should be brought to the spot, and that of course is what is meant. The putting of this section into a bill regulating elections means that it is part of the election law, part of election machinery provided in the bill. The chief supervisor is the executive officer of this machinery, and it necessarily follows that he is the person to whom is to be delegated the power spoken of in section 1989 to use the Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In other words, the present law provides that this authority shall rest in the President of the United States. This bill takes it from the discretionary power of the President and places it in the hands of the supervisors of election to use the Army or the Navy to enforce, in the election where members of Congress are to be chosen, the orders of the supervisors of election and endanger a conflict between the State troops and the United States troops. The President of the United States has been considered heretofore as having ample authority to issue any edict which was necessary in the premises. But this amends that power so as to place it in the hands of the supervisors of election to do as they please. They may simply issue their edict or arbitrary mandate and have it enforced.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman propose to nullify the law?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Before going into the debate let me see if we can not reach some understanding as to the time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let me say in this connection that I am in favor of the President of the United States exercising this authority, and not some irresponsible Republican official.

Mr. McKINLEY. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina—

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would rather, if the gentleman from Massachusetts is prepared, that we should agree on some time before proceeding.

Mr. LODGE. This is the introduction of an entirely new subject. The bill does not repeal this section or touch it, and it seems to be bringing something entirely new into the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. But it does touch it.

Mr. LODGE. If gentlemen on the other side desire to debate it we ought to have ample time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. You re-enact this statute, you know—

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that gentlemen can go ahead and offer their arguments—

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, well, we want to conform to the practice that has obtained all along in the consideration of these amendments. Let us agree upon some time.

Mr. LODGE. I am ready to. I have no desire to occupy time myself.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to facilitate some agreement. Make it fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. BUCKALEW. No; ten minutes. The time is getting very short.

Mr. BLOUNT. Make it ten minutes.

Mr. LODGE. Say twenty minutes on a side.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Fifteen minutes on a side is enough, considering the other amendments we wish to offer and the limited time we have in which to do it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] could well afford to do this, as very much of the time has been taken up in the consideration of his amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to making it fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentlemen on the other side desire to debate it a little longer I am willing that they shall do so, with the understanding that there be the privilege of offering another amendment on this side of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Let us make it fifteen minutes on a side and then go on as we have before.

Mr. CLUNIE. This is the most important amendment which is yet to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to fifteen minutes on a side on this amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That will consume the whole time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the Chair will remember, I asked the Chair to state when the general debate upon this bill would close under the order of the House that two days were to be given for the five-minute debate, and the Chair informed me then, and informed the House, that it would close at 3 o'clock, I being of the impression at that time, as the Chair was, that this order to begin voting on the bill was for 3 o'clock to-day instead of 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The gentleman is mistaken—

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair so stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so stated in connection with another act which the gentleman from Illinois has forgotten.

Mr. SPRINGER. I asked the Chair to state when the two days for debate under the five-minute rule on this bill would begin and when the debate would be ended under the one-hour rule. The Chair stated that it would begin at 3 o'clock on Monday, and debate under the five-minute rule did begin at 3 o'clock on that day.

The SPEAKER. General debate continued until 3 o'clock at the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], and if the Chair answered at that time in that way the Chair had in mind the request of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was not the order of the House, and in view of that fact I desire to ask unanimous consent that this time be prolonged until 3 o'clock.

Mr. BELDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], inasmuch as we have been pushed for time, if I can not offer another amendment and have it pending, to be voted upon without debate.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not see how we can make any arrangement of that kind. We wish to understand what we are voting upon.

Mr. LODGE. It is not possible for me to make an agreement of that sort. There is an amendment now pending. Let us deal with it as rapidly as possible, and then go on to the next amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it be read now, so that gentlemen can understand what is offered.

Mr. HOPKINS. I object to that. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. McADOO addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] desire to be recognized?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not desire to be recognized if we can not agree as to time, further than to state that according to the reading of this bill as I read it, and according to the understanding of every gentleman upon this side, the plain effect of the measure is to put the control of the election machinery of the Government in the hands of the chief supervisor and of his deputies. That, I think, is manifest to every gentleman who has read the bill. The chief supervisor has the right to call upon the posse comitatus and all other persons around him to obey his instructions in reference to this matter, and under this thirty-second section, which undertakes to re-enact certain provisions of the Revised Statutes, the supervisor will have the right to call upon the Army and the Navy of the United States to support him in whatever he undertakes to do. If that is true, then this clear-cut question is to be voted upon by this House, whether or not things have come to that state that we will put it into the hands of any citizen to call upon the military forces of the United States to carry out his edicts at an election.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman one question there. Can the law be carried out in your State without the Army of the United States to enforce the law? That is a simple question, and I hope the gentleman will answer it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why, sir, on the contrary, it can be carried out by my friend from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], or any other honest man who will go there and do his duty; but the difficulty has been that we in the South have heretofore been subjected, and I very much fear that we will be subjected again, if this law passes, to the rule of men who would not be tolerated for a moment in any other State in the Union. We have seen people brought there from New York to carry the election, and they were so bad that the man who brought them there bought tickets for them and put them on the ship and sent them back again, because he did not know whether they would kill us or kill him.

Mr. MILLIKEN. We allow to everybody his right to vote.

Mr. HEMPHILL. So do we.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And we not only allow him to vote, but count his vote.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Exactly; and so do we. If he wants to do that he has as much right to do that as myself or you.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am exceedingly glad to hear it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is all there is of this. If this power is put into the hands of an unscrupulous man and he desires to carry the election, and to enable him to do so to use the troops, why then it gives him that power. There is no desire in the South to resist the law, and we could not resist it. All we want is that we shall have a fair chance to have honest men conduct the election, and that we shall not be overridden by people sent there to execute the law.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will you allow me just a word there?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not understand that there is anything in this bill which applies particularly to the South.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no!

Mr. MILLIKEN. Or to the State of New York; and yet gentlemen from the South and from the State of New York discussing it seem to talk as if the bill was intended for those places.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Do not the gentlemen represent New York and the South?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Pardon me. If this medicine is not needed in New York for those who are sick and if there is no trouble in the South and they are not sick in this way down there, then they will not have any of it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The trouble about that is the men who are to decide that. It is not a majority of the people who are to decide it; it is not anybody who is necessarily a man of character and responsibility; but it is left to fifty or one hundred men who may be scalawags; and they may not even be citizens of this country, as all that they need to do is to claim to be citizens.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Who are the people down in that section who are scalawags? That is a question of great importance.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The respectable people are the honest and responsible men of property; men who conduct business, obey the laws, pay taxes for the support of the Government; and the scalawags are the people who come from a distance to stir up strife and bad blood for purposes of their own.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And for purposes contrary to those of the Democratic party.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; there are plenty of respectable people there who vote the other ticket.

Mr. FRANK. I would like the gentleman from South Carolina to let me ask him a question. Do you mean to say that the effect of this provision is to transfer the power now lodged in the President under section 1989 of the Revised Statutes to the Federal supervisors?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. ANDREW. There is no question about that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The supervisor has the same power to carry out his mandates as has the President of the United States to enforce the mandates of a court of justice.

Mr. ANDREW. And there is no Northern State that will submit to it.

Mr. CLUNIE. A ten-cent supervisor takes the place of the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to know if it is practicable to agree upon some limit for this debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. ADAMS. I only want to occupy two minutes, or about that time.

I believe the construction placed upon this section by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], and, as I understood, by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], is incorrect. I understand him to say that under the section of the Revised Statutes referred to a certain power, namely, the power to use the Army and Navy to enforce judicial process, can be exercised by the President.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I say so. It is the law.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood him to say in addition that that power could be exercised under this bill by another official, namely, the chief supervisor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes; by this official.

Mr. ADAMS. That if this bill should pass, then the same power exercised by one official, namely, the President, may be exercised by another official, to wit, the chief supervisor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is my position.

Mr. ADAMS. Now, the section itself says what the President may do; and this bill says that that section shall be enforced and shall be part of this bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Part of this bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but is it a logical inference from that to say that the power exercised in execution of the existing law by the President shall be exercised under this act by the supervisor?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will you tell me why it is necessary to make it part of this bill if it is not to be put into execution?

Mr. ADAMS. Is it not fairer to say that the power exercised by the President of the United States under section 1989, for the purposes of that section, shall be exercised by the same official, to wit, the President of the United States, under this act for the purposes of this act?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the act said so I could not object to that feature. I should have no objection to that. It would create no new powers.

Mr. ADAMS. Then, if your construction is not correct you would have no objection?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Exactly so.

Mr. ADAMS. I have a very strong opinion about the matter, but of course that can not make an opinion for the gentleman, nor can I have him conform to my opinion, but the logical construction of this is that the power exercised by the President under that act shall be exercised by the President under this act.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Answer me this question: Why is it necessary to use that expression, putting the section of the Revised Statutes in as a part of this act?

Mr. ADAMS. What expression?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In the law that you have just read.

Mr. ADAMS. For the reason that under that section the President has certain power to use certain forces, including the militia of the States, for certain purposes, but these are other purposes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If you will look on the other side of the page you will see that he has the power to use them for just purposes; but you propose to place the Army and the Navy under the command of a politician appointed to carry the elections against the people.

Mr. HOPKINS. The bill is not susceptible of that construction.

Mr. ADAMS. I simply wanted to correct what I thought was an incorrect statement of the effect of the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly; but I may save the gentleman's time by saying that I simply rose to correct what I regarded as an incorrect construction of the bill.

Mr. CRISP. I do not think the section is understood by the House now. It needs to be explained, and I want to ask a question which may aid in the explanation. The—

Mr. ADAMS. I will yield.

Mr. CRISP. The present Revised Statutes of the United States permit the use of troops by the President to enforce judicial process and to prevent the violation of certain laws referred to in the chapter. This bill seeks, by making that section of the statutes a part of it, to give to the President the right, by himself or through another, to send troops to any State in the Union where, in his judgment, it is necessary to prevent the violation of the election laws. That is what it means.

Mr. ADAMS. Is that a question or a statement?

Mr. CRISP. Now, my question is, whether the gentleman is willing, in a time of profound peace, to lodge that power specifically by this act in the hands of the President in the absence of any necessity for it.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no question about that. I am willing to have the judicial process of the United States courts enforced in the one case as in the other.

Mr. CRISP. You are willing?

Mr. ADAMS. I am willing. It is the existing law for one purpose. Why not make it existing law for another purpose?

Mr. CRISP. Does my friend draw no distinction between the power to enforce judicial process and the power to send troops to a State in anticipation of the violation of a law?

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman must not draw that inference from what I have said.

Mr. CRISP. That is the distinction to which I wish to call attention.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the section to which this amendment relates makes section 1989 of the Revised Statutes a part of this act. Section 1989 is in the following language:

It shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such person as he may empower for that purpose, to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as may be necessary to aid in the execution of judicial process issued under any of the preceding provisions, or as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of the provisions of this title.

This title relates to civil rights. Hitherto it has never been held to relate to elections, but a provision in this bill declares that this section, hitherto confined in its operation to the matters enumerated in the chapter relating to civil rights, shall hereafter be made to apply to the subject of this bill. The language of the bill (section 32) is that "each and every" of the several sections of the Revised Statutes enumerated (this being one of them), and their provisions, are made to refer and apply to this act with the same force and effect as if it was specifically mentioned or referred to therein, save as the same shall be changed or modified by the terms of this act.

You place a body of supervisors at the polls, and any interference with their authority on the part of any person is declared to be unlawful and subjects the person or persons interfering to arrest and punishment, and here you provide for troops to be under the direction of these supervisors. You had before, and you have now, on your statute-book section 2002 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that—

No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls.

You already have the power to use the Army for the purpose of keeping the peace at the polls. You have used it in the past. You have terrorized voters in the past, but you are not content with that. You propose now to arm these supervisors everywhere with the power to use the Army. That is the wicked purpose of this provision. How can the gentleman escape from this conclusion? He can not say that the use of the Army is required to keep the peace. That is already provided for by law. But he goes further and injects into this bill this section of the Revised Statutes, which until this moment has never been invoked in relation to the elective franchise.

Mr. Speaker, you have arranged for partisan supervisors in this bill. You have arranged for partisan returning boards. You have organized your courts for these wicked purposes; and, expecting that all this may produce discontent and disorder on the part of the people, you now propose to surround these supervisors of election with soldiers to come and go at their beck and call. For what purpose? To make the voters feel that they are under the terrors of military authority, as you have done in the past. Not that the soldiers are necessarily to use their weapons, but that they are to terrorize the voters; just as an important Republican of South Carolina once said that the object in disarming the whites and organizing and arming the negroes was to cow the weak and poor and humble white men of that section and keep them from the polls. This provision is intended to have a moral effect upon the voters throughout the Southern section of the country, to make them feel the uncertainty of their liberties, and it is your hope that by means of this terrorism you shall triumph in the elections. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, the section of the statutes involved in this amendment is that section which authorizes the use of the Army and Navy of the United States to enforce the judicial judgments of the United States courts, without which there could be no power on the part of the courts of the United States. The effect of the amendment, if adopted, would be that any judicial process against anybody indicted or convicted under the penal clauses of this statute could not be enforced by the use of all the power of the United States. Adopt the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, and then, if an indictment was found against a ballot-box-stuffer or a ballot-box thief, or against the murderer of a voter at the polls, and if the county where this indicted person resided should rise up in rebellion against the authority of the court when it undertook to bring that man to justice, then the court would be without armed power to enforce its authority. The language of the existing law is not changed. The President of the United States may use the Army and the Navy to enforce judicial process; that is the substance of the provision.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then why do you not say so?

Mr. ROWELL. The existing statute is not changed. No power is given for anybody to use this armed force, except the authority designated in the provision itself. The supervisors of election are not under the direction of the President of the United States and have no possible connection with him. The bill simply provides that the courts of the United States, when seeking to enforce the penal clauses of this statute, shall have the same power behind them that they have to enforce any other of their judgments.

Mr. HERBERT. What is the meaning of this language, "to prevent violations of the provisions of this title?" Do not other provisions of the title refer to crimes against the suffrage, and how can the Army be used to prevent these crimes without having it present?

Mr. ROWELL. The power in the existing law applies to the President of the United States, and nobody else.

Mr. HERBERT. Authority is given to call out troops in anticipation—

Mr. ROWELL. What for?

Mr. HERBERT. To prevent any crimes against the suffrage—expressly for that purpose. If the language does not mean that, if it does not mean that there is a right to use the Army beforehand by sending it out in anticipation of violation of the law, it means nothing at all. And when this section is re-enacted as, or made part of, the election law the meaning must be that the chief supervisor of elections is the person to whom the section authorizes the President to delegate his authority to use the Army for the purposes designated.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] yield the floor?

Mr. ROWELL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe there is no limit now to debate, and therefore I will take the floor in my own right.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman should not rest under the impression that there is no limit to debate. I believe the five-minute rule still prevails; and in common fairness there ought to be a recognition on this side, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] has just spoken.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I will yield now for a recognition on the other side, and will then take the floor for five minutes. I do not desire more than five minutes.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this discussion is about to close and this is the first opportunity I have had to say a word in this debate. If this were still a deliberative body, a body in which the freedom of debate still existed as it does in the other end of the Capitol, and where I am glad to see a prominent Republican Senator says it must continue, I would like an opportunity to discuss this bill and to answer and resent some of the aspersions on my State and my section which have been thrown in this discussion.

Sir, to be cut off in this way so irritates me and makes me so mad that sometimes I am almost willing to go to the other end of the Capitol [laughter], if you do not succeed, Mr. Speaker, in abolishing the Senate, which is, as I understand, your next pet scheme after you pass this bill. I suppose you hope to accomplish it by a resolution from the Committee on Rules. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, it may be well that I have not had an opportunity to express my opinion of this measure and of some of the speakers and the speeches they have made in favoring it, for I know of no parliamentary language and no language consistent with my position in the church that would enable me to characterize it as I believe it justly deserves to be characterized. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word to those gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber who are in the habit of beginning their speeches by informing us that their hearts are the repositories of love and goodwill, and how utterly devoid they are of all the meaner and baser traits that belong to human nature generally.

If those gentlemen who get up here and tell us how their hearts swell towards me and my people, call us their friends, and tell us that we are a brave and honorable set of thieves, cut-throats, and assassins, that their hearts are so full of love and affection for us that they want to send a killing bullet with every one of our ballots, I want to tell them that they might eliminate these professions from their speeches, for they do not fool anybody with them, but only leave on them the impress of insincerity and hypocrisy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] on this floor the other day say that the majority in this House had the power to do anything. Yes, Mr. Speaker, but it was not always so. There used to be constitutional limitations which restrained the majority. There was a time when the rights of the minority had consideration at the hands of the majority, but I am sorry to say those times have passed. Yes, the majority can do anything as it now interprets its powers, but I will say to the gentlemen on the other side—

It is excellent

To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

It was not the power to do anything with the remnant of Lee's serried veteran legions that made Grant great, but it was the magnanimity with which he used that power that made him great. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I heard the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] on yesterday say that the people and the Representatives of the people were all behind this measure. Ah, Mr. Speaker, if I had the power to appeal to gentlemen on that side of the House whose judgments and consciences do not approve of this measure, to rise to the full height of their manhood and vote against it, we would beat it by fully two-thirds majority. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And you represent constituencies that are not behind you in this measure; because I have talked with many of them, and if they are to be believed, if they are behind you, then they are the greatest set of hypocrites on earth. Go ask some of the great men of your party. The truth of the matter is they are not behind it; the press of the country is not behind this infamous measure, and the people of the United States will condemn it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise only to say that, in my judgment, it will not do to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL]; nor is the interpretation he places upon the section justified by its language. If his amendment is passed by this House it will take from the President of the United States all the power he would have, under section 1989, to enforce judicial processes under the provisions of the bill now being considered by the House. And it must be remembered that in the bill we are now considering the judiciary has very much to do with its administration; and judicial processes will be constantly and ever recurring in the course of the administration of this law. Therefore I say if we should pass this amendment to-day, we deprive the President of the United States of a power which he has held since the foundation of the Government to use the Army and the Navy to execute the judicial processes of the Federal courts of the land. You might just as well destroy this bill at once if you deprive the United States Government, through its Chief Executive, of the authority to use the entire Federal force of the Government to execute the judicial processes under the proposed measure. We must not take from the Government the power to execute the judicial decrees and processes of its own courts, and this amendment should be voted down.

And now, Mr. Speaker, having said that, I want to add that this bill ought to be passed. I have not indulged in this discussion heretofore. This bill may not be, in all of its provisions, what I would like to have it, but it is a bill looking to an honest representation on the floor of the American House of Representatives and to honest voting and the fair counting of votes in every part and section of the American Republic. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is all of the bill, and no honest man can object to it and no lover of fair play can afford to oppose it.

Ah, but they say this measure is harsh. This measure will rest heavily only upon districts and upon States which violate the laws and the Constitution of our common country. Let every citizen of this Republic vote and then see to it that his vote is counted as it is cast and returned as counted, and you never need invoke any of the provisions of the bill or subject yourselves to what you term its harsh provisions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Ah, but you say that it is expensive; that it will cost $10,000,000, to be taken out of the Public Treasury. That assumes that the three hundred and thirty districts of this country will invoke the operation of the law. But there is not a man on this floor who does not know that not a hundred districts in the United States will invoke its operation when it goes into effect. It will not be required even in that number.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Do not depend on that.

Mr. McKINLEY. And let me remind gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, as well as my friends on this side of the Chamber, that you will diminish the cost of the administration of this bill in the ratio that you diminish fraudulent voting, false counting, stuffing of ballot-boxes, and suppressing the voice of the Republicans in the South. [Applause on the Republican side.] It will cost nothing if it is not used, and it will not be used if there is no need for it. Honest elections will make the law unnecessary; dishonest ones should be stopped by the strong arm of the law.

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] quotes from General Grant. Let me quote from an utterance of his, made in speaking of the condition of affairs in Mississippi, the gentleman's own State. Said Grant:

How long these things are to continue or what is to be the final remedy the great Ruler of the universe only knows, but I have an abiding faith that the remedy will come, and come speedily, and earnestly hope it will come peacefully.

Let me quote from him another utterance made two years before his death. Speaking of this very question of the suffrage, he said it would never be settled until every man who counts, or represents those who do count, shall cast one ballot and have that ballot counted precisely as he cast it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I want to say here to-day, for I have but a few moments, that this question will not rest until justice is done, and the consciences of the American people will not be permitted to slumber until this great constitutional right, the equality of the suffrage, equality of opportunity, freedom of political action and political thought, shall be not the mere cold formalities of constitutional enactment as now, but a living birthright which the poorest and the humblest, white or black, native-born or naturalized citizen, may confidently enjoy, and which the richest and most powerful dare not deny. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, remember that God puts no nation in supreme place which will not do supreme duty. [Applause on the Republican side.] God keeps no nation in supreme place which will not perform the supreme duty of the hour [renewed applause], and He will not long prosper that nation which will not protect and defend its weakest citizens. It is our supreme duty to enforce the Constitution and laws of the United States "and dare to be strong for the weak." Gentlemen on the other side, I appeal to you to obey the laws and Constitution; obey them as we obey and observe them; for I tell you the people of the North will not continue to permit two votes in the South to count as much as five votes in the North. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, the leader of the House [Mr. McKINLEY] has seen fit to keep his silence unbroken until the question came up as to whether or not troops should be sent to the polls. It would have been better for him if he had not supported that proposition. Since the pretorian guard stood upon the ramparts of the Eternal City and proclaimed that the whole Roman world would be sold at auction there has never been presented to the world so dangerous a proposition as that which is presented now by the representatives of the free American people coming here and proclaiming that they are willing to go voluntarily under a despotism and to be governed by military satraps and unscrupulous deputy marshals. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And since Didius Julianus, urged on by the aspirations of his wife and an ambitious daughter, bought at that sale the Mistress of the World and had the Roman Government delivered to him for cash there never has been presented so sad a spectacle as that wherein the old ship of state is to be scuttled on the anniversary of her first sailing. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Sir, is it possible that free and happy America is to follow all the older republics down to the darkness and despair of despotism? Was it for this our fathers fought and died? Did they rebel against foreign kings to cower before domestic despots? Have we so degenerated as to surrender our liberties at a less price than Esau obtained for his birthright and heritage?

It took five hundred years to enslave Rome. It required eleven hundred to destroy the republic of Venice. Even then she did not go down till the foreign invaders marched upon them the French legions before whom cities, countries, and continents had alike fallen.

Sir, will we, after the sacrifices that have been made for us, after the hopes that have centered on us, cross our hands to be tied? Will we turn loose on our people by this bill either soldiers or marshals of the Federal courts to drive them from the polls? Will we kennel around our halls of justice a lot of hell-hounds to hound down our free-men and run them from the voting places? After more than eighteen centuries of christianity have cheered and enlightened the world, will we inaugurate a slavery which would disgrace the dark ages? May Heaven forbid it!

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] has said, Mr. Speaker, that the North will not tolerate the existing manner of conducting elections in the South. "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant?"

I want to announce to the gentleman from Ohio and to the country the fact that the time has come when there can not be in the American Republic an enslaved South and a free North. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You may, like the madmen that you are, grasp the pillars of the Constitution and pull down the State, but like poor, enraged, blind Samson, you will perish in its wreck. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen seem to forget—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] forgets—that General Grant's power over his party in this country was broken by his efforts to pass the force bill. This is a more infamous and incomparably damnable bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the author of the bill, forgets that when troops went into the state-house of Louisiana in 1875 and drove out the Legislature at the point of the bayonet the citizens of Boston, be it said to their everlasting credit, rose as one man and proclaimed that military rule in this country was not to be tolerated. They rose as their fathers had to throw the tea overboard and to defy the usurper. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, you mistake the spirit of the American people. Republics, it is true, have arisen, have flourished for a time, and have fallen. You are making an effort to produce the most signal failure of free government recorded in the history of all time. You can not do it. The American people, born free, living free, will die free. They will send you down into your political graves for this attempt to destroy their freedom. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Sir, it is said that when Ulysses, the hero of the Trojan war, was returning to Ithaca, his home, he was shipwrecked on the Isle of Ogygia. Calypso, the nymph of the isle, entreated him to remain, and promised him eternal youth if he would do so. Although his home was an island in the ocean, only 44 square miles in extent, he preferred age and death with his country to eternal youth without it. He declined the offer, and leaving Calypso dying of grief set sail for his loved Ithaca. If such was his love for this small barren spot, a mere hawk's nest on the rocks of ocean, what love should not characterize the citizens of proud and glorious America for this great land which an all-wise Providence has given us.

Mr. Speaker, so great do I conceive our perils to be that, if I could make a wish, which, being recorded in heaven, would be fulfilled as occasion arises, I would ask, not for the extension of our boundaries or the multiplicity of our territories, although these would give us greater dominion; I would not ask for the widening of our harbors or the deepening of our rivers, although these would give us greater commerce; I would not ask for finer furnaces and factories or more fertile fields, although these would increase our wealth; but better far than this, than these, than all, I would ask for the perpetuity of the liberties of my countrymen, and I would pray that he who lays violent hands upon the Constitution of my country for the purpose of destroying our liberties might drop dead, as did the disobedient Jew who laid his sacrilegious hands without authority on the ark of the covenant of the living God. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McMILLIN. My time does not seem to have been as long as the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the House to understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] had three minutes yielded to him by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PERKINS addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment—

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to offer his amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is recognized.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, it has been charged in the course of this debate that this is a Republican measure. I desire to admit it. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] It has been charged also that this was a partisan bill. In the sense that it is intended to give to every honest voter the opportunity of casting an honest vote, I admit that it is partisan. For more than twenty-five years it has been the doctrine of the Republican party that every qualified voter under the laws and Constitution of our country should be permitted to cast one honest ballot and to have that ballot honestly counted, and in that sense this is a partisan measure. This demand for honest elections is no new-born zeal with Republicans. In the platform adopted in Chicago, in 1888, our party declared its position upon this question as follows:

We reaffirm our unswerving devotion to the national Constitution and to the indissoluble union of the States; to the autonomy reserved to the States under the Constitution; to the personal rights and liberties of citizens in all the States and Territories in the Union, and especially to the supreme and sovereign right of every lawful citizen, rich or poor, native or foreign-born, white or black, to cast one free ballot in the public elections and to have that ballot duly counted. We hold a free and honest, popular, and just and equal representation of all the people to be the foundation of our republican government, and demand effective legislation to secure the integrity and purity of our elections, which are the fountain of all public authority.

Mr. Speaker, we meant that then; and now, with the opportunity and privilege given us, we ought to meet it and meet it manfully and courageously.

For more than twenty-five years we have insisted that every man, no matter what the color of his skin, no matter what his nationality or creed, if he was qualified as an elector under the law and under the Constitution, should be permitted, unchallenged and unrestricted, to cast a ballot representing his convictions and his thoughts. Mr. Speaker, since 1861, when the Democratic party waged war upon the Government of the United States because Abraham Lincoln was honestly elected President, it has been opposed to honest elections, and Democratic opposition to this bill but emphasizes Democratic opposition to honest elections. And every man who occupies a seat upon this side of the House ought to stand by the declarations of his party in convention assembled, and stand by the efforts that his party is making to protect the humblest citizen in the enjoyment of his constitutional rights and privileges. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That is all there is in this issue; that is the only question that we tender to the American Congress in connection with this proposed legislation. I know that the gentlemen who occupy seats upon the opposite side of this House are opposed to this bill; I know those who believe in midnight raiders are opposed to this bill; I know that those who believe in shotguns and bludgeons, who believe in assassination and intimidation to prevent honest elections, are opposed to this bill; that those who believe in tissue ballots, in false registration, in repeating, in ballot-boxes with false slots, and in the red-shirted mounted companies that terrorize and murder, are opposed to this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] I know that every man who is opposed to the Government of the United States, who is opposed to law and order, who is opposed to the courts and to decency and right, is opposed to this bill and would defeat it if he could.

I know that every man who sustains and justifies the lawlessness and crime of the Southern communities that have governed and controlled Presidential elections, and returned as elected to seats in this House candidates who were beaten at the polls, and who had no claims that would entitle them to favorable consideration with honest men, are opposed to this bill.

And I desire, Mr. Speaker, in the minute that remains to me, to call attention to another class that are opposed to this bill; I refer to the class who indorse the sentiment found in the poem published in the Journal, a Democratic paper published at New Bern, N. C., in connection with the late Lee decoration services in Richmond, which is as follows:

Three hundred thousand Yankees
Are still in Southern dust;
We got three hundred thousand
Before they conquered us.
They died of Southern fever,
And Southern steel and shot,
I wish there were three million
Instead of what we got.

These men, Mr. Speaker, are opposed to this bill without exception, and in this fact the patriot who loves his country and who loves justice and right should find the most conclusive and convincing argument to sustain him in his support of this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The time having arrived at which under the rule of the House the previous question has been ordered, the first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to request unanimous consent that the time for offering amendments be extended one hour, to 3 o'clock—

Mr. LODGE and others. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As an hour was taken from the time for offering amendments on Monday. [Renewed cries of "I object!" and "Regular order!"] Of course it will be remembered that the time to offer amendments was to commence at 2 o'clock on Monday, but that hour was taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time for offering amendments be extended until 3 o'clock.

Mr. ROWELL. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman. It ought to come from him who in bad faith has taken so much of the time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had receded from its amendments numbered 2, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL ELECTION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay this bill and all amendments to it on the table.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Division.

Mr. McCOMAS and Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 148, nays 156, not voting 24; as follows:

So the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. REYBURN with Mr. CATCHINGS, on this vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin], who was announced as paired on the last vote with Mr. FITCH, of New York, paired before he left Washington, on account of ill health, with Mr. WALKER, of Missouri. He left the pair in my charge in his absence, and asked me to see that it was kept alive. Before the last vote I said to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WALKER] that I should have to enter a protest against the transfer of that pair to an absent member on the other side. Mr. CLARK was telegraphed to know if he could return to Washington. He replied that although in ill health he would return if he could vote when he reached here, but that his pair with Mr. WALKER was one which would prevent him from voting even if he were here, and he therefore decided not to return.

Mr. WALKER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to read that pair, and also to make a statement. The pair reads:

Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin, is paired with Mr. WALKER, of Missouri, until further notice.

That is signed by both Mr. CLARK and myself. I left here before Mr. CLARK did, and his duty was to see that I was paired with an absent Republican, which he did. If I got back before he did, I was to protect him in his pair, which I have done by pairing him with another Democrat. I consider that I have discharged my duty to Mr. CLARK, and I have talked to several members on both sides of the House, who take the same view. It will be observed that this is not one of the pairs that are "not transferable."

The SPEAKER. It is a matter entirely for the gentleman's own decision.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HEMPHILL; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 129.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand tellers.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several MEMBERS. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Page 54, section 32, line 12, after the words "United States," insert the following words: "except section 1999 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 156, not voting 26; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

When the roll-call was concluded,
Mr. ROWELL moved to dispense with the recapitulation of the names.

Mr. SPRINGER objected.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought I heard the Clerk read among those who voted in the affirmative the names of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Candler]. Am I correct? The names of those gentlemen were both called on the second roll-call without any answer being made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Candler] voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. When his name was called?

The SPEAKER. On the second roll-call.

Mr. SPRINGER. How is it in regard to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is not recorded.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to vote. I was present when my name was called, but was listening to conversation of gentlemen near me and not to the roll-call. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Upon the statement of the gentleman, the Chair can not entertain his request.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now move to lay this bill on the table. The motion I made before was to lay the bill and pending amendments on the table. This is an entirely different proposition.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order; it has already been passed upon by the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the attention of the Chair to the Digest, page 413:

Where a motion has already been made and negatived to lay a bill on the table, and no change or alteration has been made in the bill, or no proceeding directly touching its merits has since taken place, the motion to lie on the table can not be repeated. But under the uniform practice the motion may be entertained at every new stage of the bill or proposition, and upon any proceeding having been had touching its merits.

The motion I made before was a motion to lay on the table the bill and pending amendments. That was negatived. Then the amendment which was pending was voted down; it is not a part of the proposition any longer. This is now an entirely new proposition—a motion to lay on the table the naked bill.

The SPEAKER. The question pending before the House is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make a motion to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules the motion out of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. From that decision I respectfully appeal.

Mr. ROWELL. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] moves to lay the appeal on the table.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GEAR and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 157, nays 147, not voting 24; as follows:

Wiley,

So the appeal from the decision of the Speaker was laid on the table.
The vote having been recapitulated,

Mr. WILKINSON said: Mr. Speaker, I was in my seat when my name was called and I voted "no." I did not hear my name read on the recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote is not recorded.

Mr. WILKINSON. I have already stated that fact; but I stated the additional fact that I was in my seat and when my name was called voted "no." I ask to have my vote recorded as it was given.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recorded as voting in the negative.

Mr. CARTER. I observe that on the recapitulation my name does not appear. I was in my place and voted "ay" on the first roll-call. I wish to have my vote so recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be so recorded.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to change my vote. I voted "no;" I desire now to vote "ay."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name will be again called.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SPRINGER; and he voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 157, the nays 147; and the appeal is laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point that this motion is necessarily dilatory, and that the Chair has no right to recognize it under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I take an appeal from that decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the first time in the history of this Government that a motion to reconsider has been declared dilatory and ruled out of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The next question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill. As many as are in favor—

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn. [The question was put.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. ROWELL. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 157, not voting 24; as follows:

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to move that the bill be recommitted to the committee from which it was reported, the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, etc.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be considered as having been read a third time.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; I object to that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let it be read in the usual way, by the title.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to change my vote. I voted "ay" and I wish to vote "no."

The Clerk called Mr. SPRINGER's name, and he voted "no." The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. Mr. SPRINGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to recommit the bill.

Mr. ROWELL. I move to lay that motion on the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that we take a recess until 8 o'clock. It is now a quarter to 6, and if we take a recess until 8 o'clock we can get our dinner.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 156, nays 149, not voting 23; as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The result was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I make the point of order that that is a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I see that the bill is engrossed. I want the engrossed copy read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need give himself no uneasiness. The rules of the House will be complied with.

Mr. ROGERS. We are glad of the assurance.

The engrossed bill was then read.

During the reading of the engrossed bill, Mr. BUCKALEW rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the reading of the engrossed bill be dispensed with.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. COWLES. The bill never has been read, and it ought to be read once.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will continue.

During the further reading of the bill the following occurred:

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand order in the House. I can not hear the Clerk.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk is reading so fast we can not follow him.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not hear.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may stand by the side of the Clerk as he reads.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think if the House would be in order we could hear the bill.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I think everybody can hear the bill who wants to hear the reading of it.

After the reading of section 2, the following occurred:

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the clause of that section from the word "petitioning" down to "residents" was stricken out when this bill was before the House, and it seems to be retained as a part of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that this is not the bill that has been considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

During the reading of section 6, the following occurred:

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. There is no quorum present while this important bill is being read. There should be a quorum here.

Mr. CANNON. There is no way to raise that point except upon a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the Chair shall rule upon my point of order.

Mr. MCKINLEY. How does the gentleman know there is no quorum present?

Mr. COWLES. I appeal from the decision which the Chair declines to make. [Laughter.]

During the reading of section 22:

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to the point of order that there is not a quorum present, and that therefore the bill is not being read in the presence of a quorum.

Mr. MCKINLEY. How do you know?

The Clerk continued reading.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I insist upon the point that no quorum is here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The reading of the engrossed bill can not be interrupted.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I want to know of the Speaker if it is in order to read the bill in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, there is a quorum here.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 155, nays 149, not voting 24; as follows:

YEAS—155.

So the bill was passed.

The vote was recapitulated.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 155, the nays 149, and the bill is passed. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Would a motion to adjourn now be in order?

ADJOURNMENT OVER FROM THURSDAY TILL MONDAY.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-morrow it be to meet on Monday next, at 12 o'clock m.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the titles be dispensed with, and that they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

A bill (S. 168) granting a pension to William Gardner;
 A bill (S. 448) granting a pension to Dobson Amick;
 A bill (S. 503) granting a pension to Ellen G. King;

A bill (H. R. 9048) to confirm the title to certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCOMAS. I now, pursuant to notice, move the adoption of the report of the committee of conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill which has been agreed to by the conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us adjourn, and do that to-morrow.

Mr. McCOMAS. It will take no time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the House adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McKINLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just passed may be reprinted. [Cries of "Regular order!" and "I object!"]

Mr. McCOMAS. This conference report can be adopted in a few moments.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, has not a motion to adjourn been made?

The SPEAKER. There has; but a conference report takes precedence over a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I raise the question of consideration on the report.

Mr. McCOMAS. I withdrew it upon the understanding that I should call it up after the vote on the bill which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that was the understanding on the part of the House—that the gentleman from Maryland should withdraw it, and that it should be taken up after the vote upon the bill which has just passed.

Mr. McMILLIN. So far as I am concerned I have no objection to it; but I do not want it to go into the RECORD that an agreement entered into in that way could bind the House and prevent its adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not mean to say that it was an agreement, but such an understanding existed.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move that the reading of the report of the committee of conference be dispensed with.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. The report, then, must be read.

Mr. McCOMAS. I hope the reading of the report will not be insisted upon. It has been debated in the Senate and, I understand, printed in the RECORD; it is agreed upon by the committee of conference unanimously, and therefore I ask that the report be not read. ["Cries of Regular order!"]

Mr. ENLOE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A parliamentary inquiry. Under the order of the House, when an adjournment is taken to-night, will it be until 12 o'clock to-morrow or until 11 o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ENLOE. I insist upon the motion to adjourn, and I say that the conference report can not take precedence.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a question of order. I ask the gentleman from Maryland if he will not ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will.

Mr. CANNON. And let the statement of the House conferees be read.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report, and that the statement of the House conferees be read.

Mr. GROUT. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, though I think this appropriation bill ought to be passed, as the conferees have agreed, yet as the House is very impatient to adjourn I will ask unanimous consent—

Mr. FITHIAN. I object.

Mr. McCREARY. Let the gentleman finish the statement of his request.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the report of the conferees be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITHIAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to add a word to what the gentleman has said. There is some legislation in this report relating to the District which it is of importance to understand.

Mr. McKINLEY. I beg the gentleman from Maryland to withdraw his report. We have been in session ten hours, and certainly there can be nothing pressing about this report since the extension of the appropriations.

Mr. McCOMAS. I asked that it be printed in the RECORD and go over.

Mr. McKINLEY. There certainly ought to be no objection to the report being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITHIAN. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the numbers of these amendments, because they are utterly unintelligible.

Mr. FITHIAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk again resumed the reading.

Mr. McCOMAS. Now, Mr. Speaker, in deference to the wishes of a great many gentlemen round me who are tired and almost exhausted from the length of to-day's session, I will withdraw the report and yield to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. McKINLEY. I renew my motion to adjourn.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. FITHIAN. Yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Thirty-eight gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays; not a sufficient number.

Mr. FITHIAN and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The other side.

The SPEAKER (after counting the other side). Eighty-eight gentlemen have arisen against the demand for the yeas and nays; not a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 98, nays 11, not voting 219; as follows:

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ANDREW, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of E. H. Ottiwell.

REPRINT OF A REPORT.

On motion of Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, House Report No. 1025, in relation to the purchase of Portage Lake and River Canal, etc., was ordered to be reprinted, the first print being exhausted.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. CUTCHEON:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 10th day of July, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Military Affairs upon the several calendars of the House in such order as they may be called up by said committee, not to interfere with appropriation bills, and this order shall be a continuing order from day to day until said committee shall have had one day for the consideration of its business;

to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. O'DONNELL:

Resolved, That July 21 and July 22 be set apart for the consideration of House bill 624, to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools;

to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas:

Resolved, That Rule XIV be amended by adding thereto the following: "8. When the Speaker is addressing the House or executing an order thereof or when a member who is entitled to the floor is addressing the House, he shall not be interrupted, except by his consent duly obtained through the Chair; and any statements or questions otherwise interjected into his remarks shall not be published in the Record, except by his permission. This rule shall apply to the proceedings of a Committee of the Whole;"

to the Committee on Rules.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. KETCHAM, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6449) to limit the hours of work of clerks and employés in first, second, and third class post-offices, reported, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 11236) to limit the hours of work of clerks and employés in first and second class post-offices; which was read twice, and, accompanied by a report (No. 2606), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, from the Committee on War Claims, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 11196) for the relief of William M. Henry, accompanied by a report (No. 2607)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DOLLIVER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported favorably the following bills; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

A bill (S. 1971) for the relief of William Clawson. (Report No. 2608.)

A bill (H. R. 10847) for the relief of Washington Galland. (Report No. 2609.)

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 3, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AGREEMENT WITH SAC AND FOX INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of section 14 of the act of March 2, 1889, I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, an agreement concluded between the commissioners appointed under that section, on behalf of the United States, commonly known as the Cherokee Commission, and the Sac and Fox Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, on the 12th day of June last.

The Sac and Fox Nation have a national council, and the negotiation was conducted with that body, which undoubtedly had competent authority to contract on behalf of the tribe for the sale of these lands. The letter of the Secretary of the Interior and the accompanying papers, which are submitted herewith, furnish all the information necessary to the consideration of the questions to be determined by Congress.

The only serious question presented is as to that article of the agreement which limits the distribution of the funds to be paid by the United States, under it, to the Sac and Fox Indians now in the Indian Territory. I very gravely doubt whether the remnant or band of this tribe now living in Iowa has any interest in these lands in the Indian Territory. The reservation there was apparently given in consideration of improvements upon the lands of the tribe in Kansas. The band now resident in Iowa, upon lands purchased by their own means, as I am advised, left the Kansas reservation many years before the date of this treaty, and it would seem could have had no equitable interest in the improvements on the Kansas lands, which must have been the result of the labors of that portion of the tribe living upon them. The right of the Iowa band to a participation in the proceeds of the sale of the Kansas reservation was explicitly reserved in the treaty, but it seems to me, upon a somewhat hasty examination of the treaty, that the reservation in the Indian Territory was intended only for the benefit of those who should go there to reside. The Secretary of the Interior has expressed a somewhat different view of the effect of this treaty, but if the facts are, as I understand, that the Iowa band did not contribute to the improvements which were the consideration for the reservation and did not accept the invitation to settle upon the reservation lands in the Indian Territory, I do not well see how they have either an equitable or legal claim to participate in the proceeds of the sale of those lands.

The whole matter is submitted for the consideration of Congress.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 2, 1890.

COMMUNICATION WITH CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message of the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, inclosing the recommendations of the International American Conference for the establishment of improved facilities for postal and cable communication between the United States and the several countries of Central and South America.

I can not too strongly urge upon Congress the necessity of giving this subject immediate and favorable consideration, and of making adequate appropriations to carry the recommendations into effect; and in this connection I beg leave to call attention to what was said on the subject in my annual message. The delegates of the seventeen neighboring Republics, who have so recently been assembled in Washington at the invitation of this Government, have expressed their wish and purpose to co-operate with the United States in the adoption of measures to improve the means of communication between the several Republics of America. They recognize the necessity of frequent, regular, and rapid steam-ship service, both for the purpose of maintaining friendly intercourse and for the convenience of commerce, and realize that without such facilities it is useless to attempt to extend the trade between their ports and ours.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, July 2, 1890.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for your information, a letter from the Secretary of State, inclosing a copy of a resolution passed by the International American Conference, with reference to the celebration of the fourth centennial of the discovery of America.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, July 2, 1890.

AGREEMENT WITH IOWA INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message of the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, as required by section 14 of the act of March 2, 1889, an agreement concluded on the 20th day of May last between the commissioners on behalf of the United States, commonly known as the Cherokee Commission, and the Iowa Indians residing in the Indian Territory.

A letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which is accompanied by communications from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Assistant Attorney-General, is also submitted.

These papers present a full and clear statement of the matters of fact and questions of law which Congress will need to consider in passing upon the question of the ratification of the agreement which is submitted for its consideration and such action as may be deemed proper.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 2, 1890.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in further response to a resolution of the 12th ultimo, a letter from the Chief of Engineers concerning the improvement of the harbor at Buffalo, N. Y.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PADDOCK presented resolutions of the Wyoming Farmers' Alliance, No. 1440, of Nebraska, favoring the passage by Congress of the so-called Butterworth option bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of Coldwater Grange, No. 137, Patrons of Husbandry, of Michigan, praying for the passage of a bill to prevent dealing in options on farm produce; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of citizens of Williamsport, Pa., praying for the passage of House bill 5978, prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquors from one State or Territory to another contrary to the laws thereof; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of Messrs. Shulman Brothers and other manufacturers, of Kansas City, Mo., remonstrating against the increase of duty on cigar wrappers made from Havana tobacco, proposed by the McKinley tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of citizens of the State of Colorado, praying for the establishment of a national park at Valley Forge; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of J. H. Hollander, of New York City, N. Y., praying for Congressional action in respect of his claim against Guatemala for injuries done him, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRILL presented a memorial of citizens of Orange County, Vermont, a memorial of citizens of Delaware County, New York, and a memorial of citizens of Portage County, Ohio, remonstrating against any increase of duty on tin-plate; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB presented a resolution of the Missouri Republican Club, of Kansas City, Mo., in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4074) to provide an American register for the bark Campanero, of Baltimore, Md., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4000) to provide an American register for the steamer Marmion, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 529) granting certain land to Miles City, Mont., for use as a public park, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2045) for the relief of Francisco V. De Coster, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2110) concerning rank and pay of soldiers who did duty as officers in the war of 1861, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2251) providing for the promotion, payment, and retirement of Capt. John A. Lynch, late assistant quartermaster, United States Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1335) for the relief of David A. Hawk, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1420) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Walter Sniffens, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5596) to discontinue the coinage of the three-dollar and one-dollar gold pieces and three-cent nickel piece, to report it without amendment. It is a very brief bill, and I think the Senate will be disposed to pass it upon simply its reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better go on the Calendar, so that we may get on with the bills before reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3895) to amend section 3510 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to provide for new designs of authorized devices of United States coins, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them adversely; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1399) to provide for the coinage of half-dimes, quarter-dollars, and dimes; and

A bill (S. 2206) to discontinue the coinage of the three-dollar and one-dollar gold pieces and the three-cent nickel piece.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate for an appropriation of $2,000 for a submarine cable between Forts Hamilton and Wadsworth, New York Harbor, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CARLISLE, June 26, for the enlargement and extension of the military post near Newport, Ky., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably; and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN (for Mr. HIGGINS), from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 125) for the relief of Reaney, Son & Archbold, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10122) granting a pension to Mary L. Radford, widow of William Radford, late rear-admiral, United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3446) granting a pension to Mary L. Radford, widow of William Radford, rear-admiral, United States Navy, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10445) to increase the pension of Evelyn W. Miles, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3106) appropriating $50,000 for improving the public road in Alexandria County, State of Virginia, connecting the Chain, Aqueduct, and Long Bridges, and running in front of the Arlington National Cemetery, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2496) to provide for the purchase of the grounds and buildings now occupied by the United States Fish Commission as a trout-breeding station at Northville, Mich., and for additional grounds adjacent thereto, and for the erection of buildings to be used in connection therewith, reported it without amendment, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no. We are filled up with business. Do not do that. Let us work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit to the Senator from Iowa whether we had not better meet on Saturday. The great body of the Senate will be here. I do not want to interfere, but we could just as well meet on Saturday. Many of the committees will be at work on that day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We could just as well work to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no special desire about the matter personally. If we meet on Saturday under the arrangement we go to the Calendar, which I think is not very important. I expect to be here to-morrow and on Saturday myself. If the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] desires to take up the tariff bill or if the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] desires to take up the river and harbor bill, I think we might sit here with profit on Saturday, but otherwise I do not see that we should make any great progress by having a session on that day.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that the tariff bill will be taken up on Monday next, if possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I knew that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to implore the Senator from Iowa to withdraw the motion altogether. Time is running on pretty fast, and we have our Calendar loaded, not merely with small matters which are important to the persons concerned, but with matters of general public interest. There are two or three bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary that are of real public importance, and we believe the Senate will agree with us in thinking so. There is one bill reported long ago from the Committee on Private Land Claims, which I shall hope, unless some appropriation bill stops it, I can get up this morning, but of course there is danger about that. That has been so long delayed, the subject has (although the Senate has, I think, three times, and I do not know but four, passed the bill, it has not come to be a law), that the President of the United States yesterday sent us a message urging action upon the subject.

Now, then, it does appear to me that we can not do greater honor to the Fourth of July and the birth of the Republic than to keep on working here just as hard as we can with the important public matters, of which there are so many pressing upon our attention; and so on the next day if need be, even setting aside the small and local matters to get on with the great public business. I hope my friend will withdraw his motion altogether.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I do not believe that there is a sensible citizen in the United States outside of this Chamber who would not say that it was an entirely reasonable and proper thing to adjourn until Monday. The weather is oppressive. Most of us, not all those who advocate continually sitting, but most of us, have been here very steadily, and two days' breath will not hurt anybody. We are likely to be here for some weeks anyhow; it is impossible to foresee when we shall get away, and I think the most sensible as well as the most profitable thing in the world we can do is to adjourn over until Monday, and take a rest, and half of us will not rest at that, because we have plenty of work.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to say that after the unfinished business is disposed of I shall ask the Senate at the earliest moment to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. PLUMB. There will be no quorum here on Saturday, nor after to-day, indeed, this week, and we know just how those things will result. The result will be that some things may go through by common consent, and some possibly that ought not to. When it comes to anything about which there is controversy the lack of a quorum will be disclosed, and those who stay here will have staid for no use.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to supplement what the Senator from Kansas has said by the statement that a day or two since in open discussion fixing the order of business it was stated that as a matter of course the body would adjourn over from to-day until Monday. I know myself that after that statement was made quite a number of Senators made their arrangements to leave the city. I think it extremely doubtful if we could have a quorum after that statement. I therefore think myself that we shall facilitate the public business by adjourning over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" have it. The "ayes" have it. The motion is agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 4183) for the relief of William Mefford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BATE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4184) for the relief of D. W. and Minna H. Glassie and Joseph C. Nash; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 4185) granting a pension to Susan E. Cunningham; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 4186) to extend and amend "An act to grant to the Fort Smith and El Paso Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 4187) to limit the right of entry under the pre-emption, timber-culture, desert-land, and homestead laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 4188) for the relief of Florence A. Brown, administratrix of the estate of John M. Brown, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 4189) for the relief of the heirs of Mark W. Izard, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the expenses of reporting and printing the hearings given by the Committee on Territories on Senate bills 658 for the admission of Idaho into the Union, 2446 and 3575 for the admission of New Mexico into the Union, and 3480 relating to the exercise of the elective franchise in the Territory of Utah, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PURCHASE OF MALTBY HOUSE.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the Maltby House, at the corner of New Jersey avenue and B street, for the use of the Senate.

MILITARY HOME MANUFACTURES.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate whether the manufacture of articles which come in competition with private enterprise is being carried on at any of the national military homes, and, if so, the reasons and authority for such.

PACIFIC RAILROAD INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether he has knowledge of the guaranty, actual or proposed, by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of the bonds or stock of any other corporation, more especially those of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and of the Denver and South Park Railroad Company, whether said Union Pacific Railroad Company has paid out of its surplus earnings or otherwise the indebtedness or any part thereof of said other companies, and, if so, whether such guaranty or such payment or both are in accordance with law and consistent with the obligations of said Union Pacific Railroad Company to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to its present consideration, but I think there had better be added a clause, "and that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate all information in possession of his Department on the subject," so as to have a sweeping clause.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to get at everything about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

Mr. BUTLER. An amendment might be offered to the resolution that the Secretary of the Interior be instructed to inquire why the Senate does not proceed to the consideration of the report made by the select committee upon all those subjects. I should like to have a little information on that point while we are seeking for information. The select committee spent a great deal of time and great labor in getting all the data and making up a report, but for some cause which I am unable to understand the Senate does not consider it. I do not know what the reason is. I suppose the caucus has acted upon it. That may be the reason.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The caucus has not acted upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please address the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. I was addressing the Chair, Mr. President, but not in a standing position, I admit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, addressing the Chair, I respond to the cross observation of the Senator from South Carolina—

Mr. BUTLER. "Cross observation?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. Cross observation.

Mr. BUTLER. Why, Mr. President, I am as amiable as a May morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, but when the Senator is most amiable he is generally the most cross.

Mr. BUTLER. I am surprised, Mr. President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Responding to that observation, I wish to say that to the best of my knowledge and belief no assemblage or other arrangement or discussion of Republicans has had any relation to or consideration of the subject to which the Senator refers. Speaking as one Republican now, and not for the rest of our gradually diminishing numbers, I wish to say that I think the trouble with the Republican caucuses has been, if we have had any, that they have not stood by in the Senate afterwards and endeavored to carry on the business of the Government in spite of endless talk on the other side and perhaps some considerable on this side, and endeavored to get on with the business.

Now, as regards this particular resolution, Mr. President, I wish to say that I should be glad to have it embrace—I will not stop now to propose it—a call on the Secretary of the Interior to know whether his Department is in possession of information and papers showing that at least one of these Government railway companies, as they are called, receiving Government aid, has ever since the passage of the act of Congress several years ago, called the Thurman act, again and again deliberately disobeyed the plain and positive injunctions and prohibitions of Congress in respect of incurring further obligations, making dividends under circumstances that the law forbade, and in spite of the penalties imposed by that act for doing those things. I should be glad to know all that, but I will not interrupt the resolution of the Senator from Kansas at this moment to propose that further inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust the Senator from Vermont will not consider that what I am about to say has in it anything that is cross or ill-natured, for nothing is further from my purpose. I would suggest to him that the information he seems so anxious to get he would get by the discussion of the report made by the chairman of that select committee, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

As I stated awhile ago, it was understood by that select committee that the report was to be called up and discussed and disposed of in some way or other. I have no special choice about it, but, having devoted a good deal of time to it, I thought it was proper that Congress should take some action in regard to it, and then all these questions which the Senator refers to could be considered and passed upon by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question can not very well be considered until we have the facts upon which we can address ourselves to the consideration of it, and so I say that if a discussion of the report of this select committee in respect of the settlement of the debt (as some people are audacious enough to call it) of these railroads to the United States comes on we should be in possession of some of the facts which might bear upon what ought to be done in respect of the operation. If it be true that, in spite of positive laws of Congress with penalties imposed, there is not and has not been force enough in the administration of the Government, either under Democratic or Republican auspices, to compel these companies to obey the law or to punish their officers who deliberately disobey it, then I do not know that there will be any use in passing any settlement bill at all, because it then depends upon the will of the companies whether the settlement shall go on.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it seems to me the question is not what is in this report, but the question is why it has not been considered. It has been intimated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that there was some sort of obstruction upon this side of the Chamber to the order of business of the Senate. If there has been, I have not seen any indication of it. Mr. President, it is very well known that the order of business is controlled by a caucus committee, of which the Senator from Vermont is either the chairman or the controlling member. I have been approached to know if there was any measure which I particularly desired to have considered by the Senate, as the order of business was about to be arranged.

The responsibility for delay in the consideration of this railroad report rests with that committee and with the majority of the Senate. It is very well known that the order of business in both Houses is not controlled by any open means. The direct-tax bill was passed through the Senate and it was represented to us that a great exigency existed for its passage. It was put through, and those of us who opposed it for reasons satisfactory to ourselves were absolutely taunted with obstructing a great measure, not only of justice, but of public expediency, which ought to pass then in order to become a law. We passed it months ago. It went to the House of Representatives and has never been heard of since.

Mr. BUTLER. What bill was that?

Mr. VEST. The direct-tax bill, involving eighteen or nineteen million dollars, which it was said to us was simply refunding to the States an amount of taxation which they had paid, and to which they were now entitled; and yet with that great exigency, that plea of justice, etc., the direct-tax bill is sleeping until after the election and will sleep. That is all of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed modification of the resolution will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add: And that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate all information in possession of his Department on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to accept that amendment. The question now is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether he has knowledge of the guaranty, actual or proposed, by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of the bonds or stock of any other corporation, more especially those of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and of the Denver and South Park Railroad Company, whether said Union Pacific Railroad Company has paid out of its surplus, earnings, or otherwise, the indebtedness, or any part thereof, of the said or other companies, and if so whether such guaranty or such payment or both are in accordance with law and consistent with the obligations of said Union Pacific Railroad Company to the United States; and that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate all information in possession of his Department on the subject.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN DEPREDAATION CLAIMS.

Mr. MOODY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 additional copies of Senate bill No. 3833, entitled "A bill to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations."

FLORENCE A. BROWN.

Mr. GIBSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4148) for the relief of Florence A. Brown, administratrix of the estate of John M. Brown, deceased, be referred to the Court of Claims, to be proceeded with in accordance with the fourteenth section of the act approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suit against the Government of the United States."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 9048) to confirm the title of certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. VEST. I ask that House bill 4570 may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4570) to authorize the Leavenworth and Platte County Bridge Company to substitute a pivot draw-bridge over the Missouri River in place of a ponton bridge, and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VEST, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. DOLPH were appointed.

UNCLAIMED LAND PATENTS.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed, upon the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], a bill (S. 3831) to provide for the delivery of land patents to their rightful owners, and for other purposes. Since that time I have received some letters bearing very materially upon the subject, and I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that I may present them with a very few remarks at this time, so that they may go into the RECORD when the bill goes to the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Arkansas will indulge me a moment, I will make a motion which will make what he has to say in order. The bill as passed yesterday contained a verbal error. In copying the amendment the clerk of the committee inserted the word "price," in place of "issue." It should read "any claim of error or fraud in the issue of the same," in place of "in the price of the same." I move to reconsider in order that that may be corrected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You must accompany it by a motion to recall the bill from the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLUMB. I have inquired and I find that it has not yet gone to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3831) to provide for the delivery of land patents to their rightful owners, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and also the vote by which it was passed will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, it will be remembered that the bill as passed authorized the delivery of patents, some 250,000 now on file in the General Land Office. In connection with that, it was shown by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], to use his own language, that some kind of collusion seemed to have existed between the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Bussey, and the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, at that time Acting Commissioner, Mr. Stone, and a law firm in this city by which an arrangement was made that this law firm expected to be able to make a large amount of money out of the people of the United States who were entitled to these patents and who had not received them.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in response to a resolution of the Senate, stated that he had granted permission to this law firm to go into his office and take the records and copy the names of parties and the numbers of the tracts of land for which patents had been issued that were lying there in the office. He stated that he and General Bussey gave them that permission.

Now, in connection with that, I ask to have read a letter which this law firm here in the city of Washington sent to the clerk of Columbia County, in the State of Arkansas, in regard to this matter. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

[H. Wheeler Combs, T. S. Constantine, Thomas H. McKee. Rooms 59 and 61 Atlantic Building, No. 930 F street, N. W.]

OFFICES OF H. W. COMBS & CO.,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1890.

SIR: The records of the General Land Office show that there are 634 original patents for various tracts of land in your county which have never been delivered to the rightful owners thereof.

We have compiled all the data necessary to perfect the title to these lands and would like to make a contract with you for the delivery of these original patents to the present owners of the land. Should you agree to enter into a contract with us, we will furnish you with the description and location of all lands in your county for which patents have not been delivered, together with all necessary blanks and instructions for making contracts with the owners of the land for the procurement and delivery to them of said patents. You can from the description thus furnished you ascertain, by reference to your local records, the names of the present owners of the various tracts and negotiate with them for the procurement of their original patent which will perfect their title, and avoid for them the danger of expensive litigation.

By reason of our thorough compilation of the data referred to, we will be able to procure and deliver these original patents to the rightful owners at a cost of $1.60 each. Of this sum we will allow you $1 each and permit you to retain the balance until we deliver the original patents to you.

No title to lands derived from the Government is perfect without the original patent, which should be recorded in the land records of the county in which the lands are located. You will derive a considerable additional revenue for recording said patents, and at the same time confer a benefit upon the citizens of your county by perfecting their title at a nominal cost.

If you are willing to act with us in this matter please sign the inclosed contract and return to us. If you can not act in the matter, kindly give us the name of a responsible attorney who will do so.

Very respectfully yours,

H. W. COMBS & CO.

Mr. BERRY. It will be seen from that letter—and I have another here which I desire to have read in connection with it—that these attorneys stated to this clerk of Columbia County, Arkansas, that if he would enter into an arrangement with them they would charge $4.60 and allow him $1 out of that sum, provided he would enter into a contract with them.

They also say to him "this is very important"—this is underscored—in order to avoid expensive litigation that these patents should be procured. In addition to that they say to him furthermore that it will be to the clerk's interest because he will thereby get the recording of a large number of these patents, and therefore put more money in his pocket; and in order to be especially accommodating to him they send a blank letter to him to be by him sent out to parties entitled to patents, and it having been shown by their letter that there were 634 original patents in that county—this is the blank letter [exhibiting]—he is expected to consent to it. I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

We furnish this blank:

DEAR SIR: From a careful search of the records of this office I find that the original patent to the land now owned by you and situated in — has never been procured or made of record here.

The title to lands derived from the Government is not perfect without the original patent, which should be of record in the county in which the land is situated.

Please call at my office at your earliest convenience, sign the necessary papers, and I will procure said patent for you. The entire cost will only be $4.60, which may save you very expensive litigation.

Let me urge you to attend to this at once.

Yours very truly,

Mr. BERRY. Now, Mr. President, I ask to have read a letter written by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his official capacity, and also one by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior in his official capacity to these lawyers in the city of Washington, which letters have been copied or lithographed and sent along with the letters I have just had read at the desk. I ask that they be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: You have the consent of the General Land Office in securing to present owners of lands the patents therefor, which have been from various causes retained in this office, instead of being delivered to them or their grantors. From inquiry carefully made, I believe your firm to be reputable and responsible, and I regard your enterprise as legitimate and laudable. I recommend your work as at once beneficial to the Government in relieving this office of such a burden, and at the same time rendering to owners of land a great service in the perfection of their titles.

Very truly,

W. M. STONE.

Assistant Commissioner General Land Office.

Messrs. H. W. COMBS, T. S. CONSTANTINE, and T. H. MCKEE.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. PADDOCK. What is the date of that?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It bears no date. The other letter sent up by the Senator from Arkansas will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., November 30, 1889.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter of November 29, with circulars inclosed, asking permission to refer to me as to your character and standing, and it gives me pleasure to say that you have my permission to so refer.

Very truly yours,

CYRUS BUSSEY.

Assistant Secretary.

Messrs. H. W. COMBS & Co., Washington, D. C.

Mr. BERRY. In order to show how this connection or collusion between the Department and these attorneys was worked, I ask to have read a telegram sent from Vandalia, Ill., and published in a Republican newspaper called the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, Mo., in regard to the way this firm were using the names of these officials.

The Secretary read as follows:

SWINDLING THE FARMERS. VANDALIA, ILL., April 10.

In this and adjoining counties unsuspecting farmers are being swindled by a gang of sharpers purporting to be Government land agents who have been sent out by the Department at Washington with a view of protecting the people by perfecting titles to their lands. The farmer is told that no patent deed was ever issued for the section on which his farm is located, and for a fee of $4.60 they agree to make it straight.

Mr. BERRY. Now, Mr. President, only a few words. Let us see what is the situation. In the first place we have the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office stating that permission was given to this law firm, and this one only, so far as the records appear, to go into the General Land Office and note the names of the parties and the numbers of the tracts of land for which 250,000 patents are now on file. We have in the next place the letter from this law firm written to the clerk of Columbia County, Arkansas, in which they propose to enter into a contract with him by which he is to charge $4.60 to each one of these parties who has a patent on file here, which he is entitled to receive for nothing from the Government, $1 to be retained by the clerk of the county, and the other $3.60 to be given to the attorneys here.

In connection with that, this same Commissioner of the General Land Office who authorized these parties, without any authority of law, to go there and take copies of these records, gave this law firm a letter in his official capacity stating that he had authority to make copies of these patents and that he believes it is legitimate. Added to that, we have also a letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior in which he says these are men of reputable character.

If this transaction can be defended, if there can be any explanation from any Senator on this floor or any excuse for this most scandalous conduct on the part of these officers, I shall be glad indeed to hear it. Four dollars and sixty cents, it is true, seems like a small amount to the farmers of the country, if you are only going to swindle them out of $4.60 each; but when you have before you the fact that there are 250,000 of these patents, and that $1.60 is to be charged for each of them, it amounts to $1,175,000 that this law firm through the aid and assistance of the Commissioner of the General Land Office will be permitted to wrench from the citizens of the United States without any authority of law.

I presume nothing can be done in relation to this transaction in this body save and except to call attention to it and let it go out on the records of the country that this Assistant Secretary of the Interior has admitted that he did this thing and he gives no excuse whatever for it. I do not mean to reflect on the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, Judge Groff, but I refer to the Assistant Commissioner who at that time was Acting Commissioner, Mr. Stone, and General Bussey, Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator yield to me just one moment?

Mr. BERRY. I yield.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state that the matter to which the Senator refers occurred before Judge Groff had come to be Commissioner of the General Land Office, or, at all events, before he had come to have any knowledge of the transaction.

Mr. BERRY. I so understand. This was before Judge Groff's appointment. He is in no way responsible for it, directly or indirectly. It was stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] yesterday that $25 was charged in these cases, but, out of consideration probably to certain sections of the country, in my region it seems the only demand is $1.60; and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] stated yesterday upon the floor that he had information that in one case they had demanded $25, and when the party had sent that sum and afterwards the patent did not come, they wrote to him that there was more difficulty than they anticipated and he must send $25 more.

That was the statement, but that is not all. One of this firm of lawyers, as I am informed, Mr. McKee, is an official of the other House of Congress, a superintendent or an employé of some sort in the document or record office. That is my information; and this lawyer thus speculating off the people is drawing a salary from the Government, and by the assistance of the Commissioner of the General Land Office he is enabled to gain special privileges in that Land Office whereby this blackmail may be levied upon the honest and innocent farmers of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know how this thing grew up, but I think it ought to be thoroughly understood that the delivery of these patents in no wise perfects the title of any man to his land. The Supreme Court of the United States decided years ago that the recording of a patent in the Land Office conveyed all the title, and the delivery of the patent was not essential at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a mere convenience to have it.

Mr. TELLER. It would be a convenience to have it, and therefore the committee recommended this bill because it would be a convenience to the land-owner and because it would put a stop to this attempted fraud upon the owners of these patents.

I think it ought to be publicly proclaimed, so that the people who have not got their patents may understand it, that it is not essential to the validity of their title that they have the patent. If they retain their original certificate, in all the Western States they can maintain an action of ejectment and defend any attacks upon their title upon that certificate alone, and if they desire to get the patents they can get the patents by applying to the Land Office without the expense of a single cent. But there is no necessity of any farmer who has a patent that he is entitled to paying any of these attorneys a single cent. They render no service whatever, and when they get his money they get it absolutely without consideration.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to say in connection with what the Senator from Colorado has stated that under the present administration of the Land Office, while the present Commissioner has been in charge of that office, the number of undelivered patents in the Department has been reduced, I think, something like 70,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, that number has been sent out to the people.

Mr. PADDOCK. Sent out to the people without expense to them.

Mr. TELLER. I did not mean to reflect upon anybody. I have no doubt this whole thing arises from a little inattention on the part of somebody. But before the present Commissioner came in, I understand there was not any attempt on the part of anybody connected with the office to commit any fraud, or permit any fraud to be tolerated.

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly; I am sure of this. As far as Assistant Commissioner Stone is concerned, I have no doubt his letter was altogether inadvertent, and that he did not realize how it might be misused or the extent of the apparent indiscretion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Colorado has said, I understand it has always been the rule and the custom that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on application for a patent and the return of the duplicate receipt, will send that patent gratuitously to the applicant.

Mr. PLUMB. It is to be said in addition, in that same connection, that if the party has not the duplicate he can make an affidavit that he is the owner of the land, and so on, and get his patent.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is, in the case of a duplicate, but in case the original enterer of the land has lost his duplicate or never transferred it to his vendee and it may have gone through twenty hands, the present owner desiring to secure the patent as a mere muniment of title so that he may have it in his possession or have it on the record, he not having the duplicate, he makes affidavit that the duplicate receipt has been lost or mislaid and is not in his possession, and that he is the owner of the land, and thereupon, if the original patent is in the office, it is sent to him gratuitously.

If the original patent, as happens in many cases, has been issued and sent to a local land office and there has been lost or mislaid, or some of the offices have been burned up—particularly one in Missouri, at Warsaw, where the office and the patents in it were burned up—all the owner of the land in those cases has to do is to make an affidavit that the original patent is not in his possession, or has been mislaid, and thereupon he gets what is called an exemplification, a copy or a transcript of the original patent, and for that he only pays $1.60. So there is no occasion whatever for the intervention of these attorneys—none in the world—and it is a mere speculative blackmailing scheme.

Mr. PLUMB. The extraordinary character of this transaction will more fully appear when we consider that it is the rule of the Departments of the Government never to furnish information to private parties which can by any possibility be made the foundation of a claim on the part of those persons or of any other person against the Government. The Government therefore scrupulously withholds its own files from inspection so far as that inspection may disclose the existence of a claim against itself, and this does, I have no doubt, a great deal of injustice to claimants who believe they have the right to inspect papers to establish claims which otherwise they can not do.

At all events that has been the policy from the beginning in all the Departments, as I understand. It prevails in all the Departments; and if now in this Department the files were thrown open to private inspection, not for the purpose of making a claim against the Government, but for the purpose of enabling speculators (I do not mean to use the term in any improper sense, but still speculators in the proper sense) to make claims against the very person to whom the Government is under the deepest obligation to deliver a patent, to do the very work for which these attorneys are now getting pay of course it was done without any intention of doing wrong; there is no doubt about that; but it certainly is one of the most extraordinary cases—I will not say of maladministration, but of loose administration—that has ever come to my knowledge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend, in line 16, after the words "fraud in the," by striking out "price" and inserting "issue."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16 it is proposed to strike out the word "price" and insert "issue;" so as to read:

Provided, That this direction shall not apply to patents withheld from delivery on account of any claim of error or fraud in the issue of the same or the entry upon which it is based.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND COURT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar number 1018, being Senate bill 1042, the bill referred to in the message of the President of the United States submitted yesterday, to meet Mexican private land claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1042) to establish a United States land court, and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont if he will not do me the courtesy of yielding for an executive session for a few minutes. The Senator from Connecticut is under the necessity of leaving about 3 o'clock and his presence would be necessary. If the Senator would be willing to give way for not exceeding ten minutes, I should be greatly obliged to him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very sorry, but I must insist upon going on with this bill as long as we can. We can have an executive session at the usual time.

Mr. BLAIR. The difficulty about that is (though it would be quite satisfactory to me) that the Senator from Connecticut will be obliged to leave before that time comes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This matter will be done before 3 o'clock.

Mr. BLAIR. I will not press the suggestion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion for an executive session is in order, if the Senator desires to make it.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to press it against the convenience of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary read the amendments and that we consider them as we go on. It will save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The first amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims was, in section 1, to strike out the following words from line 3 to line 17:

That there be established a court, to be called the United States land court, to consist of a chief-justice and two associate justices, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and to hold their offices during good behavior. Such court shall exercise jurisdiction in the settlement of private land claims according to the provisions of this act, and such other jurisdiction as Congress may from time to time prescribe. The chief-justice and the associate justices shall each receive a compensation of $5,000 per year, payable monthly from the Treasury of the United States, and they shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to discharge faithfully the duties of their office.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That there shall be, and hereby is, established a court to be called the court of private land claims, to consist of a chief-justice and four associate justices, who shall be when appointed citizens and residents of some of the States of the United States, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to hold their offices for the term expiring on the 31st day of December, A. D. 1894. Said court shall have and exercise jurisdiction in the hearing and decision of private land claims according to the provisions of this act. The chief-justice and associate justices shall each receive a compensation of $5,000 per year, payable monthly, and their necessary traveling and personal expenses while engaged in the performance of their duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 31, before the word "clerk" to strike out "chief;" and in line 33, after the word "clerk," to strike out "where regular terms of the court are held;" so as to read:

The said court shall appoint a clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year, who shall attend all the sessions of the court, and a deputy clerk at a salary of $800 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 34 in the printed bill it should read "eighteen." It reads "eight" in my print.

The SECRETARY. "At a salary of $800 a year."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That should be eighteen.

The SECRETARY. In line 31 it is proposed to strike out "eight" and to insert "eighteen;" so as to read:

At a salary of $1,800 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the following words from line 35 to line 38 of section 1: "But when the court is held in the city of Washington, the Secretary of the Interior shall, upon the request of the court, detail such clerical force as may be necessary in addition to the chief clerk;" in line 40, after the word "court," to insert "and perform the duties required of him by the court;" in line 43, after the word "the," to strike out "purposes" and insert "provisions;" in line 44, after the word "act," to strike out "to adopt a seal and to alter same at pleasure;" in line 45, after the word "process," to strike out "provided for by law and;" in line 48, before the word "of," to insert the words "of title thirteen;" in line 51, after the word "for," to strike out "the" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "district," to insert "or Territory;" and in line 55, after the word "hold," to strike out:

A term annually at the capitals of the State of Colorado and of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, at such times as shall be fixed by the rules of the court, and such extra and special terms at such times and places as may from time to time be ordered. Terms may also be held at any time in the city of Washington, whenever in the opinion of the court the convenience of business shall require. The court shall, within sixty days after the appointment of its members, meet in the city of Washington for the purpose of organization. Immediately upon the organization of the court, notice shall be given, thirty days in advance of the first term of court to be held thereafter, of the order of the court fixing the time of holding the same, by publication in one newspaper at each place where such court is to be held, and thereafter a notice of thirty days shall be given of any special or extra term by publication in a newspaper published where such term is to be held. The Secretary of the Interior shall furnish suitable rooms for the use of said court in the Interior Department while sitting in Washington. The terms shall be so arranged as to secure continuous sittings, with vacations not to exceed sixty days in any one year.

So as to read:

The court shall also appoint a stenographer, at a salary of $1,500 a year, who shall attend all the sessions of the court, and perform the duties required of him by the court. The said court shall have power to adopt all necessary rules and regulations for the transaction of its business and to carry out the provisions of this act; to issue any process necessary to the transaction of the business of said court, and to issue commissions to take depositions as provided in chapter 17 of Title XIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States. Each of said justices shall have power to administer oaths and affirmations. It shall be the duty of the United States marshal for any district or Territory in which the court is held to serve any process of the said court placed in his hands for that purpose, and to attend the court in person or by deputy when so directed by the court. The court shall hold such sessions in the States and Territories mentioned in this act as shall be needful for the purposes thereof, and shall give notice of the times and places of the holding of such sessions by publication in both the English and Spanish languages, in one newspaper published at the capital of such State or Territory, once a week for two successive weeks, the last of which publications shall be not less than thirty days next preceding the times of the holding of such sessions, but such sessions may be adjourned from time to time without such publication.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Vermont the propriety of amending that amendment by inserting something like this: After the word "thereof" in line 77, "having due regard for the convenience of the claimants." In the Territory of New Mexico at least there are a great many small claimants to small tracts of land the probable value of which is not more than say from $100 to $200. They are required to go a long distance, say to Santa Fé, which would be one of the proper places for the holding of the court, which would be a great injustice to them, and that would still leave the court of course with the right to exercise proper discretion in regard to that, but it seems to me a direction of that kind in the statute would be useful.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to accomplishing the same thing by inserting after the word "needful" the words "and convenient."

Mr. PLUMB. The question as to whose convenience would still be an open one. It ought to be, not the convenience of the court, but of the claimants; that is to say, not alone of the court, but of course of both the court and the claimants. But as the Senator will remember that, as was disclosed in debate here some years ago, there was a multitude of small claimants in some of the distant valleys to whom the expense of going to some other place would amount to the confiscation of their holdings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the Senator's amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest "having due regard for the convenience of claimants," in line 77 of section 1.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to the words "having due regard to the convenience of claimants."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 77, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert, "having due regard to the convenience of claimants."

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I refer to the striking out of the part of the original bill requiring the terms of the court to be held in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and in the State of Colorado. The litigation is to go on in those Territories and in that State, and the litigation arises out of the large claims made under grants from the Mexican Government or under pretended grants of the Mexican Government, many of them that are of a very nebulous sort of character, and they are in the hands, as a general rule, of men who are speculators and who have large capital at their command and are able to take witnesses and take counsel and go where they please. The settlers, on the contrary, are not generally persons able to go to great expense. The proposition to deny them the right to have their cases tried in their own States and Territories seems to be most extraordinary, considering the character of the litigation that is likely to come under the influence of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will pardon me, he will see by looking at this bill that we have provided by this change for a different scheme of courts; instead of a perpetual one at Washington or elsewhere, a Territorial or State court. They can hold their sessions nowhere else, and the specific language that we have adopted commands them to hold sessions in the States and Territories mentioned in the act; that is, where the claims are.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not read the bill through.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree entirely with the views of my friend, and we have conformed to them in every particular.

Mr. MORGAN. I would inquire whether the State of California is included under this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The State of California does not come under it. All the land titles there have been settled long ago under a special commission.

Mr. MORGAN. They are not all settled.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are all settled so far as the duty of the United States under the treaty with Mexico is concerned and all other duties, except special cases that may be brought to the attention of Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. It has come to my knowledge in the course of my duty here that a good many controversies are still pending and coming up constantly in regard to Spanish land grants and land titles in the State of California. So far as this court has jurisdiction, or we can give it jurisdiction, it seems to me that the State of California ought to receive the benefits of it just like any other State.

I do not think it can be maintained that litigation has ended or that the land titles in California have been all passed upon which arose out of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, or the Gadsden treaty. I therefore think that the bill would be stronger and better and it would do no harm to include the State of California.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is entirely inadmissible, and I think the whole committee agrees with me that the proposition to reopen the California matters by a general act is entirely inadmissible.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not speaking of reopening anything that has been finally and conclusively adjudicated. That we ought not to do, and can not do. The final judgment of any court of competent jurisdiction is beyond the reach of the power of Congress, as I understand. If not constitutionally so, at least it ought to be so according to the rule of general and universal public practice. But there are still controversies in the State of California which ought to come up, and when we are organizing a court for the purpose of hearing the complaints of our citizens in regard to rights that they have been denied under the Mexican treaty, it looks invidious and unnecessary that we should exclude the State of California.

Mr. REAGAN. My attention has been called by the Senator from Vermont to the change of the wording, and I desire to allude to that before we pass from it, because it seems to me still that with the language employed it is not correct; that is:

The court shall hold such sessions in the States and Territories mentioned in this act as shall be needful for the purposes thereof.

This bill provides for a permanent court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it does not; we struck all that out.

Mr. REAGAN. Has that been struck out?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the limit of its existence?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is, in fact, a commission to last for four years, or till 1894. We give it the name of court to give it a judicial character, and it is to sit in those States and Territories where these claims are and nowhere else, to carry on its business.

Mr. REAGAN. And then the bill goes on to say:

And shall give notice of the times and places of the holding of such sessions by publication in both the English and Spanish languages, in one newspaper published at the capital of such State or Territory, once a week for two successive weeks, the last of which publications shall be not less than thirty days next preceding the times of the holding of such sessions, but such sessions may be adjourned from time to time without such publication.

The State of Colorado and these two Territories of New Mexico and Arizona are of large territorial extent, and these publications may reach many people, but certainly not many of them will reach the people generally in this State and these Territories; and the court is to be made the judge of when it will hold sessions and give notice, instead of specifying a time by law when the sessions of the court shall be held so that all the people interested may know the time for them to attend and appear to take care of their rights. I have had some experience in connection with litigation as to grants of the character which are brought forward in these Territories. I know the resorts which will be made to defeat the occupants of the soil, many of whom have doubtless lived there and reared families upon the land, and to oust them.

I would have courts like these, involving the homes of the people, made so that there should be no chance for them to be misled, or entrapped, or deceived as to the time when the court should be held and their rights litigated; and it seems to me the language of the bill ought to be so changed as to fix the times when sessions of the court shall be held and the places where they are to be held.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That it is impracticable to do without defeating in point of time the real interests of these settlers who are appealing to us and have been for years (and we have acted upon their appeals, I believe, three times, if not four, in the Senate by passing the substance of this bill after full discussion). In this respect of notice we have done all that seems proper. I will say to my friend as to the California land commission case, on the principle of which the bill is framed, only that in favor of the settler and occupant it is tied up as against the Mexican claimant much stronger than the California act was—that in the whole time I have been in Congress and upon the Committee on Private Land Claims I have never heard of more than one instance in the State of California where a claimant came forward and said that he had missed his opportunity because he did not know about the sittings of the commission. There was one instance in the whole State of that kind.

Now, to fix in the bill the times and places of hearing would be to put them into a law that these people might never see and to require that the attendance of these people here and there and in the other place at fixed times, when if you give this commission this public discretion and duty of giving notice their work can be adjusted from place to place and time to time to the very ends that my friend has in view. The greatest number of these claimants, in fact almost all the settlers and all the people who claim under these grants, are in the two Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

We also take in the States of Colorado and Nevada on account of the fact that they were embraced within the area covered by the treaty, but there are almost no cases and no claims in those States, and these occupants of the soil in these two Territories have had their representatives here over and over again, at this very session, understanding all about it, and appealing to us, not in vain, to adjust the phraseology for small claims and descents to suit their just interests. Therefore, there will be nobody left out on account of ignorance of the existence of this law and the sitting of this commission, I am sure.

Mr. REAGAN. I am well aware that the representatives of these large claimants have been pressing upon Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the representatives of the settlers.

Mr. REAGAN. That is news to me, because I know from having seen them that many of them protest against such a course, and I do not understand why it is that the courts there in existence, with judges selected for the purpose, can not try these cases at a regular term in the regular way.

There may be reasons why it is urged that there should be a special commission; but when that special commission is provided, there will be scattered claimants through the country who will never know anything about who are to be appointed as commissioners or judges; but the men who represent the large claims will very certainly know who are to be recommended and who are to be appointed, and they will conveniently concentrate their interest perhaps, not by going to the President and letting him know that they are interested, for they would hardly dare do that with any President, but their agencies convenient to them will bring their concentrated interests to bear, and I have no doubt if this court is to be created that the judges will be appointed in the interest of the large claimants in that way, and the ends of justice instead of being promoted by this bill will be defeated.

So I do not understand why it is that when we have courts there or competent jurisdiction, with judges who have been selected because of their supposed ability to attend to matters of this kind, we should appoint another court and incur the additional expense of that court for the same purpose.

Mr. RANSOM. May I interrupt the Senator from Texas for one moment?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. RANSOM. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], if I may be permitted to say so, for years entertained the same opinion in reference to the Territorial courts that the Senator from Texas has just announced, but an investigation of the matter heretofore, repeated conferences with representatives from New Mexico, the expressions of the press of the Territory, and every source of information that the committee could possibly secure upon that subject, satisfied the committee, and finally it was so strong and conclusive that it satisfied the Senator from Vermont that a special court was necessary for the purpose of adjudicating these titles.

In reference to the exception the Senator from Texas takes to the bill on the ground that claimants may not have proper notice of the times and places of holding the court, and in that way they may lose their rights, I have no right to speak for the committee; but I know I am not going beyond what is proper in saying that the committee will accept any amendment upon that subject which the Senator from Texas thinks is right, because there is but one purpose in the world, and that is to settle all of these titles in a fair way. If the Senator from Texas prefers the form of the first bill to which an amendment has been made, which amendment was put there after great consideration in the committee, and after every argument had been made that the Senator from Texas has now made, and after full conference with most persons interested in this matter—I mean as public men—if he prefers the first part of the amendment, and putting the last part as a still further supplement to it, I for one shall have no objection, but I think the whole matter is covered fully by the amendments of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, referring to the question about the desire of the people there for this special court, I desire to repeat that I have known for several years that the large claimants, the men who claim the large Spanish grants, have been urging and pressing for some special commission or special court. I know that, and I know, too, from some association with the people themselves that they do not ask for such a special court, and that they fear such a court because they believe that when it is constituted it will be constituted by influences far removed from them and against their interest.

Mr. President, it is no small matter when we consider the number of these claims and the vast extent of territory which they cover, and the number of people who live upon the land that is thus claimed, many of them having made their homes, made their orchards, made their farms, and reared their families upon them, and whose possessions are endangered now by the existence of these claims. I can not give the amount of the claims, but their aggregate is enormous. When the extent of the claims is known, when the number of people involved with their homes and their all is brought to view, it seems to me that we should proceed very cautiously in constituting a court far removed from them, and to be constituted undoubtedly, in my opinion, by influences outside of their wishes, because, as I said, when this court is provided for and when it is to be appointed, the President, of course, will consult such sources of information as he can get as to the appointment of such a commission.

With the present President or any President I have ever known I have no doubt the desire will be to appoint an honest court; but he can not know what to do except through the information which he receives, and that information can not come from the body of the people there whose homes are endangered, because there can be no concentration, no unity of purpose, and because the great body of them would not know whom to recommend for judges; but these claimants, shrewd, active men, with capital and skill in the management of such affairs, will find avenues through which to reach the President with plausible stories and secure the appointment of men who will carry out their purpose and enrich the few by sacrificing the homes of the many.

When the time comes to vote on this bill I trust the whole bill will be defeated.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it is not true that the committee have been urged by land-claim agents to form this court or that they have consulted any land agents about it. There is a large amount of land claims in New Mexico and some in Arizona which have remained unsettled for over forty years, more than a generation, and it is necessary to have a tribunal in which they can be disposed of.

Through the Land Department and finally by acts of Congress about one-third of these claims, I think, have been confirmed by special acts of Congress. That worked so badly and such enormous grants were got through, which were alleged to be illegal, that Congress became cautious and ceased to legislate to confirm the grants, and for the last fifteen years there has been an effort to pass a bill whereby the claims could be submitted to a competent tribunal for determination. The tribunal provided for in this bill consists of three judges, with the other necessary officers and machinery to attend to this business.

Those who are familiar with the local courts in the Territories know very well that they are not organized in such a way that they can possibly try these cases. Here is a judge of a district and probably in his district there is a large amount of these land claims all about him. He has not the machinery nor the time from his ordinary business to investigate these cases, and they require special investigation. A judge must stop his other business, for he can not conduct the ordinary business of the district court and properly attend to this duty.

Then you have an appeal from each one of your district courts to the supreme court of the Territory. That supreme court is composed of three men.

Mr. PLATT. Four.

Mr. STEWART. Three or four men, and each one is anxious to affirm the decision he has rendered in the court below. We have found in the ordinary administration of justice that it was almost impossible to have a proper decision rendered in these courts in consequence of the judges going up as partisans. The judges almost necessarily become partisans. Here you will have these immense cases, and you will have each one of the judges trying some of them. They get together, and it becomes a sort of partisan court.

In the first place, there is not the machinery in the way of translators and otherwise to try one of these cases properly in the district courts. The district courts separately can not get the archives which are necessary in the examination of these cases. Then you have an appeal to the supreme court of the Territory, and that amounts to very little, because the appeals come up from the different districts, and the judges will make some arrangement among themselves. Then it is thrown upon the Supreme Court of the United States, and with the present machinery the cases will necessarily come to the Supreme Court of the United States without any original investigation, without any machinery, or without the time to make the necessary original investigation.

There will be any number of fraudulent papers presented, and it requires time and ability and independence to investigate these fraudulent claims. The district courts in the Territories can not do it; they are not organized to do it, and they will not accomplish it. They will just decide a case and let it go to the supreme court of the Territory, and you will get a big record in the Supreme Court of the United States without any original investigation at all.

If these cases are to be settled they must be settled by a tribunal organized for that purpose, which shall be independent of local influence and which shall have the learning and ability necessary and the time, and then the cases can be tried at once and the original documents can be examined, and it can be ascertained whether they are fraudulent or not. The Supreme Court of the United States can not examine whether they are fraudulent. They are too bulky, and it is impossible for it to be done.

I think any person, who is desirous of having a fair investigation of these cases and having none confirmed which are not legitimate and genuine, will be willing that this tribunal shall be organized, and those most familiar with the Territorial courts well know that they are inadequate to this undertaking, and if these titles are ever to be settled there must be a court that is competent.

The implication that three honest men will not be appointed by the President, I think, is unjust. I do not think the Senator from Texas desires to convey the implication that monopolists will secure the appointment of these judges, that they will not be disinterested men taken away from the vicinity, who will not be influenced by any local connection whatever, and that the President will not appoint independent judges and send them there for this special purpose. The implication that that will not be done, it seems to me, is entirely unwarranted.

If those who have an honest purpose for the settlement of these cases will examine this bill carefully and see how it is guarded and see the machinery prepared, they will come to the conclusion that it is the thing to do. This is a scheme which seems to me best suited to accomplish an honest purpose. If there is a better one, I should like to see it suggested. Certainly, the local courts are inadequate and do not furnish better machinery for the purpose.

I am familiar with the courts in the Territories, and I am satisfied that if you enjoin upon them the duties of settling these cases you will not have them settled at all, but you will have scandals arising on account of their action. If you want to avoid scandals and to have an honest investigation, you must appoint a tribunal strong enough to accomplish that end.

The President appoints judges in the Territories, but for this important duty he will be more particular in his selections than for any other after his attention is called to it, and any President must understand the grave responsibility of appointing judges to dispose of these titles. No President will appoint any one to such a place who is not entirely above suspicion. We never had a President who would do that or who would be influenced by any lobby or any improper motive in such a selection.

Then the cases may be retried in the Supreme Court of the United States, but that I do not regard as so important, because the records will be so voluminous that there can be no proper retrial in the Supreme Court, although the Supreme Court in California cases devoted itself to investigating vast records, which involved immense labor, and I think generally the court did exactly right. But, still, the labor of that court is accumulating so rapidly that it can not be supposed that it would be possible for it to make the original investigations. We must have a special tribunal to do that or it will never be done. Here are piles of papers, volumes of them, many of them fraudulent. The testimony must be examined by experts and the court must take its time. The Supreme Court can not do that service, and the question is, whether you will have a tribunal that will once do that service and settle it forever, or whether you will let it go on haphazard and never have it settled, or whether you will put it in incompetent hands and have it carelessly or dishonestly done.

This bill, it seems to me, is well calculated to accomplish the object which every honest man must have in view in the settlement of these cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLAIE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Has the bill been read through?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the amendments are being acted on as the bill is read.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "attorney," to insert, "who shall when appointed be a resident and citizen of some State of the United States;" in line 7, after the word "monthly," to strike out "out of the Treasury of the United States, and shall, before entering upon his duties, take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and faithfully perform the duties of his office" and insert "and his necessary traveling and personal expenses while engaged in the discharge of his duties;" in line 13, after the word "person," to insert "who shall be when appointed a citizen and resident of some State of the United States;" in line 20, after the word "monthly," to strike out "from the Treasury of the United States, and shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully perform the duties of his office," and insert "and his necessary traveling and personal expenses while engaged in the discharge of his duties;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That there shall also be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a competent attorney, who shall when appointed be a resident and citizen of some State of the United States, to represent the United States in said court. Such attorney shall receive a compensation of $3,500 per year, payable monthly, and his necessary traveling and personal expenses while engaged in the discharge of his duties. And there shall be appointed by the said court a person who shall be when appointed a citizen and resident of some State of the United States, skilled in the Spanish and English languages, to act as interpreter and translator in said court, to attend all the sessions thereof, and to perform such other service as may be required of him by the court. Such person shall be entitled to a compensation of $1,500 per year, payable monthly, and his necessary traveling and personal expenses while engaged in the discharge of his duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, section 3, line 2, after the word "notices," to insert "thereof, and of the time and place of the first session thereof;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That immediately upon the organization of said court the clerk shall cause notices thereof, and of the time and place of the first session thereof, to be published for a period of ninety days in one newspaper at the city of Washington and in one published at the capital of the State of Colorado and of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. Such notices shall be published in both the Spanish and English languages and shall contain the substance of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that in line 5, in respect of the first publication of the notice of the organization of the court, the words "including the State of Nevada" are omitted. In line 5, after the word "Colorado," I move to insert "and one at the capital of the State of Nevada."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire whether the text of the bill is being read for the purpose of being now amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; we are only going through the committee amendments, the bill to be open to amendment afterwards.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims was, in section 4, line 4, by fore the word "records," to strike out "the" and insert "any;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States, the surveyors-general of such Territories and States, or the keeper of any public records who may have possession of any records and papers relating to any land grants or claims for land within said States and Territories in relation to which any petition shall be brought under this act, on the application of any person interested or by the attorney of the United States, to safely transmit such records and papers to said court or to attend in person or by deputy any session thereof when required by said court, and produce such records and papers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 4, before the word "claims," to strike out "all" and insert "any;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the testimony which has been heretofore lawfully and regularly received by the surveyor-general of the proper Territory or State or by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon any claims presented to them, respectively, shall be admitted in evidence in all trials under this act when the person testifying is dead, so far as the subject-matter thereof is competent evidence; and the court shall give it such weight as, in its judgment, under all the circumstances, it ought to have.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 39, before the word "provided," to strike out "hereinafter" and insert "in this act;" so as to read:

And the said court is hereby authorized and required to take and exercise jurisdiction of all cases or claims presented by petition in conformity with the provisions of this act, and to hear and determine the same, as in this act provided, on the petition and proofs in case no answer or answers be filed after due notice, or on the petition and the answer or answers of any person or persons interested in preventing any claim from being established, and the answer of the attorney for the United States where he may have filed an answer, and such testimony and proofs as may be taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 7 the following:

SEC. 7. That the clerk of the court in which such petition may be filed shall, and he is hereby directed, when any petition or claim is filed under the provisions of this act, before any proceedings thereon, subject to the direction of a judge, to require reasonable security for all costs and charges which may accrue thereon in prosecuting the same to a final decree; and the district attorney, clerk, marshal, and witnesses shall severally be allowed such fees for their services and attendance as may be allowed by law for like services and attendance in the United States courts for the proper State or Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 3, before the words "of the courts," to strike out "rules" and insert "practice;" in line 5, after the word "oath," to insert "except that as far as practicable testimony shall be taken in court or before one of the justices thereof;" in line 10, before the word "relative," to strike out "said case" and insert "cases;" and in line 11, after the words "boundaries of," to strike out "said claim" and insert "their respective claims;" so as to read:

SEC. 8. That all proceedings subsequent to the filing of said petition shall be conducted as near as may be according to the practice of the courts of equity of the United States, except that the answer of the attorney of the United States shall not be required to be verified by his oath except that as far as practicable testimony shall be taken in court or before one of the justices thereof; and no continuance shall be granted unless for good cause shown; and the said court shall have full power and authority to hear and determine all questions arising in cases relative to the title of the claimants, the extent, locality, and boundaries of their respective claims, or other matters connected therewith fit and proper to be heard and determined, and by a final decree to settle and determine the question of the validity of the title and the boundaries of the grant or claim presented for adjudication according to the law of nations, the stipulations of the treaty concluded between the United States and the Republic of Mexico at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo on the 2d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1848.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 6, after the word "within," to strike out "one year" and insert "six months;" so as to read:

SEC. 9. That the party against whom the court shall in any such case decide, the United States, in case of the confirmation of a claim, and the claimant, in case of the rejection of a claim, in whole or in part, shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, such appeal to be taken within six months from date of such decision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the opinion of the Senator from Vermont about the propriety of the provision requiring the Supreme Court to retry the issue of fact as well as of law, and take additional testimony, and so on. I ask him whether he thinks, on the whole, that is consistent with the theory upon which the bill proceeds, that we owe something to these claimants in the way of at least settling their claims within a reasonable time. If that should happen, the cases would be pending, in all probability, for many years, and in some cases, perhaps, it would amount to a denial of justice. But in addition to that, it seems to me to be a little extraordinary that in this class of cases, and in none other, except one, that I know of, that is required. The Senator from Vermont, it seems to me, must be proceeding on the theory that the court which the bill provides for is quite unworthy of trust.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am glad the Senator from Kansas has called attention to the subject, because in the opinion of the committee, which has continued with the changing members of the committee now for six or eight or ten years when the matter has been again and again reported upon, it has been thought to be extremely desirable for the safety of the occupants of these lands that when any case on appeal should get to the Supreme Court of the United States it should be within its duty, if it thought necessary, under such regulations as it would make—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will please suspend a moment. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived. The unfinished business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3738) to place the American merchant marine, engaged in the foreign trade, upon an equality with that of other nations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my friend from Maine to allow the unfinished business to be laid aside informally to go on with this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to the Senator from Vermont proceeding with his remarks, but I call for the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that the Senator from Alabama demands the regular order, and objects to the unfinished business being laid aside informally, and the Senator from Maine in charge of the bill that was discussed yesterday is unwilling that I shall make a motion to displace it even temporarily, as I understand him; and so for the time being I drop the business, as I must.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill which has been under consideration, to strike out all of section 14 except the first three lines and insert what I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. RANSOM. And printed?

Mr. PLUMB. I will also have it printed. I ask to have it read now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The Secretary read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the court to report all the facts in the case to Congress for its action.

Mr. PLUMB. I propose to substitute for all the provision for scrip simply a requirement that the court shall report to Congress these cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be printed. The regular order is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I address myself to the shipping bill just now, as the regular order has been called for.

I do not think this shipping bill goes as far as—

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have the floor on the shipping bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, I beg pardon. Then I ask my friend to yield to me for a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. VEST. I should prefer to go on with what I have to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only ask for three minutes, and I will explain why. The observation that has been made about an appeal to the Supreme Court ought to be answered in the RECORD, so that the two things will stand together. I only ask for three minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes; I yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only wish to say, because I think it right in this connection, and not to take three minutes of the Senator's time, that that plan had been considered for years, and in view of what took place in the California affairs, not from any fault of the commissioners, who were deceived and made mistakes, but in administrative faults of district attorneys and Attorneys-General sometimes, it was found in the Supreme Court, when the cases got here, that they were tied up as they are in ordinary cases to the record, just as it was below, and they could not do anything to correct a mistake or a fraud that had been developed while the case was coming up. Therefore, we thought that the safety of the United States and these settlers demanded that the Supreme Court should be the supreme master of the whole situation, as well of fact as of law, when any case should get here.

Mr. COCKRELL. How is the testimony to be taken? How will the Supreme Court get the evidence in these cases?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just according to their discretion, under such regulations as they may make. They are to have their hands free to find out the truth if they think they require it. That is all I wished to say. I thank the Senator from Missouri very much.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3738) to place the American merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade upon an equality with that of other nations.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I shall not proceed with my remarks before the Senate for the purpose simply of expressing personal views as to subsidies. Since I have been a member of the Senate my opinions have been very well known upon this subject, and so far as I am personally concerned I have no desire to repeat them.

For the first time, however, in the history of the country this question of subsidies comes with the official recommendation of the dominant Administration politically of the country. It has heretofore been confined, so far as the recommendations for this line of policy were involved, to personal interest, and especially to ship-builders, such as the late John Roach, Mr. Cramp, of Pennsylvania, and others. The individual interests of these gentlemen were so apparent that the representations made by them and by their employed agents and lobbyists before committees of Congress had very little weight. For the first time in the history of this question subsidies are now championed by an Administration, and not only by an Administration officially, but by the restless, aggressive, and tireless ambition of the Secretary of State.

I do not say this, Mr. President, with any personal unkindness towards Mr. Blaine or with the idea of impressing any one that I am utterly opposed to his recommendations. On the contrary, I sympathize with a portion of them to the largest extent. I am as anxious as Mr. Blaine to bring back the supremacy of the United States upon the ocean as to the carrying trade. I am as anxious as Mr. Blaine to open the ports of South America to our productions, no matter from what State of this Union those productions may come. As an American citizen, able, I hope, to rise above any party consideration, I sincerely desire the extension of commerce and that our flag may again be seen in every port and upon every sea.

But this is a question of means to bring about the end which we all desire. My friend from Maine wants subsidies. I oppose them in toto. Both he and myself want greater mail facilities between this country and South America. He proposes to bring that about by a mail subsidy, and I am as much opposed to a mail subsidy as I am to the naked, bald commercial subsidy proposed in one of the bills reported.

I had occasion to say yesterday that when we come to the principle involved there is not a particle of difference between paying more for the transmission of the mails than the work is worth, and paying so much a ton for no service at all to a ship that sails upon the ocean simply because it belongs to an American citizen.

I say this, Mr. President, with the more freedom, because as this question is now presented here as to one feature of it, that of additional mail facilities and commercial communication with other countries and especially with South America, the idea originated with the Democratic Administration. I have before me the act which it will be well enough for the Secretary to read in order to show what Mr. Cleveland's Administration did and what his Secretary of State thought in regard to the measure which now comes under the name of Mr. Blaine and, I believe, is claimed by his admirers to have been his invention. Will the Secretary be kind enough to read the act I send to the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

[Public—No. 102.]

An act authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested and authorized to invite the several Governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington, in the United States, at such time as he may deem proper, in the year 1889, for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to their respective Governments some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and for considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between said countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all and secure more extensive markets for the products of each of said countries.

Sec. 2. That in forwarding the invitations to the said Governments the President of the United States shall set forth that the conference is called to consider—

First. Measures that shall tend to preserve the peace and promote the prosperity of the several American states.

Second. Measures toward the formation of an American customs union, under which the trade of the American nations with each other shall, so far as possible and profitable, be promoted.

Third. The establishment of regular and frequent communication between the ports of the several American states and the ports of each other.

Fourth. The establishment of a uniform system of customs regulations in each of the independent American states to govern the mode of importation and exportation of merchandise and port dues and charges, a uniform method of determining the classification and valuation of such merchandise in the ports of each country, and a uniform system of invoices, and the subject of the sanitation of ships and quarantine.

Fifth. The adoption of a uniform system of weights and measures and laws to protect the patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks of citizens of either country in the other, and for the extradition of criminals.

Sixth. The adoption of a common silver coin, to be issued by each Government, the same to be legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American states.

Seventh. An agreement upon and recommendation for adoption to their respective Governments of a definite plan of arbitration of all questions, disputes, and differences that may now or hereafter exist between them, to the end that all difficulties and disputes between such nations may be peaceably settled and wars prevented.

Eighth. And to consider such other subjects relating to the welfare of the several states represented as may be presented by any of said states which are hereby invited to participate in said conference.

Sec. 3. That the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be disbursed under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State, for expenses incidental to the conference.

Sec. 4. That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, ten delegates to said conference, who shall serve without compensation other than their actual necessary expenses, and the several other states participating in said conference shall be represented by as many delegates as each may elect: Provided, however, That in the disposition of questions to come before said conference no state shall be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 5. That the Secretary of State shall appoint such clerks and other assistants as shall be necessary, at a compensation to be determined by him, and provide for the daily publication by the Public Printer, in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages, of so much of the proceedings of the conference as it shall determine, and upon the conclusion of said conference shall transmit a report of the same to the Congress of the United States, together with a statement of the disbursements of the appropriation herein provided for.

Approved, May 24, 1888.

Mr. VEST. That act was approved by President Cleveland, and on July 13, 1888, the invitations for the South American States were issued from the State Department, Secretary Bayard being then the Secretary of State.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Missouri what is the date of the passage of the act?

Mr. VEST. It was approved May 24, 1888, and July 13, 1888, invitations were issued from the State Department.

As I had occasion to remark yesterday, the events immediately succeeding and which were contemporaneous with the Presidential canvass terminated the successful issue of this undertaking under Cleveland's Administration. When General Harrison was elected President, Mr. Blaine took up this matter, had delegates appointed on the part of the United States, and the Pan-American Conference, or International American Conference, as the new name now is, was the result.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that if I did not misunderstand the reading of the act the conference was required by the provisions of the act itself to be in the year 1889.

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. It fixed the time and the place.

Mr. VEST. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. President, I saw in the city of New York upon Saturday last a statement, the correctness of which I have no reason either to affirm or deny, that the Secretary of State, for whom I have great personal respect, had exhibited such solicitude in regard to this subject of subsidies both in the shape of additional mail pay and commercial subsidy as to make public the statement that he would give one year of his life for two hours upon the floor of the Senate upon this question. I am not surprised, in view of that statement and the publications which have come in a semi-official character from the Secretary of State in regard to this matter, that since our adjournment upon last evening, and in the middle of this debate Mr. Blaine has injected an argument which comes officially from his Department.

It was received from the President of the United States and read this morning, and has not yet been printed. In that communication he urges subsidies by way of an enormous mail-pay for carrying the mails when the work is not actually done. I find, referring to the report of the International American Conference, which has been called by the newspapers of the country the Pan-American Conference, and which comes with Mr. Blaine's argument, the following:

The report—

Says Mr. Blaine referring to it—states that while the present lines of steamers between the ports of the United States and the countries bordering on the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea furnish a tolerable service, an objection is found in the length of time consumed in making the voyages. At present, a letter mailed on the last of the month in St. Louis will not arrive at Colon before the 15th. It requires two days to reach New York, and then, if the steamer sails immediately, the time is reduced to twelve days; but, as the steamers sail but three times a month, it is often twenty days in making the passage. Freight requires a much longer time, in some cases thirty or thirty-five days. By the establishment of faster and more direct lines of steamers the time could be shortened at least one-third and the expense of freight transportation reduced in a corresponding degree.

I am obliged to the State Department for furnishing corroborative testimony as to the character of the mail line now established between the United States and the South American ports, which has been so prominent in urging subsidies and which has been alluded to by the Senator from Maine in his opening speech in this discussion.

It is an open secret, Mr. President, that this whole subsidy and Pan-American business originated with Mr. Thurber, the president of what is called the United States and Brazilian Steam-Ship Company. He, the president of that company, stated that he received from the Brazilian Government $105,000 subsidy, and he has urged the Government of the United States to supplement that subsidy with one of our own. I stated here yesterday, greatly to the dissatisfaction of my friend from Maine, that this was a coasting line of steamers.

Mr. FRYE. Old tubs.

Mr. VEST. And I said, as I was proceeding to remark, somewhat irreverently, that they were old tubs. I reaffirm the expression, using it relatively to the fast mail steamers of the world. I said yesterday, before this communication came to the Senate, that these steamers which now urge upon us to give them a subsidy occupy from twenty-one to twenty-four days in carrying a letter from Rio de Janeiro to the United States when the same letter could come by way of Southampton in one week's less time; in other words, that the line which received the Brazilian subsidy simply because it is a coasting line brings a letter to this country in from twenty-one to twenty-four days and asks us now to pay them money out of the taxes of the people when the same letters can be brought by way of England in one week's less time.

That fact shows the nature of subsidies and should illustrate to the Senate what is the meaning of the proposed legislation. If mail facilities be the object, why is it proposed now that subsidies should be paid to an already existing line of steamers that would not, and I assert it here to-day, receive one single cent from the Brazilian Government if they did not stop at every Brazilian port and at St. Thomas and Martinique. If we are seeking commercial intercourse with South America, would it not be sought by merchants through direct mail communication and by the fastest and swiftest steamers? But Mr. Thurber and the manager of his line, whose testimony and letter I read here yesterday, think that they are treated almost inhumanly because the Government of the United States does not pay to them a subsidy such as is paid to them by the Government of Brazil.

Mr. President, returning for a moment to the International American Conference, I hope I shall not be suspected of any hypercriticism because as an American Senator and citizen I express some solicitude as to the effect of that conference upon our South American neighbors. It has been a source of constant remark by the public men and the press of this country that the South American trade passed by our doors and went to England, and the question has been continually pressed upon the Congress of the United States by the subsidy grabbers that this furnished the real and overwhelming argument why we should put money in their pockets in order to secure this South American trade and wrest it from England.

South America seems to have been treated in this whole question as if it were a sort of negative quality, as if the people of South America were not to be consulted, as if they were a kind of uncivilized commercial accessory either to England or to the United States. When they were invited to this conference it has been done in a sort of perfunctory way in order that the splendor of our country and the civilization of our people and the magnificence of the autonomy of our Government should be exhibited to these semi-savages, as the glories of Rome were exhibited to the barbarians brought to that great capital.

Mr. President, I have before me an article from a Buenos Ayres paper which I think will dispel this illusion. I think the people who are under the impression that the South American merchants and politicians can be brought here and dazzled by our American civilization are mistaken.

I have had occasion in the last year to read with great interest a description of the city of Buenos Ayres, and I was amazed to find that in all the elements of a high civilization that city had made advancement equal to any in the United States. In their banking system, in their methods of doing business, in the number of their newspapers, in the general intelligence of their commercial community they rank favorably with any city in this country.

To show the impression that the International or Pan-American Conference has made upon them, I ask the Secretary to read a clipping from a New York paper. It is a clipping from the New York Herald, taken from a Buenos Ayres paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

The work of the late Pan-American convention has been criticised very sharply in many quarters, but it is doubtful if a more caustic and witty criticism has appeared anywhere than the one which was recently published in La Nación, of Buenos Ayres. The author of this criticism is Señor Fidel G. Pierra, a Spanish-American merchant, who has resided for some years in this country and who is at present the secretary of a society the object of which is the promotion of commercial union between the United States and the Spanish-American republics.

As secretary of this society he was brought into close contact with the delegates to the convention, and that he studied them to some purpose is proved by his incisive criticism of them and their motives.

According to Señor Pierra the Spanish-American delegates were slighted in many ways.

"Blaine's candidature for the presidency of the Congress was opposed by the Argentine delegates," he says. "They were invited to absent themselves from the final session on the plea of illness, the object being to elect Blaine unanimously, but they replied that if they did absent themselves they would ride through Washington in an open carriage and let the people see what they thought of Mr. Blaine's conduct."

The Argentine delegates took the ground that only a delegate could preside, and that Mr. Blaine's candidature was therefore irregular. While admitting that this view was correct the other delegates maintained that the rejection of Mr. Blaine would be ill-timed and discourteous.

"The United States Government," continues Señor Pierra, "utterly failed to see the importance of the convention. Blaine and his colleagues in the Government looked on it as merely an every-day gathering of traders, and thought that ordinary American business men, rich in worldly goods but in nothing else, would be well worthy of the honor of sitting beside the mediocre men who would be sent as delegates from Spanish-America. That is why Blaine was not a delegate."

"The Government soon saw that the Spanish-Americans were men of distinction, and that only two of the American delegates were of equal caliber. These two, ex-General John B. Henderson and Mr. W. H. Trescott, were rivals for the presidency, Señor M. Romero, minister from Mexico, being at the same time 'a dark horse.' Henderson is a lawyer and a good-natured fellow."

"Trescott is a man of rather curious political antecedents. He has been a lawyer and is supposed to be a publisher at present."

"The refusal of the Department of State affords him the means of living. He is now quite old and in his second childhood. As a presidential candidate he was unacceptable to his countrymen and, above all, to President Harrison."

"Minister Romero is a diplomatist of the old school and an active wire-puller. He pretends to be a linguist, and has forgotten Spanish without learning English. He pays certain journals to praise him and loves to pose as a righter of wrongs and the Mentor of the whole world."

"Of Blaine's address of welcome much has been said, though little attention would have been paid to it if any one else had delivered it."

"The trip through the country was a failure because the delegates had time neither for rest nor for a thorough inspection of anything. In charge was Mr. W. Ellery Curtis, who six years ago went to Spanish America as secretary of the traveling commission and returned with a mass of strange facts, which he dished up in his report. He also published a book about Spanish America, which contains the biggest collection of lies ever printed about that country. In this book he also calumniate many public men, some of whom were delegates at the convention. See now what an excellent tactician Blaine proved himself when he intrusted W. Ellery Curtis to accompany the delegates on their trip and to keep the accounts."

Señor Pierra next pays his compliments to the American delegates. "Ex-Senator Davis," he says, "owns about $20,000,000, and knows by heart the by-laws of the Senate. He was a brakeman for several years, which accounts for the fact that his language, while giving the delegates instruction in parliamentary procedure, was the reverse of refined."

"Mr. Studebaker is a carriage manufacturer and a man of good intentions but very limited talent. He is a rustic sample of the genius homo."

"Mr. Carnegie is a rail manufacturer and is said to be worth $30,000,000. The two books of which he is the reputed author are said by many to be the product of his money and not of his brains. As a delegate he proved himself a nonentity."

"Mr. Hanson is a manufacturer of cotton goods and an excellent man. He was as much, however, out of place at the convention as I would be commanding a navy of a hundred vessels."

"Mr. Estee is a lawyer from California and a plain man. Though not very learned, he has a fund of good common sense. Moreover, he is always in good humor and was, par excellence, the jester of the convention."

"Mr. Coolidge is also a manufacturer of cotton goods. They say he is an M. A., and certainly he may have obtained a degree from some of those American academies which sell degrees for $30 each. He is the author of a curious work about silver. At the convention he tried to play the rôle of pedagogue."

"Mr. Bliss is a rich dry-goods merchant, and is said to be very clever in his business. He believes that Spanish America is given up to revolutionists, alligators, and monkeys. He is always as grave as Jupiter Olympus. During the convention he did nothing but chew two or three cigars each session."

"Mr. Flint is a New York merchant and very energetic. He knows Spanish America thoroughly, and, though not a man of letters, was worth as much as any of his colleagues, and much more than many of them."

Mr. Pierra also pays his compliments to the delegates from Spanish America, and shows himself quite as much a master of eulogy as he is of acerbity.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to inquire, in the first place, whether the Senator knows who wrote that and, in the next place, whether it is quite fair and decorous, quite civil to foreigners and to respectable gentlemen in America, to print that mass of irresponsible blackguardism.

Mr. VEST. The name of the gentleman who wrote it is given in the communication.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, I reaffirm what I said, that the man who will speak as he does of honorable gentlemen, and will say of American colleges that degrees can be obtained for $30, is what—well, the language is a little too rough—a blackguard, but it means a man who willfully says that which is false.

Mr. VEST. That may be ascribed to his ignorance of the colleges of this country. I am not here to defend him.

Mr. HAWLEY. He is ignorant of all laws that govern the colleges of this country.

Mr. VEST. That person, whoever he is, is the secretary of a society in the city of Buenos Ayres and accompanied the delegation from the Argentine Republic to the Pan-American Conference.

Mr. HAWLEY. I regret, Mr. President, that I must leave town, but I shall leave my parting remark, that he is a liar and a blackguard.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, that is a question between that person and the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, the Senator from Missouri introduced his friend here by sending the communication to the desk to be read.

Mr. VEST. It was printed in a New York paper, extracted from a paper in Buenos Ayres.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the Senator from Missouri—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause a moment. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Missouri will not indorse what that blackguard said.

Mr. VEST. I have not indorsed it, but if the Senator will contain himself for a moment I will state my object in quoting it here. I have not indorsed it. There is nothing in that communication, however, which affects the respectability or moral standing or integrity of any of the persons mentioned in it. It is the ordinary criticism of a public assembly and of the public men connected with that assembly, and I had it read to show the impression made upon a prominent man who attended that conference in regard to the personnel of the conference and its objects.

Mr. President, as to the heated observations of the Senator from Connecticut I have nothing to say unless indirectly or directly they should be in any way applied to me, and then I should certainly reply to them in a most emphatic manner. But I insist that I have a right to quote these expressions, coming from a man occupying an official position, and who came here from the most prominent of the South American states to attend that conference, to point my argument, which is this, that, as I said yesterday, no wining and dining, no public exhibition, nothing except self-interest, will affect our commercial relations with the people of the South American states. We have assumed to a large extent that these people could be cajoled into commercial relations with us. It has been assumed by this Administration and by others that they could be brought here and carried through this country in a sort of spectacular exhibition at the public expense, and that then and by such means we could secure their trade.

I had that read as a public communication, published all over this country and in South America, to show that the men who came here from South America are amongst the keenest, shrewdest, and most far-seeing merchants in the world; that they are the men who control to-day with a grasp of iron the coffee trade; that they are to-day enlarging their cattle trade from the Argentine Republic, so that soon they will become rivals, even in the preparation of dressed meat, with the most enterprising citizens of the United States; that they understand their interests; that they intend to follow them; and that when we, by any International American Conference or by any other spectacular means, seek to draw them away from their self-interest, we are simply fooling ourselves and throwing away the money of the people.

That communication comes from a man who evidently understood exactly what were the interests of his country and for what purpose his countrymen were brought here. It comes from one who shows, whatever may be his moral nature—and I know nothing about him and care less—that he represents commercially the brain and courage and activity of a people who intend to follow their own interests; and it proves beyond question what I state here to-day, that we must make it to the interest of the South American people to trade with us, and it can not be done by subsidy. You may pour subsidies into the laps of the ship-builders and the ship-owners of this country just as long as the Treasury of the United States will furnish the money and you will not secure that trade. You will get their trade whenever you show those people it is to their interest to trade with us and not before. When Mr. Blaine, or any other public man in this country, thinks that he can blind and dazzle and cajole these people in South America by putting a line of steam-ships between here and Rio de Janeiro or Buenos Ayres he simply deceives himself most woefully.

The man who wrote that communication represents the enterprise, the ingenuity, the commercial possibility of those South American states. Every line of it shows, whatever may have been his personal opinion as to the delegates of that convention, that he was not flattered here, but saw first and last, what every man knows to be true, that commerce and commercial relations are governed by self-interest.

Now, Mr. President, what is the condition of our South American trade? They are our neighbors. They are republics. If there was anything in sentiment they have every inducement to bring their imports here in order to receive our exports in return. What is the condition of that trade to-day? I might read from Mr. Blaine another statement, but I will ask the Secretary to read the communication which I send to the desk showing the commercial relations at present existing between this country and South America.

The Secretary read as follows:

In 1858 the tonnage of American shipping was nearly three times as great as the foreign. Under the Democratic low tariff, without a dollar of subsidy, our ships had a tonnage of 3,127,000 tons to 1,308,000, the total foreign tonnage. In 1868 American tonnage was 2,625,000; foreign, 3,195,000. By 1878 the total foreign tonnage was 5,500,000 greater than the American, and by 1888 we had only 2,770,000 tons to 10,770,000 tons, foreign tonnage being four times as great as ours and exceeding it by 8,000,000 tons.

* This loss, which for the three decades represents money enough to give every one of our 60,000,000 people a comfortable start in life if it could be prorated among them in cash, is a direct result of Republican taxation, and President Harrison, with his "ugly word 'subsidy,'" has no other means than more taxation to offer as his plan of retrieving it. He advises us to tax ourselves more heavily to get back what we have lost by heavy taxation.

An examination of our trade with the countries of South and Central America shows the only means through which we can re-establish our ocean traffic.

We have no trade with those countries in articles on which Republican taxes are levied. Brazil sells us $52,000,000 worth of merchandise a year. All of this except less than $6,000,000 is in untaxed articles. From the Central American states we get only $441,000 worth of merchandise over our tariff taxes. The tariff allows us to buy but $12,000 worth of taxed articles from Venezuela. Our total trade with the most prominent South and Central American countries in all articles of import taxed by our tariff for 1887 was as follows:

Brazil.....	$5,596,708
Central America.....	441,000
Venezuela.....	12,796
United States of Colombia.....	16,594
Argentine Republic.....	782,256
Chili.....	228,897

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, with that extraordinary state of trade between this country and South America, we are told that the obstacles, whatever they may be, which have prevented propinquity and all the apparent inducements for close commercial intercourse between this country and South America can be done away with by subsidies.

In order to furnish a remedy any intelligent physician must diagnose correctly the disease and the causes that have brought about that disease. Why is it that South America to-day is commercially friendly to England and adverse to the United States?

Why is it that with similarity of political institutions, propinquity as to locality, everything that can be upon the surface seen to bring about close commercial relations, this trade goes by our doors and goes to Great Britain? We are answered by the Senator from Maine and the Secretary of State, "Want of steam-ships." I read upon yesterday a list of steam-ship lines and of the vessels regularly employed between the ports of this and other countries and South America, and that list does not include the almost innumerable tramps, vessels that go where-ever they can get a cargo, that are governed by no organized system, that are controlled only by opportunity.

No intelligent man will dare to stand here or elsewhere and say that there is not plenty of transportation between this country and South America. But, Mr. President, what public man will dare to slander his countrymen by saying that if this great trade with our neighbors in South America could be obtained by building steam-ships they would not be built by American capitalists? Who believes that with the enormous capital in this country seeking investment, when in the Eastern States and in New England it is worth from 2½ to 4 per cent., if this great trade could be secured by American merchants they would not furnish the capital to build steam-ships even at the enormous prices charged in American ship-yards?

It is not the want of transportation, and no man believes it who is not determined to believe it. The whole face of the ocean is covered with steam-ships and with sailing vessels. Read the shipping lists of the South American ports and you will find that there are vessels lying there from one week to another seeking cargoes to go anywhere, anxious to go to the United States, if opportunity is offered them. Why do they not come here? Why is it that we, owning a continent, with all its varied productions and the energies of 65,000,000 of Anglo-Saxon people in whose blood is the fire of empire, can not obtain this trade?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Was not this condition that the Senator describes in the last few words he has said practically the same condition ten years ago?

Mr. VEST. Well, possibly it was.

Mr. HALE. At that time Germany as a commercial power doing business in the American states had little or no importance, but, stimulated by the enterprise and desires of her people, accompanied by large benefactions from the imperial government, Germany since that time has come into these ports, filled them with British, French, and American shipping (not much American, but of the other nations), and has carved out for herself a large portion of the trade of those countries where it did not exist before.

Mr. VEST. Yes; and I will tell the Senator why.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator whether what was possible for German enterprise and German subsidies at that time is not possible and practicable for our enterprise and our subsidies now.

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir, it is; and if this country would do like Germany we would get our share of it, and more than our share. But you will not do like Germany. What does Germany do? Germany permits her people to buy their steam-ships where they can buy them cheapest. Germany has never been idiotic enough to say to her people, "You must build your steam-ships here, if they cost you 30 per cent. more than they do in England, and if you do not build them here you shall not have them at all." That is what you are doing; and that is the reason why you can not get the South American trade, because you will not let your people have the best and cheapest instrumentalities for obtaining it. Does the Senator want any more information? What else can he have?

Germany has pursued the very policy that I urge now and have urged for twelve years in the Senate and everywhere else. Yet the Republican party tells us, "No; build your steam-ship with Mr. Cramp, or Mr. John Roach," when he was living, "or you shall not have it. You have got to pay 30 per cent. more for it. You shall not go to England and buy it." We have the old navigation laws, sacred to us, "nicked like some saint in cathedral aisle," and you shall worship this fetish of the navigation laws, which was put upon us in 1789, and that we are not to touch now, and if we do, it is treason to commerce and enterprise.

Mr. President, it is not want of transportation. Germany has done exactly what we ought to have done. When they found for any reason, I do not care what it was, that they could not build their steam-ships at home as cheaply as they could in England, they went to England and bought them and put them under the German flag, and sailed them to South American ports, and brought them to our ports. Not only did Germany do it, but Italy has done it, and Norway, and Sweden, and even Mexico.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that, so far from Germany being dependent upon foreign nations for building her iron ships and ships that make up her merchant marine, she builds them herself, and that it is a great feature of the prosperity of Germany that instead of doing it abroad she builds them in her own docks? But she built up this trade by boldly and without question subsidizing it and starting it. Does not the Senator know that?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

Mr. HALE. It is true.

Mr. VEST. The Senator does not know it, nor does any other intelligent man know it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will look at the history—

Mr. VEST. I thank the Senator for the suggestion, and I will tell him the history of it, for I know it as well as I know my own personal history. Germany had no ships and she went to England and bought them, and commenced repair shops, not for the construction of ships, but to repair the ships that she bought on the Clyde, and after she had built up this industry through her repair shops then she commenced building.

Mr. HALE. After she got her yards, as we have got ours.

Mr. VEST. Yes, and she commenced originally by buying the vessels from Great Britain.

Mr. HALE. When she had no yards.

Mr. VEST. Exactly; and then the yards were established to repair the ships she had bought in England.

Mr. HALE. Now, I call the Senator's attention to the exact parallel to the present situation. We have got, thanks to American enterprise, the yards; we have got the skill; we have got the mechanics; we have got the capital; we have got everything that Germany has to-day, with the exception of governmental aid.

Mr. VEST. Have you not had it for years?

Mr. HALE. No, sir; we have not had it for years. The condition of the American yards to-day, so far as their power of producing ships either for the Navy or for private enterprise is concerned, is a thing with which the situation of these yards could not be compared five or ten years ago.

Mr. VEST. Germany commenced by buying her ships abroad without any subsidy.

Mr. HALE. When she had no yards in which to build them.

Mr. VEST. She established her yards without any subsidy, and lately, in the last four years, she is granting additional mail pay. That is the subsidy the Senator refers to; and I see now that one of the German lines has declined to carry out the contract made with the Government, and has declined the subsidy. France adopted the subsidy, and it has not built up her merchant marine.

Mr. HALE. The American situation to-day is precisely that of Germany, barring the Government aid given there.

Mr. VEST. No, sir; barring, to use the Senator's expression, another feature, which he will not see and does not intend to see, and that is the liberty on the part of German citizens to buy their ships where they can buy them cheapest. That is something that my friend from Maine is determined not to see and determined not to say anything about. There is the feature in which we differ from Germany. How would Germany ever have got her ship-yards as they are now if she had not originally bought her steam-ships from Great Britain? She commenced with repair shops, and to-day she is building, with English mechanics and under English plans, but with German money, steam-ships that are competing with Great Britain. I saw day before yesterday in a London paper the announcement, as a note of alarm, that unless England looked to her maritime laurels Germany would soon outstrip her upon the ocean. The Senator says we have had ship-yards.

Mr. HALE. I said we have them now.

Mr. VEST. And have them now.

Mr. HALE. Some of the finest in the world.

Mr. VEST. And we have the skill, and we have the material. Why is it we have not built these vessels? Why is it that we have not put them upon the ocean? Why is it that to-day, as the Senator's colleague [Mr. FRYE] says, the shipping trade of the United States is absolutely dead?

Mr. President, I will tell you. It is because you shut your eyes deliberately. You thought that free ships meant free trade. You were determined that your sacred idol of high protection should not be attacked even indirectly. You were determined that you would give up our shipping trade rather than have any sort of suspicion thrown upon the infallibility of the high-protective-tariff party of this country.

That is the whole of it. You did it deliberately and willfully, for in 1857 Captain John Codman—and I care not what else may be said about him, he is a man of intelligence and experience, a practical sailor—published a letter, a copy of which I have, a remarkable letter in the way of a prophecy, in which he told the people of the United States "unless you give up this policy and permit your people to buy ships where they can buy them best, you will lose your shipping trade entirely." What was the reply to him?

I was upon a joint committee of the Senate and House in 1882. The late S. S. Cox and myself were the two Democrats. We held a session in New York for a month. We examined Mr. Roach, Captain Codman, and all the ship-builders, and all the ship-owners and sailors. Codman stated then, producing this letter, just what had been his prophecy and what had been the result. And what was the reply to him, made by John Roach? "Why," he said, "you are in the employ of the English Government." The old cry, "bought with British gold." Any man who attacks the high protective system in this country is bought with British gold.

John Codman, it was said, was bought. Why, Mr. President, if the English Government had wanted to buy a man to break down the shipping trade of the United States they never would have bought John Codman, but one of the advocates of the present system, because that system has worked itself out in the destruction of the shipping trade of the United States completely and mathematically. If England had wanted to find a man to have broken it down they would have taken the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. Not bought him, you do not mean?

Mr. VEST. No; I, of course, do not mean that. Of course, I do not mean that; but I mean to say that they would have solicited him to advocate this very system which has brought us to the present condition. John Codman has fought for the shipping trade of the United States. He has begged and implored; and I honor him to-day as much as I do any man in this country for his consistency and persistency and his intellectual ability. He has fought for the system which would have built up, in my judgment, the shipping trade of the country, whereas his enemies have torn down and destroyed the maritime supremacy of the people of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. Did the Senator from Missouri hear Mr. John Codman before the Senate committee admit that, in his opinion, the United States should pay postal subsidies?

Mr. VEST. I was not present at that meeting; I was called away; but I know Captain Codman's opinions. I know that it is his judgment that this country should pay the largest amount of mail pay, and that feature of the Senator's proposed legislation here in a modified form he indorses. He goes much further than I would be willing to go possibly. His idea is that there should be additional mail facilities, and that the largest and most liberal and generous remuneration should be made to steam-ships for carrying the mails, but always to swift steamers, always to the sort of steamers that are employed to-day under the subvention system of the British Government, vessels that will run from 16 to 18 knots an hour, not these tubs, if the Senator will not object to the expression, that take twenty-four days to run from Rio de Janeiro to New York, but swift greyhounds of the ocean, as sailors call them, that carry the mails in the shortest time and in war become commerce-destroyers.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. VEST. Oh, of course.

Mr. FRYE. These "tubs" that the Senator is talking about are fine iron ships of a burden from twenty-six to twenty-nine hundred tons and can sail from 12 to 14 knots an hour. Germany in her last subsidy contract only provided that her steamers should make 10½ knots an hour.

Mr. VEST. I know that.

Mr. FRYE. Now, the ships of the Brazilian Line are running to accommodate their trade and the mail partly, very largely, of Brazil, because Brazil pays for it.

Mr. VEST. That is just what I said.

Mr. FRYE. They are to some extent running, too, to accommodate the United States mail, which does not pay and stop at several ports. The proposition under the postal-subsidy bill which I have presented here is for the establishment of a line that will reach the River Plate, running 16 knots an hour, and a 16-knot ship is one of the fastest ships in the world outside of the very few that cross the Atlantic to-day.

Mr. VEST. I think I knew all that except one single statement, and that was in regard to the speed that might be made by this South American line. I have never seen the vessels, and I judge their speed by the time they take. I repeat that they take from twenty-one to twenty-four days to bring a letter from South America that can be sent by Great Britain in a week's less time.

Mr. FRYE. Now, will the Senator pardon me once more?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Freight ships can not afford to run over from 10 to 12 knots an hour. There is no use talking about carrying freight on ships that make 16 or 20 knots. It can not be done. It is too expensive, and the freight charges would necessarily be altogether too high. What I am after in this bill, what I am contending for always, and have been for years here, is that you should have certain fast lines between great commercial countries where the mails could be carried swiftly and certainly; where the departure and arrival of the steamer could be absolutely certain; where drafts and orders could be sent and there be no uncertainty in relation to them. That is what I am striving to get between here and South America, between here and China, and Japan, and Australia. The freight ships will come in naturally, precisely as England has proceeded.

Mr. VEST. The Senator makes one admission which removes that matter from discussion. He says, what I alleged here in the first place in this debate, that this line was a Brazilian coasting line; that they were paid $105,000 a year as a subsidy by Brazil because they touch at Brazilian ports. If they did not act as coasters for the Brazilian Government they would not receive a cent. And yet that same line, through its president and general manager, are the principal advocates of subsidy now in this Capital.

Mr. Thurber is credited with having originated the Pan-American Conference with a view to a subsidy for the line now in existence. His general manager appeared here before a committee of the House. I read his testimony yesterday. The head and front of their endeavor is to put their claims upon the Government of the United States on a parity with their claims upon the Brazilian Government.

If the word "tub" be an exaggerated expression I withdraw it. I judge the character of the vessels by the time they make. If their laggard time is to be explained by the fact that they are coasters in the employ of the Brazilian Government, then they ought to confine themselves to Rio de Janeiro, and not come to Washington City and ask money from the representatives of the people of this country.

Whenever the Senator from Maine seeks to give the most generous and liberal and just mail pay to fast steamers running 14 and 16 knots an hour, I will go as far as he does, just as I went with him side by side in removing every obstacle to the cost of sailing an American vessel. I am always willing to do that, but I will never vote for this bill, because he proposes here to pay $18,000 for a 3,000-ton steam-ship from Liverpool to New York, and if it makes twenty trips a year it would receive $360,000, and if it cost $1,000,000 it would in three years pay for itself.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. She can not make over twelve trips, and an 8,000-ton ship crossing the Atlantic, being paid but one way, would receive $172,754, precisely as I stated yesterday.

Mr. VEST. Even if she makes ten trips, that is $180,000 a year, and to my unsophisticated Western imagination that is a very large amount. I do not propose to vote the money of my people, with their interests depressed as they are to-day, with cattle, corn, and wheat not bringing enough to pay the husbandmen for their culture—I do not propose to take even $180,000 and give it to a lot of capitalists for running ships where lines are already established.

If there is to be subsidy in this country, make it an even thing; subsidize the cattle-raisers, subsidize the corn-raisers and the wheat-growers, but to take their money and give it at this rate simply for carrying a few mail bags where the mail bags are already carried is a monstrosity. If I were actuated by partisan motives, I would thank the Senator from Maine for having brought this issue here at this time and in this conjuncture of public affairs for consideration.

But, Mr. President, I go on now with my argument. I have endeavored to show, and I think I have shown, that it is not the want of transportation. If my strength permitted I would go further and make it so clear that there could not be even a criticism in regard to the statement. I could read here from the testimony of Mr. Thurber and his manager, Captain Laidley, in which they denounce these tramps in terms as violent as those employed by the Senator from Maine in regard to them yesterday.

Mr. GRAY. What do they denounce them for?

Mr. VEST. They denounce them because they interfere with their trade. They denounce them because they have the impudence to carry cargoes around the world when they can make money by it. They say that all the Southern American ports are filled with tramps. I would thank God for it if they would come to this country with their cargoes. I wish there were more ocean tramps in American ports. I wish when a Missourian goes to New York with his cattle and finds that a monopoly has got possession of all the steam-ship cattle lines he could find a tramp with cattle accommodations to take his bees to England. I consider that one of the highest needs of this country to-day. It is not want of transportation that has cut off the South American trade or prevented us from acquiring it. Now what is it?

Mr. President, I alluded yesterday to this book from the State Department, published at the expense of the people of this country, which is an argument for subsidy by Mr. W. Elroy Curtis, paid for with the money of the tax-payers of the United States in order to put this system upon us. From that book I undertake to read an extract. I read the extract without turning to it in the book; it is copied from that. Mr. Curtis in this work quotes from an article that appeared in The New York Independent and indorses it in his work. I ask the attention of Senators to this if they care anything about the question. Speaking of the South American States he says:

The superiority of American goods is so great that the Manchester mills send few goods to South America that do not bear forged American trade-marks. These goods are inferior to those produced in the United States and are sold for about 8 cents a yard, while the cheapest genuine American drillings cost about 7 cents. The bogus stuff is made of pipe-clay and starch upon a very thin fabric of cotton, but the material is just as well adapted to the use of the common people as the better quality which comes from the United States and is used only by the wealthier classes.

While cotton goods constitute almost the entire wearing-apparel of the laboring people, men as well as women, and as they seldom wash their garments, the pipe-clay stuff is just as good and wears perhaps a little better than the genuine article. The merchants—complain that they are compelled to order goods from Manchester bearing this fraudulent trade-mark because the people demand that quality and also insist upon having American goods. If our mills would enter into competition with those of England in the production of this material they would find it a profitable trade.

These cottons are required by the prevailing laws of trade and the taste of the people to be of a certain length and a certain width, so as to cut with economy, as the native requires just so many yards to the piece; the price is also fixed by the unwritten law of custom, and if a merchant sells a wider piece of goods than they are accustomed to buy he can get only the same price that the narrow piece will bring. The merchants complain that they do not get their cotton from the United States as ordered. The slightest variation from the sample makes the goods unmarketable and subjects the importer to a loss.

Mr. John M. Carson follows this with an article, in which he says:

The three essentials to the establishment and successful maintenance of commerce between the two American continents are goods manufactured specially for Spanish-American countries, rapid and regular steam-ship lines, and the establishment of a credit system to meet the necessities of those new and enterprising countries.

So, Mr. President, there is something else besides the want of transportation. Our merchants have not endeavored to secure that trade. It is stated here—with how much truth I do not know—that these merchants in the South American countries want American goods, but they want them to suit their domestic trade, and they can not get them.

How different is this sort of proceeding from that which was adopted in England in order to secure the trade which they had lost with foreign countries and upon the ocean. We are asked to imitate Great Britain by giving subsidies.

Now, what did Great Britain do when she found that the vessels of the United States were taking from her supremacy upon the ocean? It was proposed immediately in the British Parliament, when the state of things was discovered, to give the people of Great Britain the liberty to buy ships where they could buy them cheapest the world over, and the same sort of howl was heard then from the ship-yards and the ship-owners that we hear now from the ship-yards in the United States. They were to be butchered by an act of Parliament, their livelihood was to be taken away from them, because the liberty was given to the people of Great Britain to buy their ships in any place where they could make money by the purchase.

Parliament passed the act in 1849, and what was the result? We were then successfully contesting with Great Britain the control of the maritime trade of the world. So soon as that iron fetter was taken off from the people of Great Britain they adapted themselves to circumstances. Parliament said to them, "Go to work, make vessels as good and as cheap as they do in the United States. We throw you upon your own resources. Do not come to the public treasury, but go to yourselves." What is the result? To-day Great Britain controls seven-twelfths of the shipping trade of the entire world, and we stand here wondering and gazing and complaining because our shipping trade has ceased to exist.

Mr. President, I should like to ask a few questions before I vote upon this bill. We are pointed to Great Britain and told to imitate her. We are pointed to Germany and told to imitate Germany by another Senator. We are told that subsidies have built up the shipping trade of those countries. If we are to imitate these countries, let us imitate them in all things and give our people the right to buy ships where they can buy them cheapest. What right have you to say that this right has not built up the shipping trade of Great Britain? What right have you to say that subsidies alone did it? I say that the liberty to buy ships where they could buy them cheapest was the cause of putting the shipping trade of Great Britain upon its feet again after it had been threatened by the fast Baltimore clippers of the United States. Why is it that you stop and say, "Oh, yes; we will give subsidies, but we will not give you liberty to buy your ships where you can buy cheapest?"

Mr. President, if I wanted party advantage I would make this issue in every township in the United States. "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad;" and they have made Harrison mad when he put this issue forward in his campaign speeches, in his inaugural address, and in his message at the beginning of this Congress, and when it is repeated again in almost monthly communications from the State Department. There is not a township outside of Maine—and I will except Maine and possibly one or two in Delaware—there is not a township in the United States where the people are not unanimous against this system. The idea of saying to an American, "You shall not take the money that you have dug out of the ground, that you made in the workshop, that you have toiled for in honest industry, and buy your ships where you please," is abhorrent to the sense of justice and to the common sense of the people of this country.

Again, Mr. President, when the United States contested with England for the supremacy of the ocean, did we have any subsidies? When we carried 80 per cent. of the commerce of this country in American bottoms what was the Government doing for the shipping trade? Were they giving a cent then to any ship-owner or ship-builder? How did we manage without pap from the Government to go on until we had outstripped absolutely our great progenitor, Great Britain? If we did it then, why can we not do it again? Have we deteriorated? Has the blood in our veins become thin and have our muscles relaxed and has our brain become enervated? If I wanted to destroy a human being, a boy commencing life, I would say to him, "Come to me when you want anything and I will give it to you." If I wanted to entail upon my child a curse that would weigh him down through life I would teach him to depend upon other people. If I wanted to emasculate and enervate a people I would teach them to depend upon their Government. Energy, independence, self-reliance, these are the great lessons of successful lives.

Mr. President, we tried subsidies in this country and what was the result? I read the history of them yesterday. We paid $4,750,000 to the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Line, and all we did was to blacken the character of American statesmen and disgust the American people. Now, we are asked to give these subsidies to lines already existing, for there is no exception in this bill. We are asked to pay them such an amount that they can afford to throw overboard their cargoes and run for the subsidy alone.

To show what subsidy brings about, at the risk of incurring the criticism of some other Senator, I want to read an article which appeared in the San Francisco Examiner a short time ago:

The San Francisco Examiner thinks that the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company will be much embarrassed by the offer of a subsidy from the Government in order to carry goods at a low rate, while it is receiving one from the Pacific railroads for not carrying them at all. But in case it could overcome this natural reluctance, asks the Examiner, would it divide the swag with the British line to which it now pays $120,000 per year for not carrying freight between New York and Colon? "When our $120,000 a year," it continues, "after passing from the Treasury through the hands of the Pacific Mail, finally landed in the safe of the Atlas Steam-Ship Company—

That is an English company—we could indulge a complacent feeling of part proprietorship in the British mercantile marine."

That is from an entirely reputable paper in the city of San Francisco, and it simply repeats what has been published time and again all over this country, that the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company has a contract with the Pacific Railroad not to carry freight between San Francisco and other points, in order to give them a monopoly of the transportation across the continent. These are the people who are here howling for subsidies. These are the people who have infested these corridors and committee-rooms for years holding up their emaciated millionaire hands and saying to us, "Give us the tax money of the people of the United States in order that we may live."

Mr. President, I would be glad to build up the shipping trade of this country. I would be glad to see the Stars and Stripes upon every ocean in the world. I pray to God that I may live to see the time when an American citizen can step, not upon the planks of a British steam-ship in sight of Trinity steeple and hear "God save the Queen" from there to Liverpool, but when he may stand upon the planks of an American vessel with our flag above him and our national anthem sounding in his ear. But I will never vote the money of this people under a vicious, false, wrong system, under any pretended or real desire to bring about the state of things which I have imagined. If we are to build up again the shipping trade of the United States it must be through the energy, independence, and self-reliance of our people, and the more we give out of the national Treasury the more we enervate, the more we teach the ship-builders and the ship-owners to look not to legitimate commerce for their gains, but to Congressional action.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am very sorry to say there is no quorum present. I should like the roll to be called.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Power,
Allen,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,
Allison,	Davis,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Bate,	Dixon,	Manderson,	Reagan,
Berry,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Morgan,	Squire,
Butler,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Carlisle,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Casey,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Payne,	Walthall,
Coke,	Hampton,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Which bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3738) to place the American merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade upon an equality with that of other nations.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the amendment?

Mr. FRYE. It is a mere formal amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 7, after the word "or" insert the words "so owned and;" so as to read:

Constructed in and wholly owned by citizens of the United States, or so owned and registered pursuant to the laws thereof, etc.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. President, it is a well known but humiliating fact that the decadence of American shipping engaged in foreign trade has been steadily progressing for thirty years, till it has declined from 2,321,674 tons in 1859 to 999,619 tons in 1889. No candid man can or will say that this collapse was caused by our great civil war and the concomitant depredations on our commerce; for, whilst there were indubitable evidences of it before that war in the progressive decline of the number of ships then being built, it has also been steadily going on at almost as rapid a rate since the conclusion of our civil strife as during its progress, the shrinkage in our tonnage engaged in foreign trade having been 35 per cent. in the decade from 1859 to 1869, whilst it was 31 per cent. from 1879 to 1889.

It is a sad and deplorable truth, a standing disgrace upon our national reputation, a distinct loss to our people of one of the most ancient and prolific sources of national and individual wealth, and the just ground of unsparing censure against those who have enforced policies which have brought about so grievous a calamity. No man is worthy of the name of an American citizen who does not deplore or who is not ready to adopt any constitutional and really effective remedies in our power which can help to remove the evil. This pitiful position of its foreign-trade shipping on the part of a country once in the van of nations has not only brought the blush of shame to the cheeks of our people, but it has naturally led our statesmen to look for its cause and its remedy.

Many men, sir, learned and experienced in the affairs of commerce and navigation, have deliberately expressed their conviction that the only effective plan of removing this decrepitude of our foreign merchant marine would be to first ascertain the causes which, each in its degree, have led to its downfall, and then earnestly and patriotically set to work to remove them. In other words, it is the part of a homely but sound wisdom to enter upon a full diagnosis of the disease before proceeding to administer the remedies. Every one knows that the decline of our ocean shipping was concurrent with the more and more increased use of iron in ship-building.

It is a familiar fact of history, open to every one in the statistics of our merchant marine away from our coasts, that its expansion continued nearly down to the late war. The coming catastrophe to that great interest had then scarcely commenced to project its shadow over the land, and no party in the troublous times then begun and for four years continued can be justly held responsible for losing sight of foreign trade in the midst of the stupendous events then transpiring in our land.

But, sir, when at the conclusion of that war our ruling statesmen found not only that our foreign-trade tonnage had diminished to the extent of hundreds of thousands, but that the retrogression was continuously going on as well in the number of tons as in their carrying capacity, not a single step did they take to foster this vital interest of the country, nor to remove one feather's weight of the heavy burdens placed by law upon the shoulders of our helpless ship-builders.

Never, till the passage of the act of June 4, 1872, did Congress even pretend to lend a helping hand to our dying ocean marine, and then what they did in the way of enactment was a mere show of aid which was of practically no benefit whatever. What was practically needed was the removal or rebate of duties upon all iron and steel, or on their products entering into the construction of ships intended for our foreign trade. That act only gave exemption or rebate from duties on iron and steel rods, bars, spikes, nails, bolts, copper, and composition metal, to be used in the construction of such vessels. But upon the more important and costly articles of beams, deck-beams, plates, angles, and all structural iron, up to this hour there remains the prohibitory duty of 114½ per cent. ad valorem, and upon anchors and chains and forgings of iron and steel the very onerous duty of from 38½ to 49½ per cent. ad valorem.

Thus, sir, unless we suppose that these duties were purposely placed so high under our tariff laws as to give to the manufacturers of these articles entering into the structure of iron and steel ships excessive and extortionate profits thereon, these tariff exactions have been necessarily, and if not necessarily then at the pleasure of the manufacturers, so oppressive as of themselves to tell with crushing effect upon all ship-building enterprises in this country intended for foreign commerce.

But, Mr. President, not only have our customs laws placed insuperable obstacles in the way of building ships for our foreign trade, but other branches of our American system of laws have severely discriminated against such enterprises on the part of our people. Before 1861 there was no tonnage tax upon our ships. As a means of raising revenues needed for the conduct of the war, such a tax was soon imposed, and was afterward raised to the high rate of 30 cents per ton, at which it remained till June 26, 1884, when it was only partially removed.

Again, sir, a great obstacle in the way of the upbuilding of our ocean marine is the fact that our system of local taxation upon shipping is so much more onerous than in Great Britain and in other foreign countries. In England a steam-ship company would be subjected to no taxation upon the value of a steam-ship and to only a moderate assessment upon the rental value of all premises occupied as offices, store-houses, or machine-shops. Beyond this would only be levied an income tax on the profits (if any) of the owners to the extent of from 1 to 2 per cent.

The English ship-owner was long ago allowed to withdraw from bond free of duty all articles subject to taxation, either under excise or tariff, required for use on board of his ship. But in this country until recently all our States, and even now all except two or three, tax ships engaged in our foreign trade, and all the other property of the owners of such ships, such as wharves, offices, machine-shops, and floating capital, to the tune of 1½ to 2½ per cent., often up to a pretty full valuation. And such ships were left until very recently to get their stores subject to all customs or excise duties.

Thus, sir, as expressed by another, "the difference in the return on the investment growing out of the difference in the fiscal systems recognized and enforced in Europe and in this country would be of itself sufficient to afford to the foreign capitalist a dividend on his stock equal to at least one-half of the ordinary rate of European interest on the capital employed." If it can be successfully contended (as I very much doubt) that Congress has no power to exempt ships engaged in foreign commerce from State and municipal taxation, which is resting upon it as a crushing burden, then, at least, let the patriotism and the self-interest of each State be appealed to and urged to remove such shackles from its vessel-owners by the just and sound argument that the continuance "of such a discrimination against our merchant marine, of itself and alone, may be sufficient to prevent its resuscitation in the face of a foreign competition exempt from similar burdens."

Another burden, sir, pressing heavily on our foreign trade is that of pilotage upon vessels coming into and going out of our seaports. The amount charged for such service by pilots, under the laws of New York and New Jersey, at our great seaport of New York, is said to aggregate the large sum of nearly $1,000,000. The charges at that port for pilot service are said to be two and a half times as much as is paid at Liverpool for like services. So inordinate are they that a leading New York merchant not long since said that he "paid as large an amount of pilotage into New York Harbor as he did to the captain of his steam-ship for sailing the vessel all the way to Cuba and back, facing all the dangers of the sea and the risk of contagion in Cuba."

Congress has most certainly the power, as our highest court has determined, to take complete jurisdiction of this subject of pilotage and to relieve our shipping engaged in foreign trade from such oppressive charges. The restoration of our shipping demands that all such excessive rates, being obstacles in the way of the deriving of any profit by our ships when engaged in the foreign trade, shall be removed.

Mr. President, our merchant marine has been subjected to many other burdens and grievances, some of which have been removed largely through the watchful care and labors of our able chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, but some of which remain, and I fear are likely to remain, not only with, but largely through, his powerful advocacy. With his views upon the subject of a high protective tariff it could not have been expected that he, following the policy of Sir Robert Peel in England in 1849, would agree to remove all restrictions upon the purchase by Americans of English-built ships, even though they can be purchased at a much less cost than that at which we can afford to build them, and even though, through the direct effect of our tariff system, we are utterly unable to build and to run our own ships.

The bill introduced into the Senate by the Senator from Maine, and now under discussion, makes as ample concession of our inability to build and run ships in our foreign trade as though that concession was made in the most explicit terms. If that can not be done our national Treasury can not possibly be injured by the admission of foreign-built ships free of duty, and no ship-building interest in the United States can be affected by such species of free trade, and no harm can be done to anybody or anything except to the nerves of those supersensitive gentlemen who are so much shocked at the use of those two little harmless words, "free trade."

Mr. President, many millions of American citizens and many thousands of our ablest statesmen, shippers, and merchants are convinced that the true remedies for the depression of our foreign merchant marine are, first, the removal of all those obstructions to our trade which I have mentioned and then the reform of our tariff system, whereby the cost of manufacturing our goods can be greatly diminished by putting raw materials on the free-list, whereby the rates of duty may be so diminished as not to give to the foreign producers any real advantage, but so as to put our home manufacturers on their mettle in the race of competition for the reduction of prices, and whereby all materials of all descriptions, in every degree of preparation, for the building of ships for the foreign trade can be had free of duty, and full-built ships themselves can be bought abroad and registered amongst our merchant marine for our foreign trade as freely as though built in our own ship-yards.

These men do not only disbelieve but they utterly repudiate the doctrine, and they will never be reconciled to the practice, which is sought to be initiated by this bill, of taxing the farmers of the East, West, and Northwest, the planters of the South and Southwest, and the working people of our broad land to the tune of many millions of dollars (which will ever be on the increase) towards enabling ship-owners to run, at a largely increased cost over similar lines owned abroad, fleets of American-built ships, which must collapse as soon as these subsidies are withdrawn, and which in the mean time will accomplish nothing appreciable (as has been the case with like expenditures in the past) towards expanding our export trade, which is the real goal towards which this lavish expenditure is expected to tend.

Mr. President, if any minor part of our tariff system stands in the way of the re-establishment of our wrecked foreign commercial marine, why should it not be swept away? Most assuredly should this be done if no one of our home industries is injured, but is rather benefited by the process, and if nothing admonishes against such a step except a sickly pride, which will not let us use the creations of British capital and skill, and a morbid prejudice against the mere semblance of free trade. But upon your own principles, sir, it is not free trade to buy abroad what you can not manufacture at home. For twenty-five years you have been impotent to construct ships in this country that could compete on the free ocean with foreign shipping.

There is not now a single ship being constructed in any American ship-yard to be thus used. If we had permitted our shipping merchants to buy British-built ships during this long period at greatly reduced cost below the prices at which we were able to construct them, we might have done much more of our own carrying trade, and by furnishing to our ship-yards a large amount of work in the way of repairing might have greatly aided in building up plants that could, with other assistance that could have been extended without hurting any interest, either national or individual, have constructed many ships for our merchant marine.

Mr. President, no nation can afford to shut its eyes to the lessons taught by the experience of other nations any more than an individual can dare to reject instruction from the example of his fellow-men. When the American people were bearing off the palm in the construction of ships in olden times, owing to their greater skill and the possession of cheaper supplies of ship timber, Great Britain, as well as other countries, did not hesitate to freely purchase our magnificent "Baltimore clippers" and "American liners" as being not only cheaper but swifter. And when Great Britain by repeated experiments, beginning back in 1838, showed that not only could steam be substituted for wind as a propelling power of ships on the ocean, but that iron could also be substituted for wood as a material for their construction; and when, through the possession of coal and iron fields in close proximity and of workmen by long training more skilled in the building of iron and steam vessels and their machinery, she also disclosed her ability to supply the world with cheaper, if not better, ships than any other nation, then were the conditions as to England and the United States exactly reversed, and all other commercial nations on the globe, except the United States, then began to purchase and have been since steadily buying their vessels for the ocean-carrying trade from Great Britain, because they saw at once that thus alone could they begin to compete with this mistress of the seas with respect to the "free trade" of the ocean. And as they are still pursuing this policy after its existence for many years, we have a right to conclude that it has commended itself to their judgment and their best interests.

And doubtless there is no one of these countries that has not, in a greater or less degree, had the same experience as Germany. When Germany began to buy her iron steam-ships of England there was not a machine-shop or a building yard for iron ships within her borders. But such establishments, first originated as a necessity for repairing the iron vessels bought abroad, soon became a nursery for the building of such ships on their own account. And, sir, they did all this without any governmental subvention at all. A proposition was made in 1881 to bestow such aid, but the reply of the Hamburg Merchants' Society is so forcible and well suited to our own circumstances that I can not refrain from giving some extracts from it: "Thus far," it says, "German commerce and navigation have been able to compete with those of other nations, and their present strong position is chiefly due to their own exertions. The Hamburg merchants are not afraid that if let alone their own development would be injured or suffer under adverse (foreign) legislation. The growth and prosperity of national trade are, before all, created by the natural talent and disposition of a people. Governmental measures, whether they consist in throwing artificial obstacles in the way of foreign competition or in direct support of the national flag, may here and there bring temporary advantages to individual enterprises, but they will never be able to permanently raise and elevate the shipping interest." How different is this manly, self-reliant manifesto from the conduct of that rodent tribe who are ever seeking to gnaw their way into the United States Treasury and there to fatten upon its redundant wealth.

In this country there are capitalists, men who are already rolling in wealth, who deem it honorable and commendable to be besieging Congress to wring taxes out of labor's toiling hands to aid them in building or buying ships in order to make a business profitable, which without Government alms, they tell us, can not even exist. Such a system is un-American, un-republican, and unjust in the highest degree.

Mr. President, this Senate bill 3738 pretentiously proposes "to place the American merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade upon an equality with that of other nations" without making the slightest effort or holding out the slightest hope that the burdens and obstructions now upon or in the way of that merchant marine, or any one of them, will be removed. We have a tariff bill now before the Senate sent to us from the House and favorably reported to us by our Finance Committee. That bill proposes to place iron or steel plates, angles, and beams, in addition to the exemptions under the act of 1872, among the articles that can be imported free of duty for use in the construction of ships for our foreign trade.

But, like the tariff bills of 1873 and 1883, it still falls so far short of the mark of affording relief that it only serves to illustrate the by no means uncommon feat of "how not to do it." Every form of structural iron, as well as anchors, chains, and iron and steel forgings, is still subjected to prohibitory rates of duty. And still, also, is an American citizen forbidden to place the American flag at the mast-head of a ship purchased abroad, and he will be lucky if, in any attempt to procure for her an American register, he is not punished by a forfeiture of vessel, tackle, and furniture. And how does this bill propose to place our ships upon an equality with those of other nations? By main strength, through the direct imposition of burdens upon the people, by robbing Peter to give to Paul. It proposes to give millions of dollars more for doing the carrying business of the country than we can easily get it done for and are now getting it done for, and after we spend these millions of dollars there is little probability, in the light of sound reason and all our former experiences, that our vessels will do any considerable portion of our carrying trade more than they now do.

Let us examine this bill, Mr. President, and see how it will work. It proposes to give every ton of our shipping trading abroad, sail or steam, 30 cents for every thousand miles it sails, either upon an outgoing or incoming voyage. Now, the average distance of foreign ports from the ports of the United States some being 1,000 and others being 2,000, 3,000, 4,000, 5,000, and more miles distant, would certainly be not less than 2,500 miles, which would make the average length of the round trip 5,000 miles. At 30 cents per ton this would give $1.50 bonus to every ton of our shipping in the foreign trade for every round trip.

Now, there are about 1,000,000 tons of our shipping engaged in the foreign trade. If we deduct from this aggregate 200,000 tons for vessels under 500 tons gross register and 100,000 tons more for such vessels as will not stand inspection, we will have left 700,000 tons of shipping, each of which would receive $1.50 for every round trip it makes, making in the whole $1,050,000 for the subsidies to be granted. If we assume an average of six trips a year, which would seem a moderate one, when we remember that a very long voyage would be equivalent in the drawing of a subsidy to many of the average of 5,000 miles, we would then have a sum total of subsidies under this bill of $6,350,000. I can not, therefore, but believe that our Commissioner of Navigation, who is an ardent subsidist, has greatly minimized his estimate of the first year's cost of this bill, which it is conceded would soon be largely increased.

To understand the practical working of this bill it is as well to note that a ship of 1,000 tons, running from New York to Liverpool and back, twice 3,250 miles, would get $1,950; one of 2,000 tons would get $3,900; one of 3,000 tons, $5,850; one of 4,000 tons, $7,800; and one of 5,000 tons, $9,750. It must be a slow steamer that can not run from New York to Liverpool and back in thirty days, allowing then six or eight days for loading and unloading. This would be twelve trips a year. If we allow for all accidents, delays, and repairs the loss of two months, she should make ten trips a year, which would enable a steamer of 5,000 tons to draw an annual subsidy of $97,500 for the round trips between New York and Liverpool.

This would be sufficient in the course of ten years, before the old ship would be worn out, to enable the owners to replace her with another just as good or better than she ever was. Thus extravagantly liberal do those who hold the keys of the people's treasury propose to be to the ship-owners and ship-builders of the country. And this bill is so constructed, Mr. President, that there is practically very little safeguard against the payment of this large subsidy to any vessel for simply sailing from port to port; for she is to get it if she has on board at the time of sailing freight to the amount of 25 per cent. of her net tonnage, either in weight or bulk.

No matter how small in value this one-fourth of a cargo may be, if it have sufficient weight or bulk, a vessel of 1,000 tons would get for sailing 1,000 miles $300, and for sailing 5,000 miles $1,500; and as you ascend in the thousands of tons the subsidy would proportionately increase. If the 25 per cent. of the cargo has any commercial value at all at the port of destination, it may as well be sand or cobblestones. It will just as well open the doors of our Treasury.

And, Mr. President, this policy of taxing the labor of the country many millions of dollars, ever to be on the increase, is asked to be deliberately adopted rather than pursue the policy of all the enlightened nations of the world, of removing all burdens pressing upon foreign commerce which are the result of unwise legislation and of admitting free ships and free materials for constructing ships, which policy would cost our people nothing, and would not, to use the language of the Hamburg merchants, tend "to paralyze individual energy, endanger the spirit of enterprise, and effect the decline, if not the ruin, of trade;" but would rather, to use the language of Daniel Webster, teach our ship-owners not to depend "upon protection and bounties," but rather "upon unwearied exertion, unshaken perseverance, and that manly and resolute spirit which relies on itself to protect itself." Such a policy would be vastly more likely to enable the American people, as it had once before done, again to take the lead in the commerce of the world.

Mr. President, the history of our foreign commerce for the last twenty-five years is full of instructive lessons, besides that of the deplorable shrinkage of our ocean marine. In 1865 our fleet of vessels in the foreign trade amounted to 1,518,350 tons, and it now consists of only 999,619 tons. In that time it has shrunk about one-third, whilst the volume of our exports and imports has swollen from $404,774,883 in value to the enormous aggregate in the last year of $1,487,533,027.

Whilst our shipping was being so greatly diminished in carrying power (even to an extent far beyond what the diminution of tonnage would indicate, because our ocean marine consists so largely of wooden vessels which are in size and speed so poorly suited to the requirements of modern commerce), all the time the sum of our exports and imports was being enlarged to three and two-thirds of its volume in 1865. And yet this immense hiatus in our shipping for the necessities of our foreign trade has been surely, promptly, and, as it would seem, automatically supplied by the fleets of other nations, so that we have heard little complaint that there was ever a cargo that wanted to come into our country that did not come or one that wanted to go out that did not go. And it would not be speaking extravagantly if I were to say that if in the course of the next ten years, and without any subsidies, our commerce were to increase to the extent of one-third more than it now is, so as to reach some $2,200,000,000, there would be an ample supply of shipping to move this immense mass with as much ease as the present volume is now carried.

Mr. President, much solicitude has been expressed for years past with respect to the more rapid extension of our commerce into the Central and South American States. The yearning for this trade has been most natural and reasonable. Our continental relations with those countries, the similarity of our institutions, and the dissimilarity of our products would all seem to indicate that the ties of an active and fruitifying interchange of commodities should still further serve to bind us together.

Heretofore the contest has chiefly been over the granting of subsidies to lines of steamers plying or intended to ply between the United States and those countries, with a view to providing better postal facilities as well as supplying increased channels of commerce. The proposition to grant such subsidies has been heretofore fought upon the ground that it has been already practically tested with no appreciable results but a corrupt waste of the public money; that such a system would, in our situation, be sure to lead to favoritism and jobbery; that we can get our mails carried to those countries just as rapidly and safely upon greatly cheaper terms, and that existing conditions show that any such plan would be ineffective in securing any extension of our commerce at all commensurate with the expenditure required.

And right here, sir, with a view of obtaining some instruction as well with regard to this bill, 3738, as with respect to the twin measure, No. 3739, which relates to our ocean mail service, it may be as well to look at some stubborn facts disclosed in the public document published by the Bureau of Statistics for the year 1889 upon the subject of our commerce and navigation, especially so far as relates to the past and present commerce between this country and the countries of Central and South America, so as to see if some instruction can not be gleaned from such facts as to the real needs of that commerce.

Few persons have any idea of the number of vessels trading between the United States and the nations south of us. During the last commercial year there were entered in the ports of the United States from those countries 2,671 vessels, whose capacity aggregated 1,794,594 tons. Of these vessels 777 belonged to the United States and 1,650 were foreign; and the excess of foreign tonnage was nearly in the same ratio. But a striking fact in this connection is that of these 2,671 entries into our ports, 1,173 of them were of vessels in ballast, showing that no cargoes could be had in the Central and South American ports from which they respectively sailed for their respective ports of destination in this country.

During the same year there were cleared from the ports of this country for the ports of Central and South America 2,144 vessels, whose capacity reached 1,246,309 tons, of which 1,180 ships were American and 964 were foreign. Of these 100 cleared in ballast. All this shows that there is no lack of vessels for this Central and South American trade, but rather that there is a scarcity of attainable cargoes for those vessels.

The volume of statistics for 1889, from which I have quoted, also teaches us, sir, another lesson on this subject. It shows us that, although we have had very high tariffs since 1862, which have been constantly made higher and higher and were expected and intended to have and doubtless have (just as the tariff bill now upon your table is framed to have) considerable effect in the diminution of imports, and hence of surely lessening the volume of our exports, yet during the decade from 1870 to 1880, with our dwarfed and crippled fleets of merchantmen aided by foreign ships, our aggregate of exports and imports increased at the rate of 56 per cent. upon a vastly larger volume of trade than we ever had before, and one, therefore, not to be expected to keep up so large a ratio of increase; whilst during the decade from 1850 to 1860, when our ocean marine was dividing with Great Britain the empire of the seas and when our commerce was younger and might have been expected to be more buoyant and progressive, our aggregate of exports and imports only increased 72 per cent.

And I desire, sir, to call the attention of the Senate to another important fact recorded in that same volume before referred to: that our imports from and exports to South America appear to sustain the same relation in 1889 to our trade with all the other grand divisions of the globe as they did in 1860. It is worthy of note, also, that although we have had for years past an almost perfect service with Europe, both as to mails and freights, running with the regularity of clockwork and with a speed like that of the winds, supplemented by all the advantages of the electric-telegraph system, and although during all that same period we have been dependent, so far as our South American trade is concerned, upon the sailing vessels of this and other countries, with the aid of a few steamers of our own and many foreign steamers chartered by us, yet our import trade from Europe only increased from 1860 to 1889 86 per cent., whilst our import trade from South America increased in the same time 164 per cent., or in almost double the ratio of increase as with Europe.

During the same period, from 1860 to 1889, our export trade to Europe increased 137 per cent., whilst our export trade to South America was 135 per cent., practically about the same ratio of increase. And now, sir, do not all of these facts conclusively demonstrate that it is not owing to the want of ships to do the carrying for us that we have not realized our full and just ambition with respect to Central and South American trade?

Mr. President, there is vastly more needed for a healthy and progressive commerce between any two countries than ships, which are only its vehicles. Ships under the impulse of heavy subsidies might sail regularly between every port in the United States and every important one in Europe, Asia, Africa, and the Americas, and still our commerce might languish. The stock phrase of the subsidists, that "commerce follows the flag," is never more than half a truth, and is very often a glittering falsehood. We might also have the best international postal facilities and still commerce might be dull and unprofitable. We might go further, and like Germany educate bright, pushing men in all the phases of our own internal economies, as well as of those of other countries with which it is most desirable for our commerce to be extended, and then send them abroad to bring to the notice of the peoples of those countries our wish and ability to supply their needs. We might also, as we do not with one-half the proper industry and zeal, having been too content with the "home market," study the needs of our trade with each foreign country and adapt the character of our products to those needs, as well in the style as in the packing of them for such foreign market.

The South Americans complain of us very much with reference to the sizes of the packages in which many of our goods are exported. The Japanese also tell us that we do not adapt our products of light cotton goods to the tastes and needs of their people; whereas England is enabled to engross a large trade with them, a considerable share of which our people might with enterprise and diligence secure. We might also adopt the recommendation of the Pan-American Congress and charter an international bank, to compete with and break down all private bankers in our country engaged in international exchanges.

But, sir, all these things might be done and still they would do but little more for our commerce than to act as oil to its machinery. As every man's common sense must tell him, for a great and healthful commerce between any two countries to exist the products of each must be wanted by the other and there must be between them a mutual ability to buy or exchange as freely and as cheaply as with any other country producing like commodities. As every intelligent man is taught by his every-day observation, people will buy of those to whom they can sell.

But there is this fixed and sure limit to this rule, that just as soon as the seller finds out that he can buy from some one else what he wants more cheaply than of the man to whom he sells, just so soon will he divert his buying to that market where he can buy cheapest. These are the inexorable laws of trade, for they are founded upon that regard to self-interest which is a fixed principle of human nature. To suppose that any country will disregard these laws is a degree of folly which would be only exceeded by the actual disregard of them by any people.

Take the case of our commerce with Great Britain during the last year. We imported from that country last year goods to the value of $178,269,067 and we exported to her products to the amount of $379,990,131. Those imports consisted mostly of goods manufactured by English capital and skill at a lower rate than we could produce them under our high protective tariff. No one is so simple as to believe that if we could have obtained like goods manufactured by French or German capital and skill at a sensibly cheaper rate we would not have gone to France or Germany for them.

No American importing merchant would dwell a moment upon the question whether his purchase from France or Germany would tend to lessen our exports to Great Britain. His only consideration would be whether he would supply his customers with equally as good an article at an appreciably smaller price. No one is so unsophisticated as to believe that the English importer of our cotton, breadstuffs, provisions, and petroleum, of which our exports to that country mainly consist, would hesitate for a moment to buy those commodities in any market where he could buy them of equally good quality and at cheaper rates, especially in view of our high tariff wall, which we have raised to so lofty a height with a special design to exclude the products of his country from ours.

The English people have done and are doing much to obtain such necessary supplies from other countries than ours, in order to extend their markets for their manufactured goods in just such proportion as our policy excludes them. The advantage we have so far is that such supplies can not as yet, if ever within many years, be adequately provided for them in other quarters of the globe. There is no sentiment in the whole of the $558,259,198 of our exchanges with Great Britain, unless it be of retaliation, by action either governmental or inspired by her Government, for unfriendly legislation, as they regard it, against their interests. All else is the play of the self-interest of the individual importers, looking to the purchase of the cheapest goods of equal quality, with a view to the increase of their own profits.

And, sir, if we look to our trade with any of the South American states we will distinctly see the operation of the same laws of trade. Take Brazil. We imported during the last year from this country commodities to the value of $60,403,804 and exported to it only $9,351,081 of our products, leaving the enormous balance against us of $51,052,723. The tables are utterly reversed with respect to Great Britain and Brazil. With Great Britain our exports exceed imports about $200,000,000. With Brazil our imports exceed exports $51,000,000.

Great Britain needs vast quantities of provisions and raw materials for her manufactures, which she either can not obtain from other countries or can not find elsewhere of as excellent quality and for as low prices. We need and must have certain articles of food which have become indispensable to our people and certain other articles as bases for our manufactures. These articles are produced in large quantities in Brazil, of qualities suited to our needs and at prices to which we can not except. Hence we import from Brazil coffee to the value of $44,891,739, and crude India rubber and gutta percha to the value $7,569,005, and skins worth $2,232,091, making about eleven-twelfths of our whole large imports from that country. Sugar makes up nearly all the balance.

We want these commodities and must have them or radically change our economic system and cripple important industries. It will not do for the dominant party in this country to put high duties on India rubber, gutta percha, and hides, for if they do England, Germany, and France will completely capture the important industries of which they form the groundwork. Nor will it answer to place a duty upon an article of such universal use as coffee, because it would create discontent among the people who have so long been accustomed to its free use and would bring too large an inflow into the Treasury to suit the aims of our controlling statesmen with respect to their tariff adjustments. Hence, these commodities are admitted free, and will so continue to be, unless duties shall be placed upon them in obedience to the demands of the Blaine school, in order to flagellate the Brazilians into the partial reception of the abomination of free trade.

And, sir, when we come to examine the elements composing the pitiful sum of our exports to Brazil, which is only a little over $9,000,000—little over the one-seventh of our imports—we find but a small percentage of that amount the prices of which are at all dependent on our tariff system. Of the $9,000,000 worth of exports, provisions and grain made more than one-half and railroad cars and locomotives, cheap cotton fabrics, illuminating oils, and lumber made up $2,448,240 more, and the balance of our exports to Brazil, being the beggarly amount of a little over $1,500,000, is largely made up of other articles which are not protected by our tariff, leaving but a trifling amount which has any direct connection with that system.

And thus we see, sir, that the Brazilians sell to us what we need and must have of them and buy of us what they can obtain from us suited to their wants and at prices equal to or less than like articles can be obtained elsewhere. There is no sense nor probability in the supposition that whilst we are purchasing $60,403,804 worth of products from Brazil she would not buy more than $9,000,000 worth of our products if we had such as suited her in quality and price. The same vessels that bring her immense volume of products to us could just as easily carry ours to her ports.

It is as plain as the noonday sun that we do not have them; and hence Brazil has to turn away to England, France, and Germany and purchase $50,000,000 worth of goods which we stupidly say we could sell to her if we had lines of steam-ships running to her coasts. Upon no other rational hypothesis can you account for the fact that whilst we import largely more of the products of Brazil than Great Britain does, yet we export so trifling an amount of our goods to that country, whilst Great Britain engrosses five or six times as much of the Brazilian import trade as we do.

Thus, it is no wonder that we have continually to be drawing drafts upon London for the excess of our exports to Great Britain in order to pay for the excess of our imports from Brazil. And so it will ever be, until we apply some other remedies for this evil than the bestowing of alms upon ship-owners for the carrying of commodities from shore to shore. It is necessary for us to learn the first lesson on this subject, that before you can have commerce between any two countries you must have products in each which the other needs and can buy as cheaply as in any other country.

And now, sir, if we turn for a moment to our commerce with the Argentine Republic we will find that, although the balance of trade is in our favor as against that country, yet the same laws of trade prevail there as with our trade with Great Britain and Brazil. We import from that Republic commodities to the value of $5,454,618 and export to her products to the value of $8,376,077, leaving a balance in our favor of $2,921,459.

By far the larger part of our importations are skins, which are wisely made duty free because they are the basis of our immense leather industries. Of our exports to that country there are agricultural implements to the value of $1,069,320 and carriages, railroad cars, cheap cotton goods, telegraph, telephone, and electrical instruments, sewing-machines, locomotives, illuminating oils, lumber, timber, and products of wood, patent medicines, clocks and watches, canned fish and oysters, lubricating oils, lard and meat products, and tobacco to the value of $6,471,913.

Of this list, and many minor articles which might be added, the articles can not be properly claimed to be of that description whose prices are affected by our customs duties, and our people can supply them to the Argentines as cheaply as any other country, or in fact more so. It also appears that a very small amount of articles so affected in price were exported to the Argentine Republic. It is also manifest that in the case of this Republic no difficulty was found in obtaining vessels to convey much more of our products to its people than were needed to bring back the return cargoes, inasmuch as our tariff rates would allow but very little of their main export—wool—to be introduced into our country.

And so if you will analyze our trade with any other South American country, or in truth with any other nation on the globe, of any commercial importance, you will find, sir, that, as with the countries already instanced, we import from them just such articles as we need for food, for raw materials for our industries, or for the comfort of our people, because we can buy them of that country at the cheapest rates, and can obtain them of a quality best suited to our needs. And you will also find that we export to foreign countries but little besides the products of our fields, or of our forests, or of our waters, or of those industries which have but little or no connection or dependence upon our tariff system. Before, then, we reach the discussion of the effects upon our international trade of our economic system, which has been persisted in for so many years, we have abundant warning that it is utterly at war with the freedom of commerce.

And now, Mr. President, it surpasses my comprehension how the statesmen of the Republican party can expect anything else than that the great bulk of the immense volume of their manufactured products which are dependent upon the tariff should be outlawed in the commerce of the world. I am not going to discuss the tariff except very briefly in its bearings alone upon international commerce. All questions as to whether the tariff is the prolific source of unnumbered blessings to the operatives of this country, as contrasted with similar workmen of other lands, or whether it diffuses its blessings, like the dews of heaven, alike upon the rich and poor, are utterly irrelevant to this discussion.

The simple question is whether the tariff promotes or retards foreign commerce. In truth, the question comes a little nearer home to the manufacturers than even this statement presents it. This great movement towards subsidizing ships has its mainspring out of the manufacturing interests of the country. If the tariff system has not as yet, after thirty years of free swing in this country, provided any large addition to the exports of the country, which is the main object our subsidists profess to have in view, but has, on the other hand, greatly checked imports, the tax-payers of the land have the right to know upon what principle of justice and right, to say nothing of so trifling a subject as constitutional law, our manufacturing friends can now ask for tens of millions, nay, in the long run, hundreds of millions of subsidies for shipping when there is so little prospect, judging from our past experience, of accomplishing their professed object; and when those tax-payers have, in the last thirty years, lavished upon these manufacturing industries thousands of millions of dollars to place them in a healthy and vigorous condition, hoping some day to be relieved from their importunate and unappeasable demands.

When the people of this country have, at great cost, set these men up in business, they are very naturally a little shocked at being called on to foot the bills for carrying their wares to a foreign market for them. Such a stretch in the art of begging is rather beyond human experience or toleration.

And, sir, our American people have a right to know whether after all this additional money is spent to transport these manufactured goods to a foreign market, our highly protected friends, who are lustily crying for more protection as well on sea as land, can sell their wares after they get them beyond the seas.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the whole warp and woof of the argument in favor of high protection, in every single fiber of it, demonstrates the absurdity of the claim that our manufacturing friends can begin to compete with other nations with any approach to equality of prices as to the great bulk of their products. Our Republican friends never tire of dinning it into our ears that we must have more and more of protection to enable our manufacturers to sell their wares in our home market in competition with foreign-made goods.

For thirty years they have been making the welkin ring with this cry, and under the McKinley lead they are at it yet. The cry ever is, and is now, that they must have more protection in order to be able to pay higher wages to their operatives than is paid abroad. Grant this proposition—and it can not be supposed that the grave Senators from Iowa, Ohio, and Rhode Island would make a grossly misleading statement in order to trepan our people into submission to heavy taxation—then we may take it for granted that the manufacturers of this country pay largely higher wages to their operatives in this country than are paid in Europe for similar labor, as does every other employer of labor in the land to unprotected as well as protected labor.

If we put this increased cost of labor at 50 per cent., though it is claimed to be more, how, it may be asked, can we, upon this basis, produce our goods as cheaply as the Englishman, Frenchman, or German? We may be able in some few lines of production, such as the cheaper cotton goods, to lessen the cost of production by improved processes, the greater skill and dexterity of our workmen, and the possession of the raw material, so as to be able to sell as cheaply as the foreigner does; but such a rule is by no means of wide application.

We may be able in some specific kinds of products of metals, by the style and finish of some of them and by their peculiar adaptation to the needs or tastes of some foreign people, to effect sales in competition with the foreigner, but the instances are rare and do not involve any very extensivesales. In the great bulk of iron and steel products, of woolen products and cotton products, and other commodities which live under the protectingegis of our tariff system, and which, without such protection, we are assured would literally die, we do not and we can not compete in the world's market.

Thus it is that in the seven or eight hundred millions of our exports the contributions of our protected manufacturers have cut so pitiful a figure and will continue to do so in the future. Not only do our manufacturers labor under this great disadvantage as to the cost of labor, but with a most wonderful degree of fatuousness, whilst thus burdened, they further handicap themselves with highly taxed raw materials, whilst all the other manufacturing nations are exploring the world for free and cheap bases of their products.

Mr. President, to bring this argument to a summary conclusion, when the subsidists who are clamoring for immense donations to ship builders and owners, in order thus to increase the exports of our protected manufactured products, can explain to us how it would be possible for a manufacturer of any given article, living on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Ninth street, who gives more than 50 per cent. greater wages and more than 25 per cent. larger prices for his materials than a rival in his trade who lives on the corner of that avenue and Tenth street, not to be driven and kept out of the market of the city of Washington by that rival, then we will be able to understand how it is possible for American highly protected manufacturers to compete in the open markets of the world with the English, French, and German people.

And, Mr. President, not only has this system of extreme protection largely retarded the expansion of our foreign commerce and kept it practically at the same volume for the last eleven years, but we have now reached the singular crisis where at the same moment, and equally urged by many of the same men, there are two bills lying on your Secretary's desk, one demanding large increases of tariff duties with the avowed purpose of checking importations, and thereby so far crippling commerce, and the other seeking to pour out large sums of money, mainly contributed by the toilers of the land, in order to stimulate commerce and thus build up our ocean marine. Such increases in the tariff will more fully secure them in their possession of the home market; but it will with equal certainty tend to exclude us from the markets of the world. For not only has this economic system rendered it next to impossible to export to any large extent our protected manufactured products to other countries, but, most naturally, it has grievously reacted upon the farmers of our country. Every one knows how it has constrained Great Britain to loan or to lay out hundreds of millions of money to open up new sources of supply of breadstuffs and meat products in Russia, India, Australia, New Zealand, and also in the Argentine Republic. And silently and surely, in Chili and the Argentine Republic, because they must supply themselves with breadstuffs which we will not exchange with them for their wool, copper, and copper ore, the people of those two countries are embarking with great success in the raising of wheat.

A few years ago scarcely any wheat was raised in South America, and the people of that great division of the earth were almost entirely dependent on us for their supplies of wheat and flour. But in 1888 Chili and the Argentines raised nearly 30,000,000 bushels of wheat; and, though we have not received returns of the last crop, from the fact that we know they made large preparations for it we may rest assured, if no disaster befell it, there was a large increase in its product.

Thus, sir, not only our manufacturers, but also our agriculturists, are being walled in by our extreme protective system from the benefits of foreign markets, whilst the home market is becoming constantly more and more inadequate to their relief. The difference between these two great classes is, however, that the manufacturers have a great and powerful protection in the laws of the land, which it seems they can get altered for their benefit by the mere asking for it, whilst the farmers can obtain no protection from the law except that which, like the apples of Sodom, will turn to ashes on their lips. They are outside of all protection but such as nature and nature's God can give them. Unfortunately, they are liable to all the hardship and injustice which human law, inspired by selfishness, can impose upon them.

But, Mr. President, it is to the example of Great Britain that we are pointed in every speech made and in every article of every journal devoted to the subsidists' cause, as the just and righteous rule of our conduct in this respect. Why do not these people love to speak of and show some disposition to follow Great Britain's example in buying our ships when we had them to sell and it was to her interest to place our ships under her flag? Why do they not laud that country's wise example in encouraging her manufacturers to purchase all their raw materials free of duty? Why do they not point with approval to the example of all Christendom in buying and sailing under their flags English-built ships, because then alone could they at once compete with that great commercial power in the commerce of the world, and at the same time lay the foundations of the building of iron and steel ships at home?

In pointing to such examples they would be pointing to undoubted historic truths and to practical results. But in holding up to us the example of Great Britain as having built up her merchant marine by subsidies, and then her vast trade by her merchant marine, they are parading imaginations as facts. Great Britain has for hundreds of years possessed an immense trade. Before we existed as a nation she had colonies in all parts of the world, of which our country was one. On every continent and on the islands of every sea she had her possessions, with which it was a political, a commercial, and a military necessity to keep up a close connection by postal, naval, and all other available means.

Just as we have to keep up our intercourse with our outlying territories and even far-off Alaska, so Great Britain had to keep up her postal connection with her possessions in all quarters of the globe. At first this was done by the use of her naval vessels, but it was soon found that a cheaper and swifter service could be obtained by giving contracts to the lowest bidders among merchantmen. And this she is now doing.

Mr. President, England must be a commercial nation or she sinks into insignificance. She has no vast armies of farmers and planters who furnish her with the great mass of her materials for foreign trade. She has carefully and watchfully done everything possible to increase her trade. When her trade with any country became, or was likely to become, a matter of sufficient importance she never hesitated to establish postal relations with that country, almost always in connection with her mail line to some outlying dependency, and always by receiving bids in the open market from among her many shipping merchants. If she had not done so this pioneer in the postal service of the world could have had no communication either with her political or commercial dependencies.

At first, upon the establishment of her steam lines, they were naturally much more costly than they now are. Her whole postal service, including that in Great Britain and that throughout the world, and including all so-called subsidies, is not only self-supporting, but, unlike ours, yields a surplus of several millions of pounds. And England, unlike ourselves, whilst thus encouraging her postal service, adopts every means to promote her foreign commerce that a wise and watchful statesmanship can devise. She removes all hindrance and trammels from her manufactures and all her products, so as to be able to have the freest possible trade with the world.

England, then, of all the nations of the globe, is the vastest storehouse of supplies which the world needs and which she can sell more cheaply than any other nation. For thirty years our legislators have sat intent upon securing for the one-twentieth of our people the home market for their high-priced manufactures. All the while England has been intent upon building ships and upon securing the markets of the world. She now has the best ships and at the lowest possible prices, and the immensely varied products of her industry, with which it is impossible for us to compete under our system.

We tie our own hands and load down our own backs and then impotently whine because we have not our proportion of the carrying trade or of the commerce of the world. And, without untying a single knot in the coil which we have wound around our limbs or shaking off a single pound of the load we have placed on our shoulders, we are rushing forward to lavishly pour out money from our Treasury to enable men to build and run ships, which, when built and run, will not reduce the price of freights 1 cent per ton in the thousand miles, and will be able to find but little more of the materials of commerce than are now obtainable by our vessels. We will not even listen to men skillful and experienced in the art of ship-building, who ask for no subsidies, but merely beg the poor privilege of being relieved in their business of one of the burdens of your tariff system.

The country, sir, was startled a few weeks ago by an announcement coming from the able superintendent of those gigantic works being established at Steelton, on the Patapsco, that if you would give his company free iron-ore, such as is peculiarly fitted for making that kind of steel best adapted to the construction of ships, they would, through processes made possible by their magnificent plant, be able to build for you ships that would be able to compete on equal terms as to cost with those built on the Clyde. But so riveted are our controlling statesmen in their narrow and hide-bound policy that this cry for relief, accompanied by no idle promise of permanent aid to our ship-building interests, might as well have been made to the wild Indians of our plains as to men who bow down so reverently before the fetich of ultraprotection.

Mr. President, in all our discussion of this subject we should remember that Great Britain subsidizes, that is, really gives compensation to the lowest bidder, to only about 2 per cent. of her steam ocean marine. Such is the statement derived from her own official documents, and it is presumably correct. The whole of her immense fleets of merchant ships beyond this small contingent have not, and never had, any direct governmental aid whatever. And still Great Britain has no difficulty in coping with France on the high seas, although France has purchased many English-built ships at the lowest cost and has low and highly skilled labor with the cheapest attainable materials in her own ship-yards, and although France gives a tonnage subsidy to her shipping, such as is proposed to be given to our ships in the bill now under consideration.

French ships have the same subsidies that we propose to give ours, and, besides, immense advantages in the cost of ships, and also conceded in the cost of running them, and in exemption from the many local burdens to which our ships are subject. English ships are nevertheless able to compete with French ships and hold their own. All this amounts to a demonstration that, handicapped as we are, these subsidies which we propose to give will be impotent to accomplish their purpose. And it is as well to recollect before we embark upon this sea of subsidies that Great Britain has behind her an immense reserve force.

As yet she only subsidizes the one-fiftieth part of her ocean marine for the carrying of her mails. So burdened are these mail steamers by conditions as to methods of construction, times of sailing and arrival, and forfeiture for failures to comply with their contracts, that the great mass of the ship-owners not thus fettered boast that they can make as much profit as the subsidized mail lines, and often more. But it will be at once seen that when England discerns any evidence that her maritime supremacy is failing through the artificial stimulants applied by other nations to resuscitate their marines, she has only to resort to the same method of subsidizing her whole ocean marine, which she has really as yet not begun.

And it must be remembered that her postal service now brings into her treasury a surplus of $15,000,000 per annum, which she holds as a reserve fund with which to begin this battle of the protection of shipping on the ocean. And when the war is opened we may rest assured it will be one of endless and ruinous expenditure, in which we will be always at a disadvantage and will always be compelled to go more than "one better." The very first and sure effect of the proposed law would be to multiply ships which already exist in sufficient numbers for the commerce of the world, and thus to lower freights and superinduce the necessity of still more largely increased subsidies.

But, sir, I do not for a moment believe that, with the self-imposed trammels with which we are begirt, we can, through this law, do anything appreciable towards enlarging our commerce or carrying trade or towards restoring our merchant marine to its former dignity and prosperity. We have virtually built a wall around us, which keeps us from the seas. Let us make a few breaches in that wall by giving our ship-builders the freest materials for building ships and our ship-owners the freest privilege of buying their ships, until we can build them, where they can buy them cheapest, in imitation of all the wisest and most enterprising nations of the globe in all ages; and let us remove all the old burdens under which our commerce and carrying trade rest as the result of unwise and antiquated legislation; and then if all these advantages, supplemented by the revival of all our old pluck, energy, skill, and self-reliance, do not serve to revive our shipping interests, it will be time enough to consider whether it is expedient, and whether we have the power, to tax the people of this country to enable one man to pursue his calling at the expense of another. In the mean time if we are made to depend upon this system of subsidies provided in this bill 3738, I fear we will at best have some figure-heads in commerce, and but little else, to delight our tourists abroad by the vision of the American flag flying at the mast-head of an American ship.

GROSS AMOUNT OF APPROPRIATIONS OF FIRST SESSION, FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to offer at this time a resolution for immediate consideration, merely calling for an inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PADDOCK in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate, as soon as may be, a statement of the gross amounts proposed to be appropriated in the several appropriation bills of this session, and appropriated in the appropriation acts already passed at this session of Congress, and also the gross amounts proposed to be paid from the Treasury in other public bills and acts of this session so far as the same can be conveniently ascertained.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the resolution, but I will say to the Senate and the Senator who offered it that I think by Monday morning we can make answer to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Vermont.

The resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10716) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1891, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 14, 17, 18, and 19. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "two," and in line 22, page 1 of the bill, strike out "two" and insert in lieu thereof "three," and in line 23, same page, strike out "three thousand two" and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,300;" and the Senate agree to the same.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 3738 is open to amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the Senate is in a condition to transact this kind of business any longer this evening.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There do not seem to be a great many people here.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are so many that I think—

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me that I may move an executive session?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum here.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can try it on that motion. There is evidently no quorum present.

Mr. BLAIR. Would the Senator from Vermont be willing that we should have a short executive session?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should, if we had a quorum.

Mr. BLAIR. We can ascertain that in executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. Is a motion to adjourn in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is always in order.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 7, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 3, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House joint resolution No. 169.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I object.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that when the election bill is reprinted as passed by the House it be reprinted with the marginal notes, as I find that many members desire those retained in the print of the bill which they propose to send out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. ROGERS. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its present consideration by the House.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives House bill No. 5974.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask my friend to withdraw that request.

Mr. MILLS. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, on the motion to adopt the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the report of the committee of conference was partially read, and I ask now that the statement of the House conferees be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the conference report be dispensed with and that the statement of the House conferees be now read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] demands the regular order. The conference report will be read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the conference report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3711) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 24, 38, 39, 47, 52, 56, 60, 64, 66, 68, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 92, 98, 97, 98, 101, 103, 113, 115, 116, 123, 124, 125, 128, 134, 135, 138, 149, 153, 156, 163, and 164.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 6, 11, 15, 18, 20, 22, 27, 33, 35, 37, 43, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 54, 55, 57, 58, 59, 67, 69, 70, 72, 73, 74, 75, 83, 84, 85, 93, 94, 95, 100, 102, 104, 105, 108, 110, 111, 112, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 127, 130, 131, 132, 133, 136, 137, 140, 141, 142, 143, 145, 147, 151, 152, 153, 154, 157, 159, 160, and 161, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$43,077;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a board consisting of three persons, one of whom shall be an army engineer skilled in electrical matters, one a civil engineer of known skill and experience in municipal engineering, and one an expert electrician of high repute; Provided, That not more than one member shall be a resident of the District of Columbia, and no member shall be in the employ of any electrical company, or shall have any interest in the business or securities of such company, or be interested in any patent for any form of conduit or subway or device pertaining thereto. The said board shall consider the location, arrangement, and operation of electric wires in the District of Columbia, whether used or to be used for electric lighting, transmission of power, telegraphy, telephony, or signaling, with a view to securing, as soon as practicable, the construction of a safe and convenient system of conduits or subways, the placing therein of all necessary electric wires along the streets, avenues, and other public spaces, and the removal of all unused overhead wires and their supports. To this end, the board will, as soon as practicable, and not later than December 1, 1901, report to the President, who shall submit the same to the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, as follows:

"First. Recommendations for a complete system of conduits or subways, with all suitable branches, connections, and appurtenances for the safe and efficient operation therein of the necessary cables and conductors. Such recommendations shall be accompanied by maps, detailed drawings, and estimates of cost.

"Second. Opinion as to whether the conduits or subways should be built, owned, and operated by private corporations or individuals, subject to public control, or constructed and maintained by public authority and leased to companies or individuals. If the latter, recommendation will be made as to the terms and conditions upon which such leases should be executed.

"Third. Also recommendations concerning the construction, location, operation, and maintenance of underground cables and conductors carrying currents of different intensities, with a view to promote the public safety, and to secure the most convenient and efficient use of such cables and conductors and the appliances connected therewith.

"Fourth. Recommendations as to the restrictions, if any, which should be imposed by law upon the character and intensity of electric currents conveyed by conductors, situated over or under the public streets, avenues, and spaces, and used for electric lighting, transmission of power, telegraphy, telephony, or signaling.

"Fifth. Recommendations respecting the regulation of the arrangement and use of authorized overhead wires.

"To meet the expenses of the said board there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; Provided, That the officer detailed from the Corps of Engineers shall not receive any salary except that due to his rank."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 139: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the words "to be" in line 5 of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "An addition to the present burial-grounds of the Washington Asylum;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "For Association for Works of Mercy, for maintenance and repairs, $2,000, and to complete purchase of lot, $6,042; in all, $8,042."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 158: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That for the purpose of securing a more equitable and efficient expenditure of the several sums appropriated 'for charities,' there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, some thoroughly experienced and otherwise suitable person, not a resident of the District of Columbia, to be designated Superintendent of Charities for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to formulate, for the purposes of the expenditures for charities in said District, such a system or plan of organized charities for said District as will by means of consolidation, combination, or other direction, in his judgment, best secure the objects contemplated by the several institutions and associations for which such appropriations are made, and for the other charitable work of the District, with the least interference each with the other, or misapplication of effort or expenditure, and without duplication of charitable work or expenditure; and all such appropriations shall be expended for the purposes indicated, under the general direction of said superintendent and in conformity, as near as may be, with such system or plan subject to the approval of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia. And it shall also be the duty of said superintendent to examine into the character of the administration of said institutions and associations, and the condition, sufficiency, and needs of the buildings occupied for such charitable purposes, and also to ascertain in each case the amount contributed from private sources for support and construction, the number of paid employees, and the number of inmates received and benefited by the sums appropriated by Congress, and to recommend such changes and modifications therein as in his judgment will best secure economy, efficiency, and the highest attainable results in the administration of charities in the District of Columbia. And said superintendent shall from time to time report in detail to the commissioners of the District, who shall communicate the same with their estimates for appropriation to the then next session of Congress, his doings hereunder, together with such estimates and recommendations for the future as in his judgment will best promote the charitable work of the District. Said superintendent shall be entitled to a compensation at the rate of $3,000 a year, which sum is hereby appropriated for this purpose for the fiscal year 1891. And all estimates submitted hereunder shall be included in the regular annual Book of Estimates."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 162: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amended paragraph insert the following:

"Sixty-two thousand dollars, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for engineers and firemen, fuel, material for high service, in Washington and Georgetown, pipe distribution to high and low surface, including public hydrants, fire plugs, material and labor, repairing and laying new mains and lowering mains, for the fiscal year 1890, which unexpended balance is hereby reappropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following amendment:

"Sec. 3. That any street-railroad company in the District of Columbia authorized to run cars drawn by horses which has changed or may change its motive power on any of its lines now constructed to cable or electricity, or change its rails in accordance with the provisions of law, shall have the right to issue and sell, at the market price thereof, stock of said company to an amount necessary to cover the cost of making said changes, the cost of said changes, and the amount of said stock sold, together with the price per share, to be fully set forth under the oath of the president of said company and filed with the commissioners of the District. And any company availing itself of the privilege herein granted shall within eighteen months wholly dispense with horses as motive power on all portions of its line, and substitute therefor the power provided for in the act making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, approved March 2, 1889, or pneumatic or other modern motive power which shall be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia; but nothing in this act shall in any wise authorize the use of overhead appliances: Provided, That if any such company operating a line or lines of street railroad from Georgetown or West Washington to and beyond the Capitol grounds shall fail to substitute for horse-power the power herein provided for on all of its lines within two years from the date of this act, such company shall forfeit its corporate franchises."

Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 371) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended on said amendments in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendments 1, 2, and 3: Fixes the amount payable to the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, in order to make the salary equal to $3,000 per annum, and strikes out proposed increase of one clerk at $800 in the executive office.

On amendments 4 and 5: Appropriates $6,000 for the contingent expenses of the engineer department, including forage, livery of horses, etc.

On amendment 6: Appropriates $150 to pay the register of wills for preparing papers in connection with the appointment of guardians to enable indigent boys to enlist in the navy.

On amendment 7: Appropriates $3,000 to enable the assessor to prepare and complete within the fiscal year 1891 a book showing existing arrears of taxes on real property.

On amendments 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13: Strikes out the proposition on the part of the Senate to create the office of deputy collector of taxes at $2,000 per annum.

On amendment 14: Appropriates $2,000 for expenses in the collection of overdue personal taxes. Instead of $1,500 as proposed by the House and $3,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 15: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On amendments 16, 17, 18, and 19: Appropriates $900 instead of $700 as proposed by the House and $1,000 as proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous expenses in the coroner's office, and authorizes the purchase of ice for use in the morgue.

On amendment 20: Strikes out proposed authority for the employment of overseers and other employees temporarily required in connection with the water department.

On amendment 21: Appropriates $165,000 for permit work, instead of $130,000 as proposed by the House and $200,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 22: Appropriates $50,000 for paving and curbing of the roadway of any street in the District of Columbia ordered by the commissioners upon payment in advance by the owners of abutting property of one-half of the cost of said work.

On amendments 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28: Appropriates $352,300 for sundry streets and avenues in the District instead of $600,000 as proposed by the House and $749,200 as proposed by the Senate, said sum being allotted as follows:

Georgetown schedule, $60,000.
Southwest section schedule, $75,000.
Northwest section schedule, $250,000.
Southeast section schedule, $121,500.
Northeast section schedule, $136,700.

On amendment 29: Authorizes the commissioners to pay not exceeding $2.25 per square yard for paving streets where, by reason of heavy traffic, poor foundation, or other causes, a pavement of more than ordinary strength is required.

On amendment 30: Appropriates $23,000 for grading streets, alleys, and roads, instead of $15,000 as proposed by the House and $25,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 31: Appropriates $120,000 for repairs to pavements, instead of $100,000 as proposed by the House and $150,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 32: Appropriates $7,000 for surveys of the District, with the requirement that $3,000 thereof shall be expended in establishing and marking points of reference for the extension of streets and avenues throughout the District.

On amendment 33: Appropriates $3,000 for gauging sewers and rainfall, instead of $2,000 as proposed by the House.

On amendment 34: Appropriates $10,000, instead of $15,000 as proposed by the Senate, for condemnation of rights of way for public sewers.

On amendment 35: Appropriates $2,500 for the construction of a brick shed for storing and testing cements.

On amendment 122: In lieu of the provision contained in the bill as it passed the House, authorizing the commissioners, under certain conditions, to permit telegraph, telephone, or electric-light companies to lay wires under any street, alley, highway, footway, or sidewalk in the District, which was stricken out by the Senate, the following is inserted:

"The President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a board consisting of three persons, one of whom shall be an army engineer, skilled in electrical matters, one a civil engineer of known skill and experience in municipal engineering, and one an expert electrician of high repute: Provided, That not more than one member shall be a resident of the District of Columbia; and no member shall be in the employ of any electrical company or shall have any interest in the business or securities of such company, or be interested in any patent for any form of conduit or subway, or device pertaining thereto. The said board shall consider the location, arrangement, and operation of electric wires in the District of Columbia, whether used or to be used for electric lighting, transmission of power, telegraphy, telephony, or signaling, with a view to securing, as soon as practicable, the construction of a safe and convenient system of conduits or subways, the placing therein of all necessary electric wires along the streets, avenues, and other public spaces, and the removal of all unused overhead wires and their supports. To this end the board will, as soon as practicable, and not later than December 1, 1891, report to the President, who shall submit the same to the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, as follows:

"First. Recommendations for a complete system of conduits or subways, with all suitable branches, connections, and appurtenances for the safe and efficient operation therein of the necessary cables and conductors; such recommendations shall be accompanied by maps, detailed drawings, and estimates of cost.

"Second. Opinion as to whether the conduits or subways should be built, owned, and operated by private corporations or individuals, subject to public control, or constructed and maintained by public authority and leased to companies or individuals. If the latter, recommendation will be made as to the terms and conditions upon which such leases should be executed.

"Third. Also recommendations concerning the construction, location, operation, and maintenance of underground cables and conductors carrying currents of different intensities, with a view to promote the public safety and to secure the most convenient and efficient use of such cables and conductors and the appliances connected therewith.

"Fourth. Recommendations as to the restrictions, if any, which should be imposed by law upon the character and intensity of electric currents conveyed by conductors situated over or under the public streets, avenues, and spaces and used for electric lighting, transmission of power, telegraphy, telephony, or signaling.

"Fifth. Recommendations respecting the regulation of the arrangement and use of authorized overhead wires.

"To meet the expenses of said board there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the officer detailed from the Corps of Engineers shall not receive any salary except that due to his rank."

On amendments 123, 124, and 125: Strikes out proposed increase of sanitary inspectors in the health department from six to seven, and of clerks at $1,000 from one to two.
